A NOBLE LAD.

A poor boy, whose name no one knows, but we hope that it is in the Book of Life, found three little children who, like himself, had been washed ashore from one of the many wrecks, wandering along the dreary coast in the driving sleet. They were crying bitterly, having been parted from their parents, and not knowing whether they were drowned or saved.

The poor lad took them to a sheltered spot, plucked moss for them, and made them a rude but soft bed; and then, taking off his own jacket to cover them, sat by them all the night long, soothing their terror till they fell asleep.

In the morning, leaving them still asleep, he went in search of the parents, and to his great joy met them looking for their children, whom they had given up for dead. He directed them where to find them, and then went on himself to find some place of shelter and refreshment.

But when the parents were returning with their recovered little ones, they found their brave preserver lying

The long exposure in his exhausted state was too much quite dead upon the snow, not far from where they parted from him, for his little strength, and having saved his little charges —a stranger to them as they to him—he lay down to die.

A sad story is this, and one that moves our hearts. How much more should our hearts be moved by the story of Him who freely gave His life that he might save us from eternal death.—The Domestic Journal.

TEMPERANCE.

THE DRAGON'S COUNCIL HALL.

A TEMPERANCE ALLEGORY.

Behold his Satanic Majesty in cabinet council assembled with his minions and his emissaries, newly returned from this sin-stricken earth. Each brings the latest news concerning the endless conflict between darkness and light; ignorance and wisdom; sin and righteousness. Each gives the most carefully considered suggestions for the building up of Satan's kingdom—for the multiplication of murders, robberies, outrages and conflagrations. "Permit the suggestion, your Majesty," says one brimstone-colored satellite, "that you will build a new distillery at Spiritsville, for at that point the church people are growing rapidly in power."

"Not at all," tartly replies he of the horns and hoofs; "well you know better than to be always showing your hand in that fashion!

"Do this instead:

"Put it into the heart of John Barleycorn, proprietor of the distillery I have already there to subscribe ten thousand dollars toward finishing that church."

The order was entered in lurid letters on the book. Emissary No. 2 proceeded to report.

"In Temperanceville, they have so few saloons that the young men are rapidly getting out from under the sway, and I humbly suggest the imperative necessity of a special order on the Stygian manufactory for six well instructed and experienced imps, who shall put it into the heads of six men now engaged in other business, to open these saloons, as business is so lively at Cincinnati and Peoria, that we can spare none of our already enlisted forces."

"Tut, tut!" roared the devil, "I can beat that device, with only half trying. Send a beer-drinking pastor to Temperanceville, and let him preach in favor of the Business Men's Moderation Society and show up the idiotic theories of those stiff-necked teetotalers."

Number 3 now ventured to suggest that in Tippleton, the women had opened a Sunday afternoon meeting and had given out that they should offer a free lunch at the polls on the approaching election day. He therefore asked for a detailed escort of fiends who should be commanded to set fire to the temperance reading rooms and drive the president of the W. C. T. Union raving distracted.

"You are a callow young limb of perdition to go so clumsily about your business," roared the devil; "I won't send a special squad, for they are all employed in the saloons working up the voting lists against the next election, in the interests of the whisky governor, but do you go and put it into the head of Deacon Setbones to prove to that W. C. T. U. president that the scriptures do plainly teach that it's a sin and shame for a woman to speak in any public place, and that the whole spirit of Christianity is set against the insane notion of a woman's undertaking to preside at an electioneering lunch down at the polls."

And now came the last, the most lugubrious-looking messenger, with this doleful story to relate:

"I ask that pestilence and famine be let loose, for I am terribly alarmed for the stability of the kingdom in the province, of which Chicago (otherwise Beeropolis) is the chief city; for be it known unto your Majesty there is a serious revolt among those whom thou hast kept in strict subordination, lo! these centuries; for the women are rousing themselves to the cry of 'home protection;' studying into the structure of the government; tracing back to their source the temptations that have so admirably succeeded in capturing boys and men for thy great armies. These frightful women, neglecting their proper sphere and the submission so long their convenient characteristic, have actually dared to publish figures showing that the majority of voters are on thy side and that thus thou dost hold thyself in power by keeping thine ambassador, King Alcohol, entrenched among the people."

Here the fiendish messenger turned a sickly yellow and gasped with rage as he concluded his awful revelation in these words:

"They even ask—and many ministers, church editors and other strong allies of Him whom thou didst tempt and crucify are asking for them—the power to vote upon all questions relating to the sale of alcoholic drinks."

Oh, what a scene that was! The devil quaked in every limb; his sharp knees smote together, and a howl of hellish hate and rage rang through the sulphurous air of the dark council chamber.

"Away with you, fools that you are! Talk of letting loose famine and pestilence! If things have reached this pass—if the women have discovered that the side always wins which has most votes—let me make haste.—I'll send no stupid, clumsy-footed subaltern in an emergency like this! I'll steal in among those timid and silly rebels, who have always hated me and sought the triumph of him who wore the thorn-crown, and from a thousand pulpits I'll declare that woman leaves her home on this vile errand at the peril of society; that you cannot carry temperance, much less the Gospel, into politics; and that on the day when woman votes, the home will fall in everlasting ruin, and woman turn herself into a Jezebel." Exeunt omnes. —Miss F. E. Willard in the Signal.

STRIKES—THEIR CAUSE AND CURE.

We regard as fundamental the proposition that "wages are to be paid out of the product of present industry, and not out of the saved results of the industry of the past, and consequently that production furnishes the true measure of wages, and, furthermore, the more important proposition that the employer cannot pay in wages more than he fairly expects to get back in the price of his products." In the mind of the man who depends upon his daily wages, these propositions formulate themselves somewhat in this wise: "Wages are paid me from the product of my toil. I cannot be paid more than the margin between cost of raw material and selling price. My actual wages are decreased or increased as the prices of commodities are higher or lower." Upon the basis of these truths our capitalists have generally acted. As a rule the employer is the friend and not the enemy of the employee. And hence the unwisdom and injustice of these strikes. They are an abnormal growth from an evil root. They are to business what a revolution is to the state. They are evil, and only evil, and that continually. The strikers are making war upon their friends, and not their enemies. A strike does not increase but diminishes the margin of the employer—out of which their wages come. A strike reacts with double force upon the laborer, and his family. A strike is what Carlisle calls, "The sooty hell of hate and savagery." The strike is the weapon of force, and "who overcomes by force hath overcome but half his foe." The strikers, in their zeal to be freed from this injustice have mistaken an imaginary cause for the real one. And hence their efforts in that direction always have and always will prove abortive.

The difficulty is, the cost of living has advanced too rapidly. It is unreasonable. And that is controlled by forces that are outside of and beyond the reach of the employer. Wright admits that "short crops partly and speculation in food products chiefly have driven the prices of the necessaries of life to very high figures." These speculators keep the food of our table up at fictitious prices and the burden of their folly falls upon the poor laboring man. That is the tap-root of this evil. And until the government lifts the ax of the law and cuts it off, its sour fruit will be the laboring man's portion. It is the dry rot on our industries, and so long as it is suffered to remain these social convulsions will recur, Why should a man who calls himself a "bear" be allowed to enter the market and sell stock or products which he does not own? Why should another who calls himself a "bull" be allowed to enter the same market and buy "stock" which never had and never can have an existence? Why should the "bear" be permitted to decry the "stock" that he may get the difference between the ruling and the stipulated price at the time appointed? And why should the "bull" be permitted to bring a pressure to bear upon the market that will enhance the price of "stock" that he may have the margin? It is simply a wager. It is gambling on a large scale. And the fruits of their folly the laboring man must eat at his table. Why should a moneyed man like Gould be allowed to enter the Chicago market and buy up all the wheat at seventy-five cents per bushel. Then under pressure of scarcity force the price up to one dollar and fifty cents per bushel, when he will flood the market and reap a fortune. That is engrossing commodities to enhance the price. They call it "making a corner." But it is robbery on a gigantic scale. And what is worse, it is robbing the poor man. The laborer gets no more wages after Gould's operation than he did before, but his flour costs twice as much. The poor man suffers and thinking it is his employer's fault, strikes for higher wages, when the truth is, stock gambling caused it. Should not this iniquity be arrested? If a poor man steals from the rich fifty dollars, the government puts him in the penitentiary. But if a rich man steals five millions from the poor, under the guise of options, he is pronounced a shrewd man of affairs. In New York in the three last years 244,000,000 bushels of wheat have been sold and 1,154,000,000 in options, more than the last three crops in the United States. This is an iniquity to be punished by the judges. It is a sore evil under the sun. And so long as the government remains derelict in its duty here, this evil must remain upon the poor laboring man's shoulders.

But in the meantime it is asked, Can the relation of employer and employed not be adjusted? We answer, There are three possible ways of solving that difficulty.

1. By drafting a code of laws which will regulate and harmonize every relation of each to the other. Political economists have attempted this, and with some measure of success. These "trades unions" have attempted it. But their proposals are so biased and one-sided that there is no possible hope of a solution here. Moreover they are so tainted with the socialistic spirit, and so nearly allied in principles and aims with Nihilism in Russia, Communism in France, and Socialism in Germany that no permanent good can possibly come from them. And we are free to say that so long as the human mind remains darkened by sin and the human heart depraved, there can be no permanent reformation from this source. While it remains true that "to err is human" no hard and fast line can be drawn between labor and capital, defining the sphere of each, and saying to each, "thus far shalt thou come and no farther."

2. By destroying the relation altogether. In this view there is no such thing as employer and employed, but each sustains both relations. This is the principle upon which co-operative societies are based.

3. By writing the law of Christianity upon the minds of both employer and employed, and infusing the spirit of Christianity into their hearts. Here the rich and poor meet together. Christianity is intended to regulate man in every possible sphere of life. The principles and spirit of Christ guide man as husband and father, as wife and mother, as son and daughter, as brother and sister, as ruler and citizen, as pastor and member of the church, as master and servant, as employer and employed. Christianity does not destroy these relations but elevates, purifies and perfects them. Labor cannot exist without capital and capital cannot exist without labor.

"While the working classes are dependent, directly or indirectly upon the rich for employment, and so for livlihood the rich are just as dependent on them, not only for the revenues that enrich them, but for soldiers and sailors to defend them and their country in time of war. Their wealth is absolutely at the mercy of foreign invaders, or of lawless and ungovernable mobs, springing, as it were, out of the ground at their very doors, unless the working classes rally to their defence."—Dr. Blakie.

They are mutual helpers and defenders. God has joined them together and man may not put them asunder. The voice of Christianity is, "Labor all its rights, capital all its rights, equal and exact justice for all." The spirit of Christianity softens these relations so that their is no joining or discord. Under this influence a new sense of responsibility will arise in the miud of the employer. His factory or foundry, or store is a kind of corporation of which he is the head. He will look upon himself as God's steward, and the men in his employ as a trust committed to him. He will feel that he is answerable to God for the use he makes of his opportunities to better their condition and elevate them in morality and virtue. The same sense of responsibility will arise in the mind of the employed. He will no longer regard it a crime to be rich, and a disgrace to be poor. He will feel that his employer's interests are his interests, and in serving them he is serving God. He will feel that a willing, honest and efficient service is a duty to God. He will feel under obligation to live temperately, denying himself the lusts of the flesh, not only for the sake of his family, his reputation and the honor of the religion which he professes, but that he may render the best possible service in the highest use of his faculties. He will no longer be a time server. He will act conscientiously and faithfully, not with eye service, as men pleasers, but as to the Lord, doing the will of the great taskmaster.—Rev. J. M. Foster in Christian Statesman.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

MISSISSIPPI POLITICS.

Judge T. C. Lyon of Columbus, Miss., was nominated last fall as an independent candidate for Congress. His views of the situation and what is needed to render the political affairs of Mississippi of more use to the citizens of the State are carefully written out and are a valuable opinion for all Southern readers. He says:

There is a feeling, too, amongst us, I think, that the juncture is reached for a new departure in Mississippi politics; a new alignment upon the true principles of free government; for refreshing our patriotism, and for a higher political purpose and endeavor; for a re-assertion of the teachings and practices of the fathers; a renewal of individual participation in affairs of State; to exalt once more our time-honored free speech, free press, and free ballot; to practice tolerance; and to enter effective protest against machine rule, together with the ways and means in common use by the managers to set at naught the will of the many and to carry out the will of the few. Especially do the people begin to see that a healthy condition of the body politic, if not the exercise of individual liberty itself, necessitates the being of two political parties in the State alive with the principles of genuine democratic and republican government. That one party unopposed, as the present outlook illustrates, means oligarchy—the rule of the few—which militates against all the rights and duties of a free citizenship, and tends to despotism.

There is, moreover, in the black counties, particularly, an abiding hopelessness of the old situation being able, now or in the future, to settle the race issue, hanging, ever darkening, over our prosperity as a people. A demonstration of long, depressing years is before the country, showing clearly that the old alignment can reach no solution of this momentous question. The new one proposed, it is reasonable to think, can, and in such wise that intelligence and virtue may rule, and yet every class enjoy the equal rights guaranteed by the constitutions and laws of the land. Nor need we fear. By experience is wisdom. The powerless black race is compelled to look, as matters stand, to the justice of the white race for full establishment in his citizen rights, and not to a revival of the old carpet-bag methods. The appeal in this behalf by the new movement, is, therefore, not to him, but to the white man for him; nor is it the white man the black man hates, and fears, and avoids, politically, but the Democratic party! Another party, opposed by the Democratic party, can reach his confidence, and so, protect, elevate, and direct him, as is meet! Over against this encouraging hope our Democracy of to-day offers nothing better than or beyond the present position, with which neither race is satisfied, nor the country, nor the right, nor can be. The new movement says reverse the old plan; go to him; he will not come to you!

We conclude, therefore, that the questions of nearest interest to us, at least as Mississippians of the First District, are Popular Rights and Popular Government; two active political parties, law and order in elections, settlement of the Race Issue, and an honest proclamation to the country of a new era in Mississippi, by a change of political power; putting Mississippi abreast of progress, by the adoption and development of national and progressive ideas—a promise of new life and hope from within, and of immigration and capital from without; whilst, lastly, the great moral, social and political question of Temperance Reform, with its mighty wave, even now breaks over our borders, echoing, in both reason and conscience, its demand for society's increased protection from drunkenness, whisky-sorrow, whisky-crime and whisky-death.

THE LABOR PARTY.

A leader of this party (Mr. Blissert), on being questioned as to the probability of his party making terms with any of the other parties, said:

"We want nothing but a straight Labor ticket, and we will sink or swim by it. The 'grand old Republican party met at Saratoga. The following ticket was nominated: For Governor, Charles J. Folger, lawyer; for Lieutenant-Governor, B. Platt Carpenter, lawyer; for Judge of the Court of Appeals, Charles Andrews, lawyer; for Congressman-at-large, A. B. Hepburn, lawyer. The 'grand old Democratic party' met at Syracuse on the following day and nominated the following candidates: For Governor, Grover Cleveland, lawyer; for Lieutenant-Governor, David B Hill, lawyer; for Judge of the Court of Appeals, Charles J. Ruger, lawyer; for Congressman-at-large, Henry Slocum, lawyer and railroad president. Look at the list. Not a a workingman or the friend of a workingman, can be found on it. From top to bottom it is lawyers, lawyers."

There is food for reflection in Mr. Blissert's statement concerning the monopoly of legislative and executive functions in this State by lawyers; and it is much the same in the Federal Government. This is a very bad state of things, seeing that lawyers, from their very education, are special pleaders. They are also accustomed to take fees, and these may be so administered, without any appearance of bribery, by persons having private interests to serve, as to effect their allegiance to the public.

We by no means object to lawyers indiscriminately. A proportion of good lawyers is very necessary both in legislative and executive business. But there is moderation in all things. As it is, they are the ruling caste among us, just about as much as the Brahmins are in India. We should have many more farmers, merchants and workingmen in State and National legislatures.—N. Y. Witness.

—A Washington special dated Jan. 28, draws a singular conclusion from an announcement made in one of the churches of that city. It says: "The intimate relations of church and state here were well illustrated in the Congregational church this morning. Dr. Rankin, the pastor has been called to Cleveland. He told his congregation this morning that he had no announcement to make to them, but he wanted to call their attention once more to their church debt. In the providence of God, for all national chastening came only in the providence of God, there might be great changes in the near future which would reduce the congregation one-third, and if the debt were not paid within two years there might be great difficulty about paying it. What he meant was, the Democrats were liable to make a clean sweep in 1885, and if they did the Congregational church would be depleted."

—Joseph Cook gave a vigorous lecture on "The Spoils System," in the Brooklyn Academy of Music lately, in which he held Aaron Burr responsible for the system, and declared that "he was the first tyrant who introduced secrecy in politics." The new bill is a good one, but it affects only 30,000 out of 110,000 office holders. Had Mr. Cook been aware that Aaron Burr was a Free mason, he would have been able to make a stronger indictment.

THE CHURCHES.

—Bro. W. L. Ferris, of the Chicago Theological Seminary, has a call from the Streator, Ill., church which he is considering favorably.

—Rev. Dr. John Hall, of the Fifth Ave. Presbyterian church, New York, has sent a check for $50 for the Quarter Centennial fund of the United Presbyterian church in a letter full of sympathy.

—Messrs Moody and Sankey began a series of meetings in Dublin, Ireland, the last Sabbath in December. It is eight years since their previous labors there. They have lately been at Brighton, the fashionable watering-place of England, where they were preceded by Lady Hope, who is proving a very efficient aid to the evangelists in all departments of their work.

—Rev. A. P. Graves and wife, the evangelists, have just begun a series of hopeful meetiugs in the Baptist church of Bloomington, Ill.

—Revival meetings conducted by Chaplain George A. Crawford on board the "Richmond," of the United States Navy, now stationed at Japan, have resulted in a number of conversions.

—The Sabbath morning collections in the First Presbyteriau Church of Chicago, Rev. Dr. Barrows, pastor, for the last year, amouuted to $16,500, an average of $318 for each Sabbath.

—The Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago, of which Rev. S. J. McPherson has receutly become the pastor, celebrated the opening of the new year by the payment of the last cent of an indebtedness amounting to $37,500. The subscriptions ranged from $10,000 down.

—Rev. Mr. Merensky, the German missionary, who has been twenty-two years in south Africa, declares that a south African confederacy under the British flag is the only safeguard against anarchy. He advises Germans to emigrate there.

—One of the Chickasaw Indians proposed to the American Bible Society to pay half the cost of supplying the school childreu of his tribe with New Testaments if the society would pay the other half. The Bible Society accepted the offer, and forwarded him a box of 500 New Testaments, which he is now distributing.

—In Milwaukee a new Lutheran church was recently dedicated in which a rather remarkable congregation worships. The members represent uo less than seven nationalities, consisting of Norwegians, Swedes, Icelanders, Germans, Danes, Scotch, and Americans. The pastor preaches Norwegian in the morning and English in the eveuing.

—Shortly after midnight, January 1, while watch-meeting services were being held in the Reformed Evangelical church, Reading, Pa., a large cannon filled with stones and powder was discharged. The front wall was stove in and nearly all the wiudow panes shattered. Great excitement was caused, but fortunately no one was hurt. Eight arrests have been made, and warrants are out for the apprehensiou of several other persons.

—Sir Charles Trevelyan says that the conversion of India to Christianity will take place in a different way from that geuerally anticipated. When the absorption of Christian truth has gone far enough, he says native opinion will declare itself, and "a nation will be born in a day."

—Bishop Whipple, when on a recent visitation to the Indian department of his missiouary diocese, administered the communion to two hundred and forty-seven Chippewa Indians. Fifteen years ago there was scarcely one communicant among them. There is one full-blooded Indian priest and seven deacons in the church mission to the Chippewa or Ojibway Indians in Minnesota. There are eight churches in Chippewa Missiou. One just being built will cost $10,000.

—The new hall which was opened by the Salvation Army at Paris, on Nov. 2, has been closed by order of the Perfect of the Seine, in consequence of the scenes which took place there between the "Army" and the infidels. The McAll meeting close by has also been disturbed, but the authorities have not interfered in that case, seeing that no provocation was given for any disturbance.

—At a late meetiug in London, General Booth, the leader of the Salvation Army, made the surprising state ment that the offerings for sustaining the operations of the Army amounted to $600,000 per annum. He strongly advised the local corps to purchase a Londou theater, which had beeu offered to them; "for by doing so," he said, "they would be killing two birds with one stone. This would shut the devil out, and let God in."

—According to the London Tablet (Romish) there are only two societies of the Romish Church in Great Britain engaged in supporting missions amongst Mohammedans and Pagaus, and their receipts yearly amount to only £6,722, while the Protestant churches have seventy-three organizations for the support of foreign missions, and contributing annually £1,102,178.

—Bro. H. M. Bissell, missionary at Guadalajara, in the district of Jalisco, Mexico, in a private letter speaks of some of the iuventions by which priests continue to hold their power over the popular mind. "Fast days," he writes, "are scrupulously observed by closing of business; not so the Sabbath."

—After some interesting and favorable correspondence with intelligent Armenians in business in the East, with returned missionaries and others, among them directors of the American Board, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, some weeks ago laid before the College Church at Wheaton the matter of rendering stated assistance to Bro. G. H. Filian, a member of the church and native of Antioch, Syria, who is expecting to return in April to his native land as an independent missionary. As it was thought that other churches in the vicinity would be interested in the work an invitation has beeu sent calling a meeting for consultation and prayer in the College Chapel on Wednesday of this week. Some of the young men from Armenia now atteuding the College are among its best students.

—Secretary Stoddard and Bro. J. M. Feemster of the Cynosure office visited the Norwegian Lutheran church on Indiana St., Chicago on Sabbath evening and pastor Torgerson who had attended three funerals beside preaching in the morniug gladly invited Bro. Stoddard to preach. He is engaged in an interesting revival work and needs assistance. The lodge is also pushing him hard and has seized upon some members of the church.

—Bishop McNamara, of the Independent Catholic Church, held open air meetings on the public streets of Chicago ou the Sabbath, preaching from an open carriage and wearing the vestments he used to say mass in when a Romau Catholic priest. Large crowds listened to him.

—The Salvation Army were holding a meeting in Alleghany City, Pa., on Sabbath and were beset by a crowd. Thirty-two of the disturbers were arrested promptly.

A REFORM GOSPEL AND ITS EFFECTS.

WAYNE, Iowa, Jan. 18th, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Elder Rathbun re-visited this place on Dec. 26th, accompanied by his estimable wife. They were invited to hold meetings in the Congregational church; preached a pure gospel, placing Freemasonry and other secret orders in the same catalogue with all other sins, as an abomination in the sight of God. The meetings were participated in by six or seven different denominations. The result is twenty-seven conversions and the building up of an anti-secret sentiment that no amount of lodge influence will be able to overcome. Brother R. had appointed meetings at Richland, thirty miles west of here for the 12th and 13th, but the railway being blocked with snow, he was detained here until the 15th. I am glad that we have lecturers in the field, both East and West, that go forth in the name Israel's God and battle for the truth.

J. A. LAIRD.

A REAL GIFT OF TONGUES.

Miss Reade, a lady missionary, who was so largely blest amoug the heathen and Mussulman women of Puurooty, in Southern India, had long been teaching in the Tamil language; but feeling it important that the Mussulmen women, who were daily assembled at the Mission House, should be spoken to in Hindustani—the tounge to which they were most accustomed—she asked the Lord for the gift; and her own expression is, that "the power came to her as a gift from God." One month she was unable to do more than put two or three seutences together; while the next month she was able to preach and pray without waiting for a word. Those who heard her could only say with herself, "It was a gift from above."

When Miss Reade began to preach openly in Hindustani, one man who, during the famine, had been saved from starvation through her instrumentality, lost all control over himself, called to her to stop speaking, and asked her "where she had got all those words?" One result of the knowledge of this language was the discovery of a custom kept carefully secret by Mussulmans, but showing that they believe that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin." In time of great trouble and sorrow, when dreading the death of a favorite child, it is their custom secretly to sacrifice a lamb, and cry, "Allah, take the life of this lamb for the life of my child!" The flesh of the lamb is then carefully removed and given to religious beggars, and the skeleton buried without breakiug a bone. The discovery of this ceremony has been a great help in speaking to Mussulmans about the vicarious sin-offering of the Lamb of God.—(London) Christian Herald.

COMING OUT OF ROME.

J. F. McNamee, pastor of the Reformed Catholic church of Brooklyn, reviews, in an interesting letter to the N. Y. Witness, the work of the year in his mission:

"The year 1882 will be a year long to be remembered by the Reformed Catholics of Brooklyn on accouut of how God has blessed and prospered this church during its course. We look back over the old year with no small feeling of joy and thanksgiving for the many rich blessings and favors bestowed upon honest, earnest effort. We enter upon another year's work with renewed strength and energy, believing that the Lord will bless our efforts still more towards reclaiming our Roman Catholic brethren from an erroneous system of religion. Thank God, we have already commeuced the year well towards that object.

Last Sunday evening, after preaching to a crowded house of Roman Catholics and Protestants, one man, O'Brieu by name, arose and before the large audience renounced Romanism, speaking somewhat in detail of the doctrines of the confessional and transubstantiation, which doctrines first led him to serious thought and research. Immediately after this brother's testimony a young man arose and said: 'I have been a Roman Catholic student for the priesthood. I have been attending these services for some time. I renounce the doctrines of the Church of Rome, and desire to become a member of this church next Sunday morning.'

After the same service a lady came to me and said: 'I have been coming to this church and listening to your preaching for some time. I was a Roman Catholic when I first came here, a few weeks ago. I am not a Roman Catholic any longer. I desire to become a member of your church.' Another young lady has been attending our services for some time unknown to her parents, who are strict Irish Roman Catholics. She has become convinced that the church in which she was brought up is fraught with error. She told me she has lost all faith in said church, and would become a member of the Reformed Catholic church, but she fears by so doing her father would have her confined in the House of the Good Shepherd. I told this dear girl that since her heart was all right it mattered uot so much about her being an enrolled member of our church.

There are many others at the present time anxiously inquiring, and I do not hesitate to say that were it not for dread of persecution a greater number of Roman Catholics in this neighborhood would sever their connection with the Church of Rome and come out into the liberty of the Gospel. However, I believe that the day is not far distant when a great breaking away will take place by those who realize that the yoke of the Gospel is easier carried than the yoke of the pope."

A revival of religion has been for some time going on in the M. E. church at Kilgore, Ohio, during which the only saloon-keeper in the place was convicted, poured out his whiskey and the next day was converted.

OBITUARY.

Rev. J. T. Allaman of the United Brethren church sends us word that his foster mother, SYLVIA A. BARTHOLOMEW, died at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, January 3, 1883, born in the town of Addison, Vermont, March 8, 1813. The penciling of the letter is faint, but we can see enough to learn that this sister was the wife of our good friend Jason Bartholomew, whose strong sense, firm decision and earnest piety have so comforted the readers of the Cynosure in the early days of the reform.

She emigrated to Linn county, Iowa, in 1840, and became "mother in Israel" to all ministers in those days when the cabin could comfortably lodge more than the large brick house which rose on its foundations. Christ's weary ones must now find shelter and refreshment elsewhere, for "Mother Bartholomew" has gone where they "hunger no more, neither thirst any more," where the weary ones are at rest; and where the many "cups of cold water" given by her to Christ's disciples, were all written down before, and now meet their full reward.

For our good brother, her husband, let us congratulate him that heaven is become nearer, dearer, and more real to him, since she is there who "Trod the rough path of the world by his side;" and Christ, who "tempereth the wind to the shorn lamb," and who "stayeth his rough wind in the day of his east wind," so that the two shall not blow on our heads at once, will surely "send him another comforter" which is the Holy Ghost, that he may "abide with him forever."

JOEL SEGER, another pilgrim, has fallen. He was born in Rutland county, Vermont, was married to Miss Hannah Muzzy in 1822. In 1840 they turned to the Lord with all their heart and all they had was placed on the altar. They joined the then poor, few and despised Wesleyans, and engaged in the anti-slavery cause when it required effort to stand for Christ. In 1854 he removed with his family to Delaware county, Iowa, and once more at the front he did good work for his Master and has battled the secret fraternities on all sides. He died on the 27th of December, 1882. After remaining in a low state for eighteen hours he raised his hands and said, "Father, what will you have?" Then opening his eyes he said, "Bless the Lord" thrice and then settled down with a triumphant smile, and thus passed away.

JOHN KILE died on Thursday, Dec. 28, aged 67 years. He belonged to the U. B. church forty-three years; was a good Christian and was alive to the cause of anti-secretism. He will long live in the memory of his neighbors and friends. The funeral was held in the Friends church at New London; then the remains was interred in the cemetery of the Friends at New London. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

Bible Lessons.

LESSON VI., Feb. 11, 1883.—None Other Name.—Acts 4: 1–14.

Golden Text.—Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4: 12.

HOME READINGS.

Mat. 10:16–28. To be delivered up to councils.
Mark 13: 1–11. To be brought before rulers.
Acts 4: 1–14. The apostles before the council.
Acts 5: 17–32. Brought again before the council.
Acts 6: 1–15. Stephen before the council.
Acts 23: 1–10. Paul before the council.
Acts 26: 1–29. Paul before Agrippa.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

What Old Testament instance do we find of a man's being put in ward till judgment should be declared upon him? In how many books of the New Testament can you find a statement to the same effect as verse 12 of this lesson? Where is our citizenship; and for whom do we wait for thence? What instruction of Jesus were the apostles obeying, whose result was that stated in verse 13?—Scholar's Quarterly.

NOTES.

The captain of the temple. The captain of the temple (see Luke 22: 4) was the head of the band of Levite sentinels, whose function it was to keep guard over the sacred precincts. He, as an inspector, made his round by night, visited all the gates, and roused the slumberers. His presence implied that the quiet order of the temple was supposed to be endangered.—Plumptre.

Came upon them. To arrest them. The priests probably incited the arrest, because the preaching of Jesus Christ was directly inimical to the hierarchy (see Matt. 26: 61; Acts 6: 14); the captain of the temple arrested them on the pretext that the running of the people together (chap. 3: 11) was disorderly; and the Sadducees participated for the reason stated in the next verse, i. e., because the apostles testified to the resurrection. Observe in this first persecution of the Church a type of all that follow: A corrupt priesthood lead the way; the civil power is its instrument; the infidel world combines with and sustains the two.—Abbott.

Put them in hold, i. e., in prison.. The word means ward, safe keeping. And it is worth noticing on the use of it, that the Jews only employed imprisonment for this precautionary purpose. It was not a mode of punishment with them, and where we find mention of it so used in the Scripture records, the authorities who inflicted it were not Jewish.—Cambridge Bible.

Annas the high priest. Annas is here called the high priest, and placed before Caiaphas who was the high priest. The reason seems to be, that though Caiaphas was high priest de facto, being intruded into the office by the civil power of Rome, yet Annas was high priest de jure, and was regarded as such ecclesiastically. Hence our Lord was taken to Annas first (John 18: 13). Annas was the head of the Jewish hierarchy. The nominee of Rome, Caiaphas, had, as such, a subordinate place.—Wordsworth.

Gathered together at Jerusalem. The place of assembly for the Sanhedrim was a chamber in the temple, situated between the Court of the Israelites and the Court of the Priests, and was called Gazith. Some forty years before the fall of the city, this sacred council ceased to sit in any of the courts of the temple, and removed to a building without the temple precincts. The Sanhedrim (consisting of 71 members—70 and a president) was the supreme court in the Jewish nation. Its decrees apparently were respected beyond Palestine (Acts 9: 1, 2). Its powers embraced all matters, civil as well as religious. It tried accused persons, and its decisions admitted of no appeal. Besides its criminal jurisdiction, this court was the supreme arbiter in all matters connected with religion.—Schaff.

By what power, or by what name? They wanted to convict Peter and John of sorcery, by having worked a miracle, not in the name of God, but of a crucified malefactor. They hoped to bring the apostles under the awful death-sentence pronounced in the law (Deut. 13), which especially provides for the case when the sign or the wonder comes to pass.—Schaff. It is worthy of notice that they do not question the fact of the miracle. How could they? The lame man, now healed, stood before them.—Peirce.

Filled with the Holy Ghost. The participle "filled" in the original implies a fresh special illapse of the Holy Spirit to enable St. Peter to meet this crisis, in fulfillment of Christ's promise (Matt. 10: 19, 20; Mark 13: 11; Luke 12: 11, 12). In verse 31 again this special inspiration is indicated. In chapter 6: 3, 5, the adjective expresses an abiding influence of the Holy Spirit.—Cook. The first fulfillment of these promises occurred on the present occasion. Not previously; but now, precisely at the moment when such aid was indispensable, Peter "was filled with the Holy Ghost," that is to say, the Holy Ghost, proceeding from the Father and the Son, who had, from the day of Pentecost, dwelt in him, as in the other disciples, was now poured out in the fulness of power, into his mind and heart. He was thus enabled to vindicate himself, and to bear witness to Jesus; not only with a fearless, bold, and joyful spirit, but also with wisdom, with propriety of language, and in the most impressive style. Lange.

Of the good deed. There is a manifest emphasis on the word as contrasted with the contemptuous "this thing" of the question. It meets us again in 1 Tim. 6: 2.—Plumptre. Peter's opening sentence shows the false position of the court: for the apostles are charged with having done not evil, but good.—Abbott.

Whom ye crucified. The arraigned arraigns his accusers. He implies, I know that you have condemned this man as a blasphemer and an imposter. I reassert his Messiahship, attested by this miracle wrought by his power.—Abbott.

This is the stone set at naught by you, the builders. His meaning, which they quickly understood, was that the rulers of the Jews were the builders to whom the charge of the house of God was given. They should have been the first to acknowledge the long-looked-for Messiah, and to have worked for the glory of his kingdom; but they had rejected him and cast him aside; while God, by raising him from the dead, had shown that he was the corner stone on which the whole fabric of the spiritual temple of God on earth must rest.—Schaff.

Salvation only by Christ. Why? Other religions teach morality. They are most excellent moral precepts in The Light of Asia, in Confucius, in Plato, even in the Koran, and in the modern forms of infidelity, when they can spare a little time from fighting Christianity. Why are not these enough? (1) Because their moral systems are imperfect; (2) but chiefly because they have no power to lead men to obey their precepts, and save them from sin. But the essential peculiarity of Christ's religion is that it is a system of redemption. Others tell us what we ought to be; this makes us so. Others express our needs; Christ satisfies them. Others show us heaven; Christ fits us for heaven and takes us there.

PRACTICAL.

1. Ver. 2. We must expect opposition from the enemies of Christ.

2. Ver. 4. Persecution does not destroy but increases the converts, as the wind does not put out fire, but makes it blaze brighter, and scatters the fire-brands far and wide.

3. Ver. 8. Christ fulfils his promise to the letter.

4. Ver. 10. Jesus Christ is the wisdom and power of God.

5. Salvation makes whole, entire, complete, what sin mars and destroys.

6. Ver. 11. Whatever is true and right, however despised and unpopular, will at length become a crown and a glory.

"Though Right's forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne;
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and within the dim unknown

7. Ver. 12. Salvation is only through Christ. No other has power to save.

8. Ver. 13. True and deep religion gives courage and character—is an educating, elevating power.

9. If we belong to Christ it will appear in our lives and character.

10. We are changed into the likeness of Christ, by abiding with him.

11. Ver. 14. The good effects of Christianity are the one unanswerable argument.

NOTES FROM THE PRESS.

Thurlow Weed's life almost spans the history of this country under its present Constitution. He was born before Washington died; and, when Webster, Clay, and Calhoun were making their reputations, he had edited several country newspapers and fought in the battles of his country. He was older than the Seward or Lincoln or Greeley; and when Clay, Webster, and Calhoun were dead, he had not entered upon the most important part of his career. He was alive when Napoleon's star appeared in the darkness of the French Revolution, and was already a young man when the battle of Waterloo was fought. He lived and worked with three generations of public men. Most of the men who are now beginning to attract attention might have been his grandsons. Benjamin Franklin died seven years before Mr. Weed was born. The lives of these two journalists take the world back in to the reign of Louis XIV., and beyond the birth of Frederick the Great. Another such would very nearly reach the time of Shakspere.—New York Tribune.

Chancellor Sims, of the Syracuse Methodist Episcopal University, is reported as an enthusiastic admirer of the Baalism of Freemasonry, and the hobgoblinism of Odd-fellowship, and other secret satanic silliness. He has doubtless been stripped, hood-winked, cable-towed, killed and resurrected into this state of wonderful admiration. Not long since he is said to have disgraced the pulpit, and lowered his Chancellorship, by commending these blood-crimsoned secret works of worse than heathenish darkness. When once a man has been put through the indecencies of Masonic initiation, so vulgar as to render it almost or quite "a shame to speak of the things that are done of them in secret," and has once mouthed after his prompter, the oaths of blood-curdling villainy, and made up his mind to stand by the whole barbarism, he is fitted for any desecration of sacred things, in the presence of the base and vile behests of lodge corruption. He is equally ready to exalt the foulest conspiracies against Christ and his church, to relations of wondrous, if not equal dignity with the "church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." Why is it that the Methodist Episcopal church furnishes so many tools, who are willing to loan themselves for such base purposes? Why was it that so many of the same church loaned themselves to the defense of the heaven-cursed institution of slavery? An answer to the last will give a clue to the solution of the first question.—Wesleyan.

A. O. U. W. of Pa.—That secret association or rather insurance company, started up just thirteen years ago, under the false and deceptive title of Ancient Order of United Workmen of Pa., held its annual assembly in Allegheny City, last week. Its published proceedings report 13,450 members, out of which 100 deaths occurred during the year. Its report says that the receipts amounted to $12,830.20, and the expenditure to $11,182.22. Eight new lodges were organized, which does not show a very flattering increase for 1882. The titles applied to its insurance agents or officers, called Grand Master, Grand Recorder, Grand Guide, Grand Overseer, Grand Foreman, Grand Watchman, etc., remind us that the A. O. U-W.'s affectation of grandeur, is quite as full of vanity as that Grand and Ancient Fraud, Free Masonry, of which the A. O. U. W. is a blood relation and lineal descendant. We have not a particle of faith in any association organized for either religious, benevolent or insurance purposes, that has to crawl into a hole, and draw the hole in after it, in other words, that it is a secret, and therefore a justly suspected, association. The idea of a banking house, business firm, or other association that does a business of receiving and disbursing $10,000 to $12,000 annually, applying to its half dozen or more managers the pompous titles of Grand, Past grand, &c., would be the subject of deserved ridicule and contempt in any community. It is none the less so when such nonsense is practiced by the A. O. U. W. to give itself a semblance of antiquity and honor to which its age and insurance operations give it no special claim.—Sandy Lake News.

Afraid of Red Men's Vengeance.—"At Clarksburg, W. Va., Albert Price, who has been on trial for ten days, charged with mail robbery, was found guilty and sentenced on Saturday to ten years in the Buffalo Penitentiary. Price was a member of the Red Men's Society, an organization similar to the Ku-klux, and the citizens opposed to it were afraid to testify for fear of the Red Men's revenge. After Price was sentenced, however, Kettle, one of his companions weakened and made a confession, giving the secrets of the Red Men. The result is that the Judge has ordered the arrest of several persons for false swearing."

This is another among many cases that show the danger to the public of secret societies which have too often led to murders and defied justice. The Ku-klux-klan was perhaps the worst of these, but we must not forget that Masonry, which is the greatest and most powerful of the whole class, is chargeable with the murder of Morgan, and is apparently justly accused of the terrible massacre of the Chisolm family.

These excesses were exceptional, but it is doubtful if any "good" Mason will be fairly tried by a jury that has "good" Masons on it. The bond of brotherhood is so strong in that body that you might almost as well put a man's father and brother on a jury to try him as his brother Masons. A minister who is a "good" Mason, that is, one who, after knowing all about Masonry, continues actively to adhere to it, is seldom good for much else. Their Master Mason is not the Lord Jesus Christ, but a being whom they call the Architect of the World. We ask all sensible Masons if these things are not so? and if they are true, why is such a dangerous institution supported by them? What a person cannot do openly he should not join a society to do in secret.—N. Y. Witness, Jan. 4.

The Pilgrim Fathers.—Aristides fared hard at Athens because, as one Athenian citizen said, he could not bear to hear him called everywhere "the just." So the Pilgrims fare hard in many quarters because they were really so religious. Somebody must be always tempted to cast a vote against them or to pick some flaw in their story. According to an article in the New Englander, Prof. Herbert C. Adams some time ago read a paper before learned societies in Baltimore, in which, among other things, he said: "The Pilgrims came as virtual invaders. The first Indian they saw they chased; the first Indian corn they discovered, they appropriated; in the first hostile encounter they shot at the Indians." "This," says the New Englander reviewer, "is a bad way of writing history." Accordingly he places each of these statements by the side of the narrative of the actual events. For instance, the Pilgrims chased the Indians. But what for? The record says "partly to see if they could speak with them, and partly to discover if there might not be more of them lying in ambush." They appropriated the first corn they found. But they did this purposing to give them full satisfaction when they should meet any of them. This satisfaction was given six months after, at earliest opportunity. They shot at the Indians. But the shooting occurred when a party of them were attacked by the Indians at breakfast, and when the "arrows came flying amongst them."

It is laudable to seek the very truth of history, even if that truth should harm our ancestral pride. But happily, when all the facts are fully brought out, the men and women who landed on the Massachusetts shore in 1620, stand forth the best type for the founders of a nation that has been known in the world. What mistakes their contemporaries may have made, or the next generation made, are not to be charged to their account. They "broke the ice for those who came after with less difficulty." "This honor shall be theirs to the world's end."—Pacific

Mr. Andrew Paxton, agent of the Citizens' League of Chicago, has distributed amongst the banks, newspaper offices, and large business houses of the city, blanks for signatures to a petition to the License Committee of the Common Council requesting that body to report $500 as the uniform saloon license fee, and asking it to refuse license to disreputable men and women. Mr. Paxton says the petition had been signed by 500 members of the Board of Trade, and nearly every one was anxious to sign it wherever he had called. A great many say the only objection they have to make is it is not high enough—they would like it to be $1,000. Mr. Paxton says nearly all of the prominent business men have signed the petition, and he has a great demand for the blanks for signatures.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Docshurg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich , and oth rs. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of CAPT. WM. MORGAN. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 De-GREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Chris-TIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry 15 cents each: per dozen $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The bill reducing postage on letters from three cents to two has passed both Houses, and only awaits the President's signature to become a law.

—The Chinese minister, who lives quite simply at Washington, devotes $100,000 a year to the support of the poor in the provinces of Hon Nan.

—The Chicago committee for the relief of sufferers by the German floods has sent a total of 60,000 marks to Berlin, and will send 20,000 marks more at once. Detroit has also sent 12,000 marks, and New York has sent 100,000 marks.

—A bill fixing the minimum rate for saloon licenses in Illinois at $500 per annum, and containing very neeessary provisious against allowing drinking-houses to become the resort of disreputable characters, has been introduced in the State legislature.

—During the extreme cold of Monday and Tuesday last week a larger supply of water was pumped at the Chicago water works than ever before since they were built. The amount pumped on Monday was 86,953,415 gallons; on Tuesday, 88,394,215 gallons. Estimating the city's population as 600,000, the average per each inhabitant on Tuesday was 147 gallons.

—Last week the high wind and water drove such immense quantities of ice over Niagara Falls as to form an ice bridge over one hundred feet in thickness. Ice was thrown up all along the shore, destroying houses and property. Two hundred feet of the inclined railway building and the observatory and dressing-rooms below the bank are crushed.

—An express train on the Central Pacific road was attacked at a lonesome little station 166 miles west of Ogden, called Montello, by a dozen masked robbers, who captured the trainmen and locked them up in a tank-house. The east-bound express train then came in. Two of the highwaymen jumped on the engine, overawed the engineer and firemen, and ran the engine on a side-track. The train-men were seized by the rest of the band and locked in the tank-house. But when they approached the express car they were met by a fusilade from the express-messenger. The robbers finally retreated.

—On Wednesday a terrible shock took place in Wilkesbarre, Pa., lasting about three minutes. Houses were toppled over and brick houses split and rent asunder. The people ran wildly through the streets carrying children in their arms, most of whom had no clothing other than their night-dresses. A large brick school house is somewhat damaged. Many floors of the residences have an angle of from thirty to forty degrees. The disturbed district covers an area of sixty acres. The houses have been abandoned, while the owners have fled to the adjoining hills, and are expectiug every moment to see their houses sink into the earth. The cave-in is over an old, abandoned mine, worked many years ago by the Delaware and Hudson company.

FOREIGN.

—A dispatch on the 23d stated that all the French ministers had tendered their resignations. "The political panic is intense. Business is demoralized. The possibility of a military pronunciamento is freely talked of. Throughout the bourgeois class there is reaction against the regime of doctors and journalists, and a yearning for a saving sword. Gambetta's death has thrown the whole working machine of France out of gear. It is hardly possible to overrate the dangerous character the ministerial crisis has assumed." Next day the ministerial crisis had past, several of the cabinet having determined to remain.

—The French Premier Duclerc and Prince Napoleon are both reported as seriously ill. There seems no doubt that the bill expelling all pretenders from France will be passed by a large majority in the Chamber.

—The largest gasometer in Glasgow exploded there Saturday night. The damage is estimated at £10,000. Eight persons were injured by the explosion. Subsequently a shed belonging to the Caledonian railway company was blown up. The explosions are supposed to have been the work of Fenians. A soldier on Sunday picked up, on the bank of the Forth and Clyde canal, a tin box, which exploded on an attempt being made to open it, injuring two persons.

—On the morning of Dec. 12 a great flood of water broke into the old workings in the Australian gold mine at Creswich, where there were thirty-nine miners at work. In a few minutes the lower levels were flooded, while the waters rose thirty feet in the shaft. Twenty-two workmen were lost.

—A hurricane at Limerick, Ireland, occasioned serious damage. Houses were blown down, vessels in the harbor suffered, trains from Galway to Dublin ran off the track, and an engine and six carriages were wrecked.

—It is stated that important evidence has been obtained in regard to the perpetrators of the outrages of the last two years in the west of Ireland. The police anticipate capturing all the members of the organization which promoted the crimes, also the persons concerned in the murder of Lord Mountmorres. It is probable they will be indicted shortly.

—Extensive military preparations have been made at Kilmainham, Ireland, to guard against a possible outbreak on the part of sympathizers with the twenty-one prisoners confined there. They are charged with conspiracy to murder government officials, and it is alleged that startling disclosures will be made in reference to the Phœnix Park murders.

We are prepared to fill all orders for anti-secrecy literature and to take subscriptions for the Christian Cynosure at No. 221 West Madison street, Chicago.

A WORD TO BE READ CAREFULLY.

Last week's revision of our mail list was the first under the new administration. Mistakes may have occurred and names may have been removed that ought to be continued. We hope friends will notify us promptly of any errors, and we shall be glad to make corrections. Only a few so far have said "Discontinue my paper," but we are sorry indeed to lose even the few. It is our ambition to make the Cynosure so essential to its readers that when once they know its merits they will be very loath indeed to dispense with its weekly visits. If you are embarrassed in your circumstances, or find other obstruetions in the way, drop us a card and state the case. We are co-workers together, and workers together with Christ the Lord; possibly some relief may found for your case. Where there is a will there's a way. If you will help us keep all the present list, and God blesses our united efforts to enlist others, it will not take as long as you may think to reach ten thousand. Let's stop the leak, however small, and "pull for the shore."

AN OFFER.

Doubtless many who are now unacquainted with the Christian Cynosure would be glad to reueive it weekly if once they knew its worth. We are grateful for the favorable notices which have appeared in quite a number of our exchanges, and shall gladly reciprocate that kindness as occasion may permit, but we feel that nothing less than a perusal of the paper itself for several consecutive issues will enable persons to form a correct estimate of its value. We therefore offer to send the Christian Cynosure for four consecutive weeks for 10 cents to the address of any new subscriber, beginning with the first issue after the money is received. This offer to continue for one month from date of this number. There will of course be a loss on the first numbers ordered, but we believe that if followed up there will be an ultimate gain to the cause. Will our friends take hold and give this plan a fair trial? Furnish a good list of monthly readers, and give us a chanee to see how many we can hold.

THE WEED PAMPHLET OFFER.

The interest in Mr. Weed's statement of Morgan's fate is becoming more general. Corroborating proofs are accumulating and the document itself is standing the test of adverse criticism. It will well repay a careful reading. Our offer to send it FREE with yearly renewals and subscribers before Feb. 1st., has met such a favorable response that we feel justified in continuing it another month. To those desiring it for circulation, 50 cents per dozen; $3.00 per hundred.

CLUB OFFER.

The price of the Cynosure is $2.00 per year; of the American Agriculturist, the best farmers' illustrated monthly, is $1.50. We will send the two, with a fine steel engraving "In the Meadow," for $3.10.

FARM FOR SALE.

W. H. LAYTON OF MT. AYR, RINGGOLD CO., IOWA,

offers for sale his valuable farm of over seven hundred acres. This is a fine opportunity for some man who has six sons (more or less) to colonize and gather his children around him. Stock and implements sold with farm if desired. Price reasonable and terms easy. For particulars write as above.

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment agalnst secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinklo of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instruotor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen, $15.00.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

THE MODEL NEWSPAPER.

The Inter Ocean for 1883.

To give all the news without indulging in offensive sensationallsm, to be courageous and aggressive in the advocacy of well-established principles, without being narrow-minded or unfair, to cater to the tastes of all classes of intelligent readers without pandering to the prejudices of any, to present in most attractive form the greatest variety of matter without curtailing or lowering the standard of any department, to grow in interest and excellence with each succeeding year of its existence is to be the model newspaper. From the first it has been the aim of the publishers of THE INTER OCEAN to have the paper reach this high standard, and in each of the ten years of its existence a noticeable step forward has been taken. THE INTER OCEAN will remain uncompromisingly Republican, will maintain its present attitude of protecting American industries, will continue to devote special attention to trade, transportation, and economic questions, will retain the departments of The Curiosity Shop (a current encyclopedia of curious, interesting and valuable information, called out by inquiries of subscribers), The Woman's Kingdom (devoted to the progressive movements in which women are interested), The Farm and Home (covering topics of special interest to farmers, their wives, and their children), The Veterinary (containing answers to questions as to the treatment of horses, cattle, and other animals by one of the best veterinary surgeons in the West), and Complications (taking in puzzles, enigmas, conundrums, etc.), all of which are peculiar to the paper. It will give as much space as hitherto to serial and short stories, original and selected short sketches and poems, and with increased facilities for newsgathering in the shape of special wires to New York and Washington, and experienced correspondents well placed at home and abroad, will more than maintain its high standard for enterprise and accuracy in all departments of news.

THE INTER OCEAN, always closely identified with the interests of the West, has led in the development of both the Northwest and the Southwest, and it will continue to make prominent the characteristic features of the progress of the newer communities toward Statehood. No paper in the country has given so much attention to immigration movements, railway and canal enterprises, race and economic problems, and other topics relating to the prosperity of the older States and the developments of the newer sections as THE INTER OCEAN.

Because it is constantly enlarging the field of newspaper discussion and grappling unhesitatingly with all new questions that come before the people, it has increased rapidly in circulation among all classes of tradesmen and farmers. Because of its enterprise in leasing special telegraph wires to the great news centers it has grown in favor with all who like completeness and accuracy in dispatches. Because of its steadfast Republicanism and its close intimacy with the best elements of the Republican party it has grown steadily in favor with party men. Because of the high character and wide range of its literary and special departments it has become a greater favorite in the home than any other distinctively political paper in the country.

The aim has been to make it the best paper for city, suburban, or country reader, the best paper for the business man and his family, the best paper for the strong partisan as well as the general reader, and as the circulaition of the several editions has increased more rapidly the past year than in any previous year, and as it is now larger than that of any other paper west of New York City, the publishers, feeling that they have a fair measure of popular approval, will continue in the course marked out, making such improvements as will keep THE INTER OCEAN at the head of the list of American journals as the model newspaper.

The circulation is best shown by the amount of postage paid on the papers sent to actual subscribers. Judged by this standard THE INTER OCEAN is far ahead of all its Chicago contemporaries, as is shown by the table below. This table gives the amount of postage paid on circulation by each newspaper named (all of Chicago) for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1882:

THE INTER OCEAN	$19,609 30
The News	7,789 14
The Times	6,581 10
The Tribune	5,644 54
The Herald	1,443 68

This statement needs no comment. It speaks for itself.

The subscription price of THE INTER OCEAN is as follows:

	Per year.
Weekly edition, postage paid	$1 15
Semi-Weekly edition, postage paid	2 50
Daily edition, postage paid	10 00

Sample copies of the Inter Ocean will be sent on application.

ARE YOU COMING TO CHICAGO?—If you have business in the city or if you have occasion to pass through, it will repay you to call at headquarters, see what is being done, and get a supply of tracts, look over our list of publications; order such as you need and give us a word of admonition or encouragement as you may think appropriate. Quite a number of friends from the country and some from the city have dropped in to gladden us by their presence. We appreciate such calls and hope they will in future be more frequent. Don't forget the number, 221 West Madison St.

TOPICS OF THE HOUR.

The defeat of Senator Windom's effort for re-election in Minnesota must be considered, in the light of some by-the-way revelations, as a national loss. The Bonded Whisky bill now before Congress has not had his approval. The plan of the distillers and their friends in the Senate was to force the bill through without discussion. Some features, carefully concealed, caught the attention of Secretary Folger and were made known to the Senate. Windom was among the number who fought the measure and secured a temporary defeat, which may prove to be permanent. It is now stated on good authority that the whisky men were leagued to defeat Cullom in Illinois, Windom in Minnesota and Ferry in Michigan. Cullom was elected after considerable but unorganized opposition; Windom is defeated, and Ferry is as good as retired. This business goes to prove that a few thousand whisky makers and dealers by means of their secret conspiracies hope to manage the affairs of the nation for their own benefit, the wishes of ten million voters to the contrary notwithstanding.

The whiskey men have made another attack upon the nation in its Senatorial body—not by defeating good men, but by robbing one who might be useful to the nation, of mind and character and the individual himself of self-respect, honor and all hope of eternity. The Washington dispatches tell of a wealthy Senator, who is understood to be Fair of Nevada, who has taken to drink within the last two years until he is almost daily under the influence of liquor. A week ago after a two day's spree when he ate nothing and drank nothing but champagne, he was threatened with an attack of delirium tremens. We had hoped that such fearful and disgusting scenes were forever past at Washington when liquor was banished from the White House and Senator Davis, as president of the Senate, ordered its sale discontinued about the Capitol. But it seems the example and encouragement of President Arthur has overborne the good work begun; but after a little time of apparent defeat the temperance truth in Washington will prove its worth. The "eternal years of God" can wait till a few months of Arthur have passed into oblivion.

A decision rendered in the Supreme Court has an important bearing upon the interests of the colored race. The ready mob in some sections of the South have dropped the Kn-klux mask for lynch law, which is for them only less effective in that it is less horrible. The colored man who commits crime, or is under suspicion, expects in these parts but one punishment, and that before the court can decide on his guilt or innocence. The lynchings at the North are the outbreak of a different sentiment in the community; for the blacks have neither wealth or lodge influence, by which to hope for escape from the consequences of crime. The State Court of Appeals in Kentucky a while since sustained the motion of a defendant to quash the indictment of murder against him for the reason that the grand jury which found it, had been selected, by virtue of State law, from white men exclusively, in violation of the Fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution. The Supreme Court, however, holds that the motion should have granted for the reason that the State of Kentucky has twice enacted laws inconsistent with the same amendment.

The James "boys" have another victim. Last week a young man who had within a week shot to death two officers of the law in Kansas, was taken out of jail and lynched. He confessed that he had been led into the commission of crime by reading of the lawless deeds of the James desperadoes; in his weak and disordered fancy these men were exalted to heroes and demi-gods. What teacher, what parent may not, by neglect, be training their boys for lives of crime and deaths of horror and dishonor! And how great must be the responsibility of the daily papers which are continually spreading at large before their readers all the details of crime and outrage to inflame the passions of weak-minded youth and tempt them into the same path where they stumble at the first step into shameful graves!

Rev. F. L. Thompson, chaplain of the Southern Illinois penitentiary at Chester in his report for last year presents some facts upon this topic which should not be quickly forgotten. "I have read," he says, "every available thing on crime, its cause and cure; on prisons, their discipline, etc. I have talked freely with the convicts as to their early lives, their home influences, their early opportunities, and their habits, and have come to the conclusion that there are two prime causes of crime—the want of proper home influence in childhood, and the lack of thorough, well-disciplined education in early life. Of the first there are at least five classes—those who never knew a home, those who lost parents, one or both, while young; those who had vicious homes, those who ran away from home in the formation period of life, and those who were over-indulged in their homes. Of the second, those who went but very little, and those who played truant or were idle and refractory in school. The lack of this early influence and training at home, and of this discipline and learning in school has left the individuals morally and mentally weak, the easy subjects of bad habits, vicious appetites and designing men. These drift into the tide of bad association, trashy, and then vicious reading, to places of carnal amusements, to saloons, gaming-houses, houses of ill-fame, to the society of the vulgar and criminal, to the committing of crimes—small at first, but bold at last—and then into the penitentiary." Mr. Thompson estimates that out of 500 criminals who have come under his observation 419 were without home influence during youth and boyhood and 218 had never been in school. These facts should be pondered by parents, all who have children under their own influence at home or of their mates at school.

The year 1883 has already made a record of storms, wrecks, fire, flood and frost that will prevent its soon fading from the memory of man. Unprecedented floods in Germany are now followed by as unusual and extensive, but not yet so disastrous, floods in Ohio and Indiana. Last week while all nature below was fast locked in the embrace of a severe winter, the skies above seemed melted into a deluge whose escape, prevented by ordinary means, swept through cities, destroyed bridges, buildings, roads, and made universal havoc. Cleveland, Columbus and Indianapolis have suffered heavily and some loss of life has occurred through railway disasters. Telegraph lines were down east and south of Chicago and to repair them was a work of greatest difficulty, the strain of removing one pole sometimes breaking down others for a mile. It is reckoned that the loss of life by several great disasters during three weeks in January reached at least nine hundred.

IT IS CORBAN.

BY PROF. W. O. TOBEY.

It is a much debated question whether men are free to break certain obligations, promises or so-called oaths. In the discussions of the oath-bound secrecy problem, this subject is a leading matter of debate. The apologists of the lodge try to maintain that the oaths taken in the lodge-room are binding, and he who asserts his right to violate them is freely denounced as a "perjurer", or "perjured wretch."

The whole question of oaths is one with which the church and writers on moral science have been much concerned, and the Scriptures have been appealed to pro. and con. in the discussion.

It is plain that Christ taught great carefulness in taking oaths. Whether he sanctioned the violation of any "oaths," is the chief inquiry. This point is sufficiently settled by his treatment of the use of Corban, by the Jews.

The account of this word seems to be as follows: The law of vows as taught by Moses, was overlaid by the rabbins with certain traditions. They taught that if a man called a thing "corban" (offering) he might interdict himself from using it, or giving it to another, and the abuse was even extended to the prohibition of doing anything called corban. Thus it was taught that if a son made a formal devotion to religious purposes of those goods which he could devote to the relief of a parent, then he was free from the duty of assisting his relative. In other words the son made a solemn promise, equivalent to an oath, to devote his goods to religious purposes, and it was not then lawful to help his parent.

The Saviour's method of treating such obligations is seen in Mat. 15:5, 6; and Mark 7:10–13. He clearly teaches that the natural and divine obligations of children to care for parents, are prior and superior to the assumed obligations of corban. The traditions of the rabbins made the Word of God of none effect. Christ therefore teaches that obligations which conflict with natural and prior obligations, are not binding. The principle is fully established by his treatment of the corban obligation, and will apply to all other cases of a like nature.

With respect to the obligations of the lodges, they have no binding force unless it can be shown that they are superior to the natural, divine and civil obligations with which they come in conflict. If they are always in harmony with prior obligations, they are works of supererogation, and it matters not whether they are observed or not.

The public mind is greatly in need of instruction and enlightenment on the subject of oaths or obligations. The religious denominations that have taken a stand against the use of all sorts of oaths have not been active in discussing the subject, and have mostly been looked upon as queer and antiquated to their views. The right kind of preaching and teaching on this subject will strike at the very underpinning of the lodges, and the corrupt system will crumble away. The subject of rash and thoughtless oath-taking, as treated in Leviticus 5:4 and on, needs special attention, and the churches are guilty in not having rules and standards pertaining to it.

ISLAND OF HOPE.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

East by south ten thousand leagues,
Over the land and over the sea,
Over the deep blue fields of air
Where the clustered stars are blossomed fair,
On the border of eternity
Lieth the blessed island of Hope;
Circled by waters that never know
The breath of the tempest, nor yet behold
The dragons of lightning brigbt and bold
Gleam upon wind-vexed crests of snow;
Waters so clear that far beneath
Creatures of beauty are seen to play,
And tbe wreaths of tbe wave-washed coral glow,
Bright as the briar rose in May.

In tbat bright island no bird unclean,
Winnows with robber wing the air.
No tyrant eagle, no buzzard lean,
No savage owl with a saintly mien,
Lives upon plunder and life's despair;
But the carrolling lark in the cloudless skies,
Sing notes as sweet as an angel's lute,
And not one feathered throat is mute,
But the swells of their music fall and rise
In undulations of ecstacy,
So moving arc they that the daintiest bell
Of the tiniest flower by the breezes swung,
Stops its ringing and listens awhile
To the rapturous notes by the warblers sung.

In that fair island no lion stalks
Through tbe fragrant aisles of tbc forest fair,
No viper lurks on the flowery bank,
No poisonous weed grows tall and rank
To mar the grace of the landscape there:
But the graceful antelope crops the mead,
And the dappled fawn is scen to play
With the mirthful lamb on the meadows gay,
And there with his fine arched neck the steed
Bounds o'er the upland, labor free,
Fleet as the whirlwind, clean of limb,
Emblem of life and symmetry.

And tbere from the hills that are verdure crowned,
Each stream gushes down with a song of its own;
Streams that are filled by the dew of flowers,
For never above that fair land lowers,
The clouds that water or threaten our own;
But all through tbe day that is ceaseless there,
The dew from tbe ambient heaven distills
Impalpable dew, like the mists that rise
From a beautiful lady's smiles and sighs,
When love is the motivc that moves and thrills.
There every stream has an odorous breath,
Tbis of the hyacintb, that of the rose,
And many a fragrance strange and sweet,
That the earth in its gladness never knows.

And oh! could you see the forests there,
The trees of the Lord where tbe valleys lie
Circling the lakelet deep and blue,
Each with its glad eye looking through
Their crown of leaves to the sapphire sky!
Oh could you see their willowy grace,
Their wealth of foliage deep and green,
Their star-eyed petals that far outshine
The roses glow or the columbine,
Or the delicate calla's fragrant sheen;
While high among those verdurous boughs,
Is a wondrous fruitage fair to see,
That pendulous swings in globes of gold,
Like apples of immortality.

Round that fair island the atmosphere
Moves like a concave crystal ball,
Where each creation of beauty and grace,
That moves on the sweet isle's lovely face,
Is seen again, for it mirrors tbem all,
Each flower and spray of the deep green wood,
Each butterfly with enamcled wing,
Each clear pool in a shady dell,
Each grassy meadow and floral bell,
And all the beautiful birds that sing,
Are mirrored in all perfection tbere.
And there like pictures of rarest art
But far exceeding all man's device
Are scenes from tbe lives of the glorious souls,
That live and shine in that paradise.

For there the souls of the happy dwell,
With never a care their bliss to mar,
With never a cause for grief or fear,
Witb never a sigh and never a tear,
And never a howl from the dogs of war:
But all through the ever-beaming day,
The voice of gladness is silent never,
For love is there with a heart of truth,
A God-like mind and eternal youth,
And life rolls on like a broad, deep river;
While over all is the smile of God,
An unspeakable, glorious, life-giving smile,
For the Son of Man has his blessed abode,
His throne and his kingdom on that fair isle.

"I MUST DECLARE THE TRUTH GOD REVEALS TO ME TO-DAY, LEST TO-MORROW IT BE WITHHOLDEN FROM ME." GERRITT SMITH.

AN UNINTENTIONAL CONFESSION.

BY REV. A. J. CHITTENDEN.

Masonry denies that any correct revelation of its forms and operations has ever been made. This denial has some plausible ground, else it would never have been so generally made. But it is a curious fact that the more plausible the ground of the assertion, the worse it is for Masonry. The logic of the case is such that it converts the denial into an admission of the most important and objectionable feature of the system.

The argument is this: It is well known that nothing but the fear of death is sufficient to hold together any general compact of secretists. No other penalty would give any lease of life to associations of men which operate professedly in the dark, and are held together all over the world under all circumstances. If I were to assist in the formation of such a society of men I should certainly urge the necessity of the death penalty.

Our knowledge of men tells us that nothing less severe than that would suffice to restrain the husband from yielding to his wife, or the conscientious from relieving his conscience. If Masonry cannot be known by the outside world, then there is only one possible reason for believing the statement, and that is that it is held in darkness by a horrible death penalty. This is virtually asserted by every Mason when he tells you that "You don't know anything about it."

He never thinks to deny our professed knowledge of other affairs of men, and the denial in this case is an undeniable presumption against his own statement.

Because, whenever a person who has been a Mason, and generally known as reliable, says among other things alleged, that Masonry uses a horrible death penalty to preserve itself, we have in addition to the bare statement of the witness the implied admission of all those adhering Masons who say we "can't know anything about it." For the only reason why we "do not know" is the very thing which all men know to be sufficient to deter most men from making a revelation, and that is just what the witness testifies to.

But his testimony enables us to know with certainty and the denial of the other Mason only corroborates the correctness of the revelation.

So it is in human society that God has so constituted the minds of all men that iniquity cannot go uncovered, unless they abuse the very basis of common sense itself, and become by moral stupidity, unworthy of any good thing.

Rockford, Ill.

SOME DOCTRINES OF ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

BY J. D. NUTTING.

A society claiming half a million members and a yearly revenue of nearly five million dollars is not unimportant. And when such a society announces moral teaching as its chief object, its importance is not diminished. Calhoun's teaching caused secession, brought the Rebellion and filled half a million graves. Calhoun spoke to but few; these half million members are many; and each one is also a teacher of others. The order of Odd-fellows claims more than twice as many local organizations as there are Congregational churches (to use for comparison figures which are at hand) and nearly one-half more members than that denomination contains—facts which should show something of the importance of the "order," especially in view of its avowed objects. Putting the organization itself upon the stand in the person of the authors of its acknowledged standard public works, let us investigate its teachings and character.

In Grosh's "Odd-fellow's Improved Manual," p. 98, we find the following on the objects of the order:

"May your initiation and consequent practice aid in releasing you from all blindness of moral vision, set you free from the fetters of ignorance and error, and bring you from a death in selfishness into a life of active benevolence and virtue."

This very strong language is spoken to saint and sinner alike, after they have entered the portals of the order. An institution assuming a work so nearly like that divinely given to the church, has need of very much grace to carry it through successfully! But, further, same author, page 90:

"What regeneration by tbe word of truth is in religion, initiation is in Odd-fellowship."

And again; speaking of the instructions given to the candidate, "Donaldson's Pocket Companion" pp. 24 and 27, says:

"They teach him his duty to his God, his country, his neighbor, his family and himself. * * * They lead him to obedience of the commands of his Divine Maker, in which he cannot fail to be blessed in life, death and eternity."

And Grosh, p. 188:

"To prepare the Odd-fellow for these daily duties and privileges of life, and to direct him in their proper performance and use, is the great end and aim of the weekly meeting in the lodge-room."

In the light of these statements regarding the objects of the order, let us examine some of the things which, as thus a school of morals, it inculcates.

The most prominent doctrine of Odd-fellowship as presented by its standard authors is one dimly shadowed in its name:—"fellowship," "universal brotherhood," "universal toleration." As Donaldson says, p. 291: "Jew or Gentile, Catholic or Protestant, is, as such, welcome to our lodges and our hearts." And Grosh's "Manual," p. 272, says: "In our tents no sectarian or national distinctions are recognized."

This latter may be, in most lodges, because there are no "national distinctions" to be recognized, since Donaldson says that "Chinese, Polynesians, Indians, half-breeds or mixed bloods are not eligible to membership," and by decision of the U. S. Grand Lodge "Negroes are included under this rule." (See White's "Digest of Laws and Decisions.) But further on this point Grosh says, p. 280, speaking of the "Tables of the Law:"

"It represents the common basis of the three great religions of the world (Judaism, Christianity, Mohammedanism) which recognize the One, only living and true God. * * * * This common basis of religion and morals teaches Christians that having received so much through the Jew they may well bear with his supposed deficiency until they can impart to him again—and the Moslem, that the foundation on which he stands is also the common ground of the others. * * * Followers of different teachers you are worshipers of one God, who is Father of all, and therefore ye are brethren!"

Against this doctrine of race equality nothing can, of course, be said, except that this order itself needs to learn it. If the very essence of clanism be not in separating one part of mankind from another by partition walls of sex, color and obligations of secrecy and allegiance for personal ends, then that essence is hard to find. God is one, and hence men are commanded to love him as the one embracing all other objects of right love—supremely, mankind created in his image, is also one and not many, and hence all men are commanded to love their neighbors (comprising all mankind) as they do themselves—equally, aside from special authorized relationships and differences of moral character (Mark 12: 20). But when a namby-pamby sentimentalism or gross moral obtuseness puts the different religions of earth in place of its different races and treats them as equals, it commits at once a most egregious blunder and a heinous crime. To place Christianity on a level with Mohammedanism or Judaism is to logically annihilate it; for there is no such Christianity. To say that the God of the Christian is the god of the Mohammedan is to say that he is the devil; for all worship not paid to the one God, the Creator and Ruler of the Universe, and paid through Jesus Christ his Son, unless the worshiper be ignorant of him, is paid to devils (see 1 Cor. 10: 20 and references), and Mohammedanism is such worship, beyond question. The lesson which Odd-fellowship makes this emblem teach—an emblem whose legend, "THOU SHALT HAVE NO OTHER GODS BEFORE ME", was spoken in thunder from Sinai in condemnation of all paganism—is that of equality of religions as a reason for equality of races. A teaching more diametrically opposed to these very Tables of the Law could hardly be imagined. As Christ said of the Jew, so must we say of these teachers, "Ye make void the law of God by your tradition." And even the Jewish rejection of Christ which the Judge of all declares enough to damn those guilty of it, this "moral teacher" calls only a "supposed deficiency"! Could greater insults easily be heaped upon Christianity and its Author?

Another doctrine of the order is that of mutual protection between members. Grosh, page 129 of his Manual, speaking of the emblem of the Quiver and Bow, says:

"The true Odd-fellow will always have ready his quiver and bow to guard a brother from danger or to promote his welfare—a brother ever, in war as in peace."

The plain teaching of this extract is that Odd-fellowship, like most similar societies, places its ties above the obligations of civil government. The passage has no meaning unless it enforces the obligation of Odd-fellows in time of war to protect and aid their "brethren" of the enemy. And it is plain enough that such teaching is treasonable; that a righteous civil government has as an ordinance of God the supreme right to civil existence and command within its territory, and that any counter-authority, counter-relationships or counter-obligations are treasonable in their very nature, and without rightful authority for even their existence, besides often causing their subjects to commit perjury when their civil oath conflicts with their lodge obligations.

Passing by much that might profitably be mentioned, let us notice a moment the crowning doctrine of this system which in many respects assumes the work of the church. Donaldson's "Companion," page 138, concluding one of the "charges" to the candidate, says:

"Though a storm more fearful than any thou hast yet encountered—that of physical death—shall soon burst upon thee, the hand of God Almighty, which has sustained thee thus far, will protect thee amid that storm, and thou shalt come up through it with joy and gladness to the land of eternal delight."

"Friendship will bind us together, Truth will direct us, and Love will make our labors easy; so that, at the last, when we are summoned from the terrestrial lodges to the lodges celestial, we may leave form and ceremony behind, find our work approved, and, as the mysteries of heaven are unveiled to our admiring vision, we may arrive at its perfection, and enjoy its benefits throughout ages eternal."

And Donaldson's "Companion," page 41, is even more explicit:

"He who practices this charity, and teaches it to others, shall be crowned with honor, and come down to the grave in peace, with the full assurance of a blessed future."

Other extracts might be given, but these are enough. Odd-fellowship claims heaven for all faithful members! Not only does it teach an "universal brotherhood" which is the essence of clannism, and an equality of religions which drags God from his throne, but it claims to SAVE MEN'S SOULS! What is there left to which moral Babel-builders can aspire? This order might offer worlds instead of dollars in a system of dues and benefits, but that would not be a feather's weight beside this which it does offer, for "what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" By this it makes itself, not alone a society of quasi insurance for the physical wants of man, nor indeed alone a "moral teacher" for his temporal wants of a higher grade, but it makes itself a saviour for his soul in eternity! What mockery and sacrilege!

The power of a counterfeit lies in its likeness to the genuine. Both the esoteric and exoteric teachings of the order under consideration resemble Christianity enough to seem, to the superficial observer, the same; but a slightly critical study of its teachings reveals the horrid anti-Christ under even a Pope's tiara. Odd-fellowship is a religious manikin; having outwardly the form of godliness, but denying and totally destitute of the living power thereof, which is regeneration through the Holy Ghost and faith in Christ. The first extract given under this topic teaches salvation through perseverance and fortitude in a journey representing life; the second, salvation through Friendship, Love and Truth; and the third, through practicing and teaching "charity." Odd-fellowship is throughout a system of salvation by works, without the faith of Christ. Nowhere in the writings of the order or in its esoteric "work," is the office or work of the Anointed even mentioned; nor ever, indeed, is there so much as a hint of any need of a Saviour or any possibility of salvation but in keeping the precepts of the order, and in a vague conception of a "salvation any way" in spite of even heinous sins, which seem to it but "shortcomings" needing no salvation. Even the veriest tyro in the Scriptures knows that such doctrine is utterly false; and it logically overturns the whole plan of redemption and heaps vilest insult upon God by making him a liar and his Scriptures an imposition upon the credulity of mankind, like this order itself.

No person of experience and observation needs to be told the direful effect of such teaching as this on the minds of men. Solemn farce and sacred falsehood as it really is, it yet comes too often to be received as truth, in all its deadly error. It is no uncommon thing to hear men say that "———[naming the secret order to which he belongs] is good enough religion for me;" or "If a man is a good Odd-fellow he's got to be a Christian." And it is the testimony of men of large experience in revival work that lodge members are among the most difficult classes to reach with saving truth. Said an earnest brother not long since, who has had charge of a large branch of mission work in a Western city for several years, and during that time has talked with several hundreds in the inquiry-room, "I find that Freemasons are about the most difficult class of men to get converted that comes under my notice. I have known as many as three or four abandoned women converted at one of our evening meetings, but very rarely a man who belonged to the lodge. They are very hard to reach with saving truth, and when they are converted they always give up the lodge."

The reason for this is not far to seek. A man may be really drowning, but if he thinks himself safe he will not call for help. Nightly the members of these orders are taught to practice a semblance of Christianity, and to believe that thus they are safe. It matters not that these orders are destitute of the very first principles of Christianity; it matters not that they are falsehood from top to bottom and from side to side, cross-grained and interwoven until it has become their very nature; it matters not that they are Satan's decoy-ducks to deceive men into hell through a fancied security and a false brotherhood; so long as the deception continues such men will neither seek nor accept Christ. The very first step must be, by direct assault or most powerful counter attraction, or usually by both, to undeceive them. In the day of judgment it will doubtless be evident enough to even the most unwilling that these secret, religious orders have been among the enemy's most potent snares to keep men from the kingdom; and that their inception was, as Dr. Nathaniel Colver once called Masonry, "Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men."

"Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord."—2 Cor. 6: 14–18.

(Lest some who are unacquainted with the literature of Odd-fellowship should doubt the reliability of the works cited above, the following endorsement of one of them, practically by the United States Grand Lodge itself, is appended:

"The undersigned members of the Grand Lodge of the United States at its annual session of 1852, hereby recommend to the brethren at large the Manual of Odd-fellowship of Bro. Past Grand A. B. Grosh as a complete and faithful history of the Principles, Instructions, Work and Organization of the Order. It is full and accurate in its details, harmonious in its conception and execution, and its instructions may be confidently relied on as correct. (Signed by 67 R. W. Representatives, including Past Grand Sire Thomas Wildey.)"

This work continues to be the recognized Manual of the order. Donaldson's "Companion," also quoted above, ranks probably next in authority.)

Oberlin, O.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP PROPOSALS.

Rev. O. M. Van Swearingen, a Congregational minister of Illinois, was once a member of this order. His explanation of its unholy principles appear in a small pamphlet, entitled "The Stone Ezel." His second reason for objecting to the order is: "Odd-fellowship proposes to regenerate men by its initiatory ceremony without faith in Christ or the influence of the Holy Ghost." Under this proposition he says:

"But it is lodge night, and a goodly number of brothers are present for there is to be an initiation. 'Officers, take your respective stations!' 'Guardian, secure the door!' 'Warden, examine the brethren in the lodge room!' 'All right, noble grand!' Then follows a recitation of the duties of each officer in the lodge, and the regular business of the evening begins. As we are to have an initiation we will omit some unimportant business and at once introduce the candidate. Admitted into the ante-room, he must state in writing his name, place of residence, occupation, age, his relation to the order, the condition of his health, and sign his name to all, together with the confession of faith peculiar to the Independent Order of Odd-fellows. Having pledged his honor to keep secret whatever may transpire during his initiation, he is blindfolded and led into the lodge-room where he is received by the conductor and scene supporters. He is informed that he is now in the Odd-fellows' retreat—where the world is shut out—and he is separated from its dissensions and its vices! He is lectured concerning friendship, love, faith and charity, and the assurance given him that the ceremony of initiation through which he is about to pass will ultimately lead him to primary truth.

"We will now suppose that the candidate is a minister of the Gospel, a teacher in holy things. He has made the sacred Scriptures a study and supposed that in them he had discovered the truth as to its origin; his duty and responsibility, and his final destiny; and upon the walls of Zion had been proclaiming it to a dying world. But he is now gravely informed that the ceremony through which he is about to pass will ultimately lead him to primary truth! See Grosh's Manual, page 132, where the condition of the candidate is described in the following words: 'Consider, then, the social state of man without a knowledge and practice of those relations which bind him to his Creator and his fellows.'

But no matter whether he likes the play or not, he is in for initiation, and 'Brothers, the stranger awaits our mystic rites.' 'Then at once the chains prepare.' 'Here they are; entwine their links about him.' The conductor now assures him that he is in darkness and chains, and that he presents a mournful spectacle; but comforts him by saying that his is but the condition of millions of our race, who are void of wisdom though they know it not, and when he has received the momentous and solemn lesson which they are about to impart to him, he will fully understand the vanity of worldly things, of the instability of wealth and power—of the certain decay of all earthly greatness. But halt! we are in the presence of that 'lesson,' and what do you suppose it is? Well, if the lodge can afford the expense, it is a real human skeleton; if not, it is a corpse 'gotten up' out of plaster of Paris, dressed in grave clothes and lying in a coffin! This is known in the lodge as the 'scene,' and the wonderful lesson it is intended to impart is that ALL MUST DIE. This 'scene' is intended to produce a very solemn impression; accordingly when the hoodwink in slightly removed from his eyes, this 'silent monitor' is the first thing that meets his gaze; and surrounded by a company of men wearing the most hideous masks, and the sepulchral tones of the conductor as he delivers his charge, while the 'lamps burn low,' it is very apt to produce an 'impression.' This impression varies somewhat with different individuals. To some it is an impression of great sublimity and solemnity; but to others, who have not so great a capacity for tom-foolery, it produces the opposite effect exactly. It rather gives the impression of being in the regions of the damned, surrounded by the imps of darkness. The candidate is supposed to be sufficiently impressed by the time the conductor concludes his 'charge,' and we will now proceed to the chair of our 'venerable warden;' and venerable he is, indeed. He appears to have outlived his generation some thousands of years, and to have been entirely forgotten by death in his universal dispensation. From him we shall hear 'the voice of wisdom speaking from age and experience.' The result of that experience being that he had once been young, but now old, yet had 'never seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread.' And another maxim 'that in the practice of friendship, love, and truth will be found the best safeguards against the ills of life. Forget it not. Forget it not.'

Having benefited by this old gentleman's experience and sage counsel, the candidate is ready to meet the vice-grand, who requires him to repeat his promise of profound secrecy, when he is restored to light and liberty i. e., the blind-fold and chains are taken off. Then he is informed that he is to take a solemn and binding obligation, but the vice-grand informs him most positively that it shall 'not conflict with any of those exalted duties you owe to your God your country or your self.' With this assurance the candidate takes the obligation which consists in a promise to keep the secrets and abide by the laws of the order, to the faithful performance of all which he pledges his sacred honor.

They now sing a hymn as the candidate goes to the principal chair, there to be introduced to the noble grand. As they approach the chair of the N. G., the canopy which conceals him is drawn aside by his supporters, and as he rises and gives the usual signal the lodge is seated and the masks are all laid aside, and everybody makes an effort to appear as respectable as possible, while the N. G. unfolds the mysteries of the order. He asks the candidate's pardon for the very odd appearance of the fellows under their masks, and begs to assure him that the lesson taught by it is that 'men are not always what they seem.' Now comes the mysteries, viz: signs, grip and pass-word; then an explanation of the rites and ceremonies through which he has just been passing."

THE ODD-FELLOW INITIATION.

Rev. J. M. Dosh, now dead, was ten years ago one of the foremost opposers of the lodge system in Iowa. Not satisfied with engaging in the lecture work alone he began the publication of a small paper, the Iowa ——— He had been a member of the Odd-fellow order, and in a letter to Rev. D. Shuck he thus graphically describes the initiatory ceremony:

"The officers necessary to initiate a candidate into an Odd-fellow's lodge are, a noble grand, with his right and left-hand supporters;vice-grand, with his right and left-hand supporters; the warden, or father of the lodge; the inside and outside guards; and the secretary and treasurer. After the candidate has been balloted for and accepted, on the night of initiation he is taken into the preparation room by the one who proposed him, and is prepared by blindfolding. He is then conducted to the door of the lodge by the outside guardian, who knocks on it three times. On hearing this the inside guardian answers the raps by three more, opens the door and inquires, 'Who comes there?' The outside guardian replies, 'A stranger, who wants admission to this ancient and honorable order of firm and independent Odd-fellows.' The inside guardian returns to the lodge and says, 'Most worthy vice, a stranger wishes to enter.' The vice-grand inquires, 'Is he duly and truly prepared?' Inside guard: 'He is.' Vice-grand: 'Is he worthy and well qualified?' Inside guard: 'He is.' Vice-grand: 'Then admit him.' He is then admitted, conducted three times around the lodge, and halted. The conductor then steps up to him and gives him a violent blow with his hand on his shoulder, and at the same time exclaims in a violent tone, 'Stand! presumptuous mortal, and forget not the dreadful scenes you have to pass to show you have the fortitude of man! Stranger, before you farther go a warning you must take! Behind your back is fire, under your feet is a yawning gulf, and before your breast is a pointed instrument of death!' (At this moment a spear or dart, kept in the lodge for that purpose, is pressed against the candidate's breast.) The conductor then speaks to the members of the lodge and says, 'Shall we proceed to torture the victim, or shall we mercy show?' Then all the lodge with one voice exclaim in a low and gentle sound, 'Proceed! Proceed!' The conductor then says, 'Prepare, then, the galling chain; prepare, and bind the victim fast!" The candidate is then chained. The chain is put over the candidate's neck, brought forward under his arms, and carried back and hooked tight on his neck. The conductor then says, 'Light up the furnace and make it ten times hotter.' Then a great rattling of old iron is heard. The conductor then addresses the members as follows, 'Shall we proceed to torture the victim, or shall we mercy show?' They all say, "Mercy show." The conductor then says, "But hark! Hear the agonizing groans of those who are doomed to everlasting woe." Then all groan; and the conductor says, "Then we will show mercy. Stranger, go down on your knees." The candidate kneels, his hoodwink is taken off, and the following scripture is read: "Man that is born of woman," etc. (Job 14: 1.) The candidate is then directed to arise, and is conducted to the death-scene (technically called by the Odd-Fellows the D. S.), and is asked, "What do you most desire?" He is prompted to say, "Light." He is then asked, "If you were brought to light,could you tell who conducted you?" The candidate generally replies in the affirmative. His bandage is then stripped off by one of the brethren, who points to the death-scene, and says, "Is that he?" The "death-scene," or "pale face," is a transparent painting, representing Death in a most horrible appearance, and is so contrived as that the brother whose duty it is to officiate behind it brings his own head, which is covered by a white gauze veil so as to form the head of the "death-scene;" and elevating one hand, in which he holds a long dart, or spear, he casts a fiend-like stare at the candidate, whose horror and apprehensions that he is among the infernal spirits in pandemonium are increased when he beholds all around him the masks of most odd appearance. After a moment's pause the death-scene thus addresses the candidate: "Stranger, all men are born to die, and after death the judgment; and shouldst thou prove false and betray our secrets, remember, remember, remember thy end." At the same time he brandishes the dart at the canditate's breast.

REFORM STORY.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

CHAPTER XXXVII (CONTINUED).—IN WHICH HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

Astounded, indignant, almost questioning whether my ears had heard aright, I listened to the giving of the verdict which was followed by loud applause from Colonel Montforts' adherents, who closed around Jervish and bore him away like a conquering hero. It was the same scene with which the court rooms of western New York grew so familiar in 1826 and the four years succeeding. It was history repeated, a Masonic jury setting aside the plainest evidence for testimony that bore the stamp of perjury on its very face; law helpless under the heel of the lodge, and the same exultant rallying around the murderer.

Rachael was silent for a moment after I told her the result of the trial; then she bowed her head on her clasped hands with a sound that was half a groan, half a sob.

"Mother!" I said, gently.

"I can't help it;" she answered. "Shall secret iniquity triumph forever? I feel as if I could call upon God as the prophet did to rend the heavens and come down."

"But there is a day of reckoning coming, you forget that, mother."

"No; I don't forget it, but it seems such a great way off. What my heart cries out for is justice now. It will be a satisfaction to the universe no doubt when this wretch gets his deserts at the day of judgement through it be a million years hence; but thinking of that will never reconcile me to his going free of punishment here. His acquittal is a standing menace to the peace and virtue of every home. If the lodge can defy law at one time and in one place it can at other times and in other places—and what is more, it will."

"Well," said Anson Lovejoy who had come in to talk over the result of the trial, "Colonel Montfort and his party triumph openly and shamelessly in the fact that they have cleared Jervish. At this very moment some of the jury are over to the tavern having a grand drinking fuddle in honor of their victory. Colonel Montfort I understand is preparing a garbled report of the affair for a Chicago daily, in which he will represent Jervish as a cruelly attacked victim of a malicious Anti-masonic persecution, winding up with a glowing account of his triumphant vindication before the jury. I am rather glad he is going to do so for it will give me a chance to reply. The real facts of the case should be placed before the people, and signed by competent witnesses, so that every honest man and woman who reads it shall be convinced on which side the truth lies."

"That is a good idea if you can get such an article inserted;" I answered, with a vivid remembrance of the times now grown so distant and shadowy, when from one end of the land to the other scarce a paper dared to print an account of Morgans' abduction: when, deaf alike to the appeals of outraged humanity and violated law, editors almost everywhere resolutely closed their columns to the whole subject, presenting that saddest of spectacles in a land of freedom,—an enslaved press.

"O! I think there will be no difficulty about that;" returned Lovejoy. "After publishing one side of the affair they couldn't for decency's sake refuse to publish the other."

"How is your trial before the Grand lodge coming out?" I inquired.

"I hardly know yet, I sent my defence in writing, for I could not spare the money to go in person, and besides I have ceased to consider myself as being under the jurisdiction of the lodge. They appointed a commitee of three to investigate the charges against me and report to the Grand Master. As this committee was composed of an ex-Governor and two ministers I naturally supposed that I should receive gentlemanly treatment from their hands—at least courtesy and common fairness. But this was not the case. They refused to hear any testimony but that of my accusers, and conducted the investigation, which was the merest farce from begininng to end, more in the spirit of examining members of the Inquisition than anything else. I presume they reported adversely, I neither know nor care. Nor shall I wait for the decision of the Grand Master, I have already sent in my renunciation and my reasons for doing so which are substantially these:—'I find that every Mason is under obligation to conceal a brother Mason's crime; that the greater the crime the stronger the obligation to conceal it; that the lodge has the power of life and death over its members; and that if any member knows of his intended assassination he has no right to use any other means of safety than his own physical force or keeping out of the way.'"

Lovejoy spoke with slow solemn emphasis. He had learned at last the lesson that Mark and I learned two score years before from a page stained with martyr's blood and blotted with the tears of the widow The iron had entered into his soul.

Elder Stedman had already delivered one or two Anti-masonic lectures without encountering any very serious opposition. Another was advertised to be given in the Quipaw Creek school house on Thursday evening of this same week.

The party at the tavern had a chance to see the notice which was put up in a conspicuous corner of the public room, and make their own peculiar comments thereon. But remembering that my reader's ears are unaccustomed to vulgarity and profaneness, I shall only transcribe that part of their talk which is of immediate interest in view of the events that are to follow.

Colonel Montfort himself was pledged to settle the score, and under the pleasant stimulus of this recollection there was a general drinking to the health of the gallent Colonel.

"Come boys, now for a rouser;" said the leader as he again filled up his glass. Here's to Maurice Jervish, the brave and innocent."

The toast was responded to with drunken enthusiasm, and in nauseating triumph every glass was drained.

Reader, when the lodge has reached what it takes a good deal of pains to inform us through its orators on St. John's day and other appropriate occasions, is its ultimate aim and object; when it rules the whole of our beloved country from New England to the Sierras; when it elects all our public officers from President and Governor downwards; when it pulls the wires at every political convention and caucus, and controls every town meeting; in those palmy days a man may do that which is right in his own eyes; he may seduce, murder, rob, cheat, commit all the crimes in the catalogue, only provided that he has first had the foresight to learn a few Masonic signs and grips, and has likewise had the discrimination to select his victims entirely from the ranks of cowans and outsiders. A possibility that by that time so many will join the lodge from motives of self-protection as to seriously limit the field of operations would seem at first a slight obstacle in the way of this cheerful prospect. But all the difficulty rises from a superficial view of the subject. There will always be the cowan in the land; men too poor or too shiftless to pay the lodge dues; men too independent to surrender their liberty to a secret despotism; humble followers of the Lord who refuse to bow to anti-Christ; besides cripples and minors, to say nothing of the whole female sex barred out by circumstance or accident from the tender charities of the lodge.

Now as the above mentioned classes taken together, form at a moderate estimate considerably more than two-thirds of the world's population it will be readily seen that the time is not likely ever to arrive when Masonry shall be restricted in its operations by too narrow a field outside.

But we will leave dipping into the future and go back to the party gathered at the tavern who had been drinking just freely enough to be primed for rowdyism.

"I say, let's go over to Quipaw to-night and shut the mouth of that confounded Methodist parson;" proposed one. "The old rascal needs a lesson. Why don't he stick to his business and let other things alone?"

"That's so," was the ready response of another. "He ought to be treated to a coat of tar and feathers, ranting up and down the country, making trouble in the family and setting wives against their husbands. Now my wife hates Masonry like the devil, and ever since she heard that confounded fellow lecture she's been worse about it. Now I say that Masonry ain't a part of a preacher's business. He ought to stick to the Gospel. That's what ministers are for."

It is astonishing, reader, the unanimity of opinion that sometimes exists between two very opposite classes of men. The drunken rowdy who gave utterance to the above edifying sentiments was of exactly the same mind with the Rev. Dr. Easy, who was at that very moment expressing to one of the deacons of his church his sorrow that Bro. Stedman should leave his legitimate business of saving souls to attack such a respectable institution as Freemasonry, with which so many worthy men were connected.

Meanwhile the elder was lifting up his heart in prayer for strength to stand firm against the enemies of the truth; for a spirit of meekness and charity towards all who should oppose; for the presence of Jesus Christ to go with him in might and power, directing the battle to a glorious victory over the hosts of Baal, for the honor of his precious name, and the hastening of his day of Millennial triumph.

The elder rose from his knees and walked to the place appointed, calm as the summer sunset. He would have been calm if he had known that he was to encounter a raging mob ready to tear him in pieces. Into that eternal fortress where the righteous run and are safe, his soul had entered. Girded from Jehovah's celestial armory, with the sword of truth in his hand that forty years of constant warfare had only whetted to a keen edge, why should he fear the face of mortal man?

He began his lecture which was on the relation of the Christian religion to Masonry, in comparative quiet. It was a rather miscellaneous audience; a few earnest intelligent men and women met to learn what they could about a system which pretends to hold in its keeping ineffable secrets impossible to be discovered by profane gaze, yet with curious inconsistency binds all its members under awful oaths never to reveal the unrevealable! A few drawn by curiosity; and a considerable number, among whom was the party from the tavern, whose only design in coming was to disturb the meeting and mob the lecturer.

In the course of his argument he first described in a few brief fitting words the nature and essence of true religion, on which followed naturally a counter description of Masonry. Here the elder began to tread on dangerous ground. So long as he kept to generalities they could afford to listen with tolerable equanimity. They could even bear to be told that the lodge was an emanation from the smoke of the bottomless pit; a low, cunning caricature of Christianity, a revival of the worship of Baal and Tammuz, and every other heathen deity mentioned in Scripture. But when in order to prove these statements he began a rapid review of the lodge ceremonies; the stripping, the hoodwink, the cable-tow, and the mock killing and raising to life again of the widow's son, they felt that it was high time to rally to the support of the ancient and venerable handmaid thus ruthlessly despoiled of all that borrowed attire in which her heart delighted.

"You are perjured," shouted a voice in the audience.

"In what way?" mildly inquired the elder.

The man was about to answer, "By telling our secrets," but the liquor he had drank had not so far muddled his brains that he did not bethink himself in time; and as he had not taken the precaution to "fill his mouth with argnments" beforehand, having filled his pockets instead with another kind of argument very much in vogue with the opponents of unpopular reform, he contented himself with simply reiterating, "You are perjured," and sat down.

The elder, however, was armed cap-a-pie against all such attacks.

"I am perjured, then, because I tell the truth about Masonry. If I was telling falsehoods it wouldn't be perjury. Now," added the elder, turning to his audience, "this man who has just interrupted me is sworn 'ever to conceal and never reveal' the secrets of the order; but he has just revealed them by the very act of applying to me such a term. Which of us, then, is perjured? I speak as to wise men. Judge ye."

But at this point the speaker's voice was drowned in a storm of hissings, hootings, stampings and yellings, while showers of rotten eggs bespattered him liberally from head to foot. The wild elements were let loose. Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame, is no wrapt description of the scene that followed. The elder, after a vain attempt to continue speaking, dismissed the audience as well as he could, and the respectable part dispersed. He himself remained behind to gather up his books. This gave time for a crowd of infuriated Masons to close about the platform, and surround him like a cordon of wild beasts, with cries of "Bring a rail, egg him, feather him, shoot him." But their most outrageous demonstrations of insult and violence did not cause a ripple in that heavenly calm which pervaded the elder's soul.

To long to suffer for the truth's sake is in some souls almost a natural instinct. It was so with Mark Stedman. He was born with those qualities that make a martyr—dauntless courage and intense loyalty to his convictions. And if we add to this the fact of all those long years of service for his Master, deadening every ease-loving, self-interested fibre in his nature; but quickening iu the same ratio every heavenly impulse of his soul, till the ordinary motives that sway men had scarcely more influence over him thau if he had been a glorified spirit, it will be readily seen that if their object was to frighten the elder, he was about the worst possible subject they could have selected for such an experiment.

"My friends," he said, mildly, "you see that I am powerless; you can do with me what you choose. You can take my life, but God rules in heaven, and the truth will triumph all the same—perhaps quicker. My soul is in his keeping; you cannot harm the truth, and you cannot harm me."

The mob was silent for an instant, over awed by the meek daring of this servant of God; then their rage broke out anew in redoubled yells and fresh threats of violence. Suddenly a man among the crowd whose features were partly concealed by a hat that he wore, either by accident or design, pretty well over his eyes, leaped on the platform and with one quick movement extinguished the lights. The same friendly hand seized on the elder, who, by the diversion thus made, and with the aid of his unknown helper, managed in the darkness and confusion to make his escape.

It was Anson Lovejoy, who had seen the notice and made up his mind to attend the lecture, half surmising that there might be trouble. By mingling with the mob as if one of them, he had exeeuted his bold maneuvre, and the elder went home unharmed in person and not a whit discouraged in soul.

"The wrath of man shall praise him, and the remainder he will restrain," said Mark, in talking over the affair a few days after. "Outrage and violence never really hinder the progress of the truth. I believe more Antimasons were made by that lecture than by the two others that passed off quietly."

"And it would make still more," said Lovejoy, "if the press were not so completely dominated by Masonic influence that the most daring attempt to suppress free speech passes unnoticed. That Chicago Journal has actually refused to publish the contradiction to Colonel Montfort's article, though signed by candid, intelligent men who were on the coroner's jury and knew all the facts of the case."

"Well," said I, "editors and ministers are, of all men, most timid about touching anything that savors of reform. The lodge has pretty much one and the same argument for both. Editors don't want to displease their Masonic patrons, and lose thereby a part of their bread and butter. Ministers don't want to preach an unpopular reform and so run the risk of losing a slice off their salaries. And considering what a poor weak concern human nature is, even at its best estate, I can't say I much wonder at it."

"Do you know that a professed minister of the gospel was foremost in the riotous demonstrations the other night?" said Lovejoy. "I tell you while ministers and church members support Masonry, the system will stand. And furthermore, so long as ministers and church members who are not Masons 'think it is a good institution,' so long as they will excuse aud defend it, so long it will be impossible to overthrow it."

"I have beeu thinking of bringing up the subject before our next Quarterly Conference," said the elder. "If the church is ever to cast this viper out of her bosom it must be through agitation from within. If reform does not begin at the house of God, judgment surely will."

THE MONUMENT FUND.

A brother writes from Iowa asking about subscriptions made to the Morgan Mouument Fund, and wishing to know the status of the case. Others may desire the same information.

The expense of the monument with 500 letters as per contract was	$2,500.00
Cost of lot on which it stands	24.00
Extra lettering at 12½ cents a letter	20.00
Incidentals for grading lot, etc	6.73
Total	$2,550.73
Receipt to Feb. 1st., 1883	$2,372.30
Deficit which has been advanced from the N. C. A. treasury	$ 178.43

Several friends made pledges which have not been redeemed. Some of these were conditional. We have used our best judgmeut, and the work has been completed and approved by the committee in charge, and gave general satisfaction to the friends who were present from several States at the unveiling, Sept. 13, 1882. If those in arrears would send in the amounts of their pledges, and a few others add their offerings, the whole account would be squared without expense to the general funds.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.

The tobacco-smoking Masonic pastor of the M. E. Church at Willimantic, Conn., is reported to have said that "the use of tobacco is not a moral question." We must now revise our moral code and leave tobacco, opium, alcoholic drinks on the "free list," their use being morally a matter of indifference.

It is meet that the Congregational pastor in the same town (Willimantic) should reject the inspiration of the Scriptures and declare he would "as soon take a text from a dime novel (if it was true) as from the Bible." This is on a par with another wag who said he "would as soon believe a lie (if it was true) as to believe the truth." That church pays $1500 per annum for such nonsense.

C. T. Collins, of Windsor, says: "Am very much pleased with the improvement in the Cynosure. I would like to know the name of the writer of the Reform Story 'Holden with Cords.' I think it is the best story I ever read."

A conference of Advent churches was held recently in Worcester. Rev. H. L. Hastings of Boston, and other friends of our reform, were present. It is reported that one secret society man publicly renounced his connection with the lodges during the meetings. It is also said that one of the men recently joining the Church of Christ in this city declared his purpose to abandon the lodge. Some other cases similar to these have come to our notice.

AN INSTRUCTIVE ENCOUNTER.

WORCESTER, MASS., Jan. 30, 1883.

"Truth should be spoken at all times but more especially at those times when to speak truth is dangerous." —Coleridge.

A revision should be made of this motto to suit modern ideas,—Truth should not be spoken at all times but should always be suppressed at those times when to speak truth is dangerous to one's popularity. On this principle men are acting. A gentleman told me that he and his mother had disputed on that question many times, he contending that truth should not always be spoken. The practical application which he made of the principle was that, his employer being a Mason, it was best for him to suppress his convictions.

Such action may satisfy some men's views of life, but there are many others whose convictions of duty will not suffer them to keep silence while the chains of error are encircling their fellow men. They prefer to be men, rather than thiugs; to be positive forces rather than nonentities. There are some men who make places both for themselves and their principles, while others suffer themselves to be crowded into narrow places where there is no room for their principles.

The old dodges of lodge men will never cease to be amusing so long as there are fouud poor dupes to practice them. While waiting for a train at a town in Connecticut, I stepped into a barber shop to deposit a little Antimasonic dynamite. The usual number of wiseacres were present, ready to exhibit their profound learning on all subjects from the comet to the last dog fight. After hearing their jabber for awhile I handed them each a paper, telling them I could furnish a more interesting theme and one that was not threadbare.

Perfect silence reigned for a few minutes, till they had scanned the papers and comprehended the situation. The barber was the first to break the stillness with a loug harangue on the glories of Masonry, ending with the usual oracular declaration that if a man would "live up to Masonry" it would be all the religion he would need. There was some muttering of dissent from his views, some inquiring "why it was secret if it was so good;" others asking "What about Morgan?" The last to speak was a tall, good-looking gentleman, who might make a good "Worshipful Master" if fortune favored him. In a very pompous manuer he propounded the usual inquiry which is calculated to make every offending cowan shake in his boots, "Are you a Mason?"

What should be done? Had I not learned the awful fate of one who speaks of Masonry when he isn't a Mason? However, all eyes were turned upon me and the awful question must be answered and the consequences suffered. I was of course compelled meekly to answer, "No, sir." Whereat the whole weight of his awful wisdom was poured out upon me.

"I knew you were not; you don't know nothing about Masonry and you can't know nothing about it. All you can write or speak on the subject won't amount to more'n the snap o' your finger." The barber grunted assent, the crowd evidently pitied me, but the Mason was triumphant. The hand-maid had again been defended, her glory was at its zenith.

Of course I could do no less than congratulate him on having "spoken his piece" very well indeed, assuring him that I had heard Masons speak the same piece in all the New England States, but none of them rendered it any better than he did! Did ever Mason speak without running into a snare? It was presumed that he was right; outsiders could not possibly know anything about Masonry; they might read the books, talk with Masons, read what perjured villains say, or even hear what the learned barber had said of the glories of Masonry, or still more what the wise gentleman before us had said, and still we couldn't know enough to write a newspaper paragraph on the subject! We could not possibly know whether it was good or bad. The gentleman himself was equally ignorant when he joined; he went in a perfect fool, a simpleton, an idiot on the subject; he did not know whether it was good or evil—there was no way of knowing, and strangest of all he now declares that even he can't tell us enough truth about it to enable us to pen a paragraph on the subject. When the barber says it is the best institution on the face of the earth we still do not know whether it is or not; when he says it is a good religion he says also that we can't know that it is so; when he says it is benevolent he declares that it may not be benevolent even though he affirms it to be so; in short, before a man joins he knows nothing about Masonry and after he joins you can't possibly rely on what he says about it, therefore—but the man suddenly remembered that it is "agin our rules" to talk on the subject and his chores needed to be done!

But the crowd did not disperse till one of their number who had lately read Thurlow Weed's letter, told the story of Morgan's abduction and others had argued against the institution in their own way, the barber meanwhile being unable to resist their logic. The good sense of the people, to say nothing of Christian virtue, will bury Masonry in the grave of its own digging, when once the people dare to speak. It is easier to get at the minds of the people than it was a year ago and the Masons are feeling their own unpopularity. They have less courage than formerly and I fancy they have already "seen the handwriting on the wall.

E. D. BAILEY.

PRACTICAL RESULTS.

A minister, in sentiment opposed to secret societies, excused his inactivity in the reform by remarking that he could not see the practical evils which the reformers apprehend. Many suppose that we are contending against possible dangers in the future and that there is no great amount of evil at present. This is a great mistake. We are in the midst of evils which are daily increasing.

No one can connect the cause of these evils with the effect until he has made a careful investigation. It can be demonstrated that the infidelity and scepticism of the country has a congenial home and protection in the lodges; that in fact thousands of young men have been converted to the lodge in lieu of the church; that the infidelity of the lodge is reacting upon the church and poisoning the religious life; that already the lodge has gained a controlling influence in the church and suppressed all discussion of its principles and methods. The latter fact is capable of practical demonstration, for every minister knows that he would lose his position should he attempt a practical discussion of the lodges.

It can be demonstrated that in politics the secret lodges are in a position to defeat the will of the people by manipulating caucuses and controlling elections. It is no secret that the majority of our officers are secret society men and that this is not due to auy superior fitness but to the secret influences exerted in their behalf.

It can be demonstrated that all rings for the robbery of the people are organized on the plan of the secret lodges and there can be no doubt that they rely upon their secret allies for protection from processes of law.

It has repeatedly been demonstrated that secret societies are able to interfere with the course of justice and shield criminals. There are not wanting instances in which witnesses have refused to testify before the courts because their secret obligations required it.

It is well known that some of the greatest dangers of our country have already grown out of the existence of secret combinations and this is a danger which will increase as the orders increase.

When Ezekiel described the secret society which had crept into the temple, (Ez. 8) he did not hesitate to say, "they have filled the land with violence." Whatever corrupts the worship of the people and protects criminals is certainly a promoter of violence and both of these things are being done by secret societies.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE Y. M. C. A. IN THE COILS.

The new book, "In the Coils," was lately presented to the Young Men's Christian Association of Providence, R. I., and two days after returned, with thanks, by the Committee on Library, rejected because of its snoject matter, Freemasonry.

This may seem a small thing to notice. A book is offered and declined. That is all. What more can be said? But there are times when a look speaks volumes, or a word decides the weal or woe of thousands, and it is possible for even so small a matter as the rejection of a book to bear not a little significance.

We detect in this little affair the hidden hand of Freemasonry seizing the opportunity to advance its own interest at the expense of the reading public by depriving them of interesting, instructive, argumentative and, at the present time, highly important reading matter for the single and selfish consideration that such reading matter might be detrimental to the order of Freemasonry; and in this way gaining a little respite against that day so surely coming, when its proud but rotten structure will come tumbling to the ground. And in the smallness of its soul, and the practice of its usual tactics, it screens itself behind the Young Men's Christian Association and uses that association as a cat's paw to do its dirty work We pity the weakness of an association of Christian men in thus allowing themselves to be made the tool of an unscrupulous secret power.

Although Freemasonry is undoubtedly the power behind the throne in this case, yet the hands of the Y. M. C. A. are not entirely clean in this matter. The association publicly professes to be the special friend and advisor of young men, and, on that profession, it should hold their welfare paramount to every other consideration, nor can it consistently neglect to avail itself of every means at hand to increase its store of information regarding the perils of city life to the young and inexperienced, even though that peril seems to lie in a direction hitherto unsuspected.

But we are told that the committee did not "deem it advisable to put the book in the library." Thousands of young men in the city of Providence are exposed to the wiles and snares of Freemasonry, but, nevertheless, the committee did not deem it advisable to put a book into their hands that would warn them of their danger.

Many of God's most devoted servants have left all and followed him in a road too rough for the civilization of the nineteenth century to credit, were it not for the unanswerable facts. This book is founded upon those facts, but the committee did not deem it advisable to place such a book before the reading public.

This association, however, did deem it proper and advisable at a public lecture before the association, a week or two previous to allow the lecturer to advertise upon the back of his progammes, which were distributed in great profusion, a contemplated excursion of Knights Templar to California next summer, to attend the triennial conclave, where as disgraceful Masonic carousals undoubtedly will occur as were witnessed in Chicago a few years ago. Look at it! With one hand a Christian association boosting up a Masonic spree, and with the other crushing down the truth.

"Truth, crushed to the earth, shall rise again."

May the young men of the Y. M. C. A. be filled with the spirit of truth, and although now their spiritual eyes are darkened, and unconsciously they are borne down to a menial position by the heavy yoke of Freemasonry, yet may the time soon come when, seeing their true situation, they may have grace and strength to cast off the burdensome yoke, to stand forth once more free men in Christ Jesus, and with the persistence and elasticity of truth step up to the highest plane of Christian independence.

MR. WEED'S ANTI-MASONIC CAREER.

The sketch of Thurlow Weed's Anti-masonic career, as furnished by the N. Y. Times and published in the Cynosure, is an interesting chapter of political history, and is more free from mistakes than usual in articles on the same subject, put forth by the political press. One or two statements, however, may be questioned.

It is not quite true that the Anti-masonic Enquirer was the first journal in this country to give expression to Anti-masonic opinion. That paper was preceded in such expression by a considerable number of papers; notably, by David C. Miller's Republican Advocate, by the Leroy Gazette and Southwick's National Observer. Mr. Weed took a prominent and early part in investigating the Masonic outrages; had said in the Rochester Telegraph, soon after Morgan's disappearance, that Masons owed it to their good name to clear up the mystery of his disappearance and this so stirred up the craft as to lead to his separation from that journal; but it was months after this before the Enquirer was started. But the first two of the above papers began the warfare on Masonry at once after the outrages, and the National Observer in the winter following.

Although the Enquirer was Anti-masonic from the start, and Mr. Weed favored local political action, he did not support the Anti-masonic State ticket even in 1828, but favored Smith Thompson and Francis Granger for Governor and Lieut. Governor. The "Rochester Committee," composed of Weed, Whittlesey, Works, Ely and Backus, did not wheel into line with the rank and file. The seceding Masons took the lead in the matter of political organization, and there was some jealousy between them and the Anti-masonic leaders who had not been Masons. But the policy of Southwick, the Hascalls, and the long list of seceders prevailed, and a gubernatorial ticket was nominated. Granger was put up for Governor, but the National Republicans wanted his influence, and nominated him for Lieut. Governor. It was for some time doubtful which nomination he would accept, and he was charged (falsely) with writing "twin letters," accepting each, but holding them in reserve for consideration. When he decided to run for Lieut. Governor, there was but a brief time for the Anti-masons in which to find a substitute. They made choice of Solomon Southwick, which the Times' article calls "a miserable nomination." If it was such, it saved the party from disintegration before the first State election occurred, after its organization. Southwick gallantly stepped into the breach, and the party lived to carry on a valiant crusade against a monster of iniquity. He received, at this first State election, 33,300 votes, which made it possible for Granger, two years later, to receive over 120,000 votes, from the same party, and for the same office, and four years later to receive 156,672 votes. Southwick was popular with the people, if not with the politicians, and he showed his usual magnanimity by as cordially supporting Granger, when there was good prospect of his election, as in supporting himself, when there was no prospect of it.

In this I do not detract from Mr. Weed's services in the cause of Anti-masonry, which we all acknowledge to have been great, and for which we should hold him in grateful remembrance.

"THE FACTS STATED."

AVALON, Mo., Jan. 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—With your permission I wish to call attention to some items in the famous

THURLOW WEED LETTER.

On page 11, 12 and 13 of the printed letter is found the statement, made by John Whitney of Rochester in the house of Mr. Weed, of the entire procedure of the Freemasons in disposing of Capt. Morgan, closing with the statement that Whitney of Rochester, Howard of Buffalo, Chubbuck of Lewiston and Garside of Canada, in company with Col. Wm. King, drowned Morgan in the Niagara river. It is stated that Whitney, after concluding his statement, remarked that he was now relieved of a heavy load that for four years had been oppressing him. Had these facts been known at the time that the trials were in progress the object of which was to bring the murderers to justice, the above named perpetrators of the crime would no doubt have been hanged.

This statement, according to the letter, was made in 1831 only five years after the crime. The facts as stated seem to have been committed to Mr. Weed as a secret; for, after Whitney had made the statement, a Col. Jewett, present at the time, remarked to Whitney, "Weed can hang you now," by which he evidently meant that this was the statement of facts that the Anti-masons had been searching for and that Weed being an Anti-mason could now make use of it. Whitney replied, "But he won't;" that is, Weed would not inform on him. Mr. Weed follows this remark of Whitney's with the statement, "Of course a secret thus confided to me was inviolably kept." Here surely Mr. Weed did wrong. He had no right thus to make himself a party to the concealing of this atrocious crime. Most surely a careful observance of his obligations to his country demanded of him that he make these facts known, no matter how much they were committed to him as a secret. If this be not true, that is if his assumption be correct, are not those Freemasons acting on an equally correct principle who conceal the crimes of their brethren given to them as a secret? Mr. Weed seemed even at the time of the dictation of his letters to approve of his conduct at that time, else he would not have said, "Of course a seeret thus confided to me was inviolably kept." (The italics are mine.) In this Mr. Weed surely did very wrong and made himself a party to this crime by failing to make known what had been told him while the criminals were yet living.

We now ask what is the bearing of this procedure upon the part of Mr. Weed, upon the credibility of his letters? An attorney recently having read the letters asked me whether this did not render the entire statement impeachable. Let us see.

The fact that a man in giving a statement of facts criminates himself does not invalidate his testimony concerning the facts stated. One of the best evidences that a man has told the truth respecting a given case is the finding in his statements that which renders him an accessory to crime, if crime has been committed. Thurlow Weed was far from being an idiot. He knew well enough that his concealing that crime put him exactly upon a level with the Freemasons whom we blame so severely for acting on this principle of keeping for friendship's sake secrets in which the entire country is interested. But in his later life acting upon the principles of true manhood, looking with more interest upon the welfare of our country he decided to make known the facts, even at the peril of his own character. He surely would not have fabricated such a story in order to transmit to future generations the knowledge of the fact that he at one time in his life was thus far wrong in his conduct. The explanation can be given of the willingness of Mr. Weed to make statements so derogatory to his own character, except on the assumption that what he gives of the conversation with Whitney is true.

C. J. KEPHART,
[Pres. Avalon College.]

Weston, the pedestrian, is making successful temperance lectures in England on "Exercise vs. Tonics." He claims to have walked 50,000 miles in the last fourteen years on a temperance diet and total abstinence.

AROUND THE TABLE.

Bro. G. W. Donaldson of Washington City may speak first this week. He is not only engaged in the distribution of tracts in the national capital, but publishes a few of his own on practical themes. One of them is on Odd-fellowship. He says:

"These tracts, and your Anti-masonic tracts I am distributing every day, with all the religious papers I can get. This is the work I am doing for the Lord. It is a great pleasure to me to work for him. The harvest is ripe here but the laborers are few. I hope to see the day when we will have a holy band of workers for God. The devil is very strong here in secret orders, but our Captain above can throw them all down, and I hope to see the day when all these secret orders will be banished. God needs workers here who are not afraid to cry aloud and spare not, and expose the works of darkness, and he will have them. Glory to his name.

Another testimony comes from Howell, Mich. J. G. Mason says:

"I have long wished to express my interest in the cause you advocate. When a mere boy I read Wm. Morgan's expose of Freemasonry, and from that time to the present I have been "Anti" from tip to toe. Many a discussion I've had with those holding other views. Many a loss I've sustained in maintaining freedom of speech upon this as upon other matters; and now as ever, I strenuously hold, that secret orders are opposed in their very structure to the best interests of men. They are obnoxious to God and the kingdom of Christ, because conflicting with the tenor and spirit of the Gospel. They put light for darkness, and darkness for light. They bind their adherents to something worse than "chattelism," in that they invoke Satanic methods for the destruction of the body and the deepest oblivion to the immortal soul! Hence I pity the dupe and execrate the system. May God speed the day when every shackle shall be broken, and righteousness and peace shall kiss each other."

Brother Alexander Thomson, whose generous talent has so often enriched the pages of the Cynosure with poetry, tells us:

"I have been stirred by the President's [Pres. Blanchard] letters from Kansas, pointing to the same thought that my own mind has arrived at from the result of my own observation and study, namely, that no great reform can be carried out in this country till the Secret Empire falls."

"A Subscriber" of Sabetha, Kansas, where, we have just learned, the lodge is active and imperious, tells us of another part of the Masonic record which the local papers are never able to get into type:

"There is in our town among the Hiramites, a poor old invalid, who is unable to labor. He is a respectable Christian man and his wife takes in washing to support the family. He asked me for money to buy himself a coat. I asked, "Do you get aid from the lodge?" He replied, "None for two years. I have asked for aid and they say yes, and that's all."

Bro. I. C. Weidler of Eshcol, Pa., was lately visiting in company with Bro. Wiekey, an aged brother, J. J. Hamilton in Roseburg in the same county. In conversation they learned of his feelings toward the lodge and the following incident he has written out at their request. The Cynosure thanks them all for thoughtfully remembering to get this testimony into enduring form. This is the statement:

"In speaking of the oath of the venerable Thurlow Weed relative to the murder of Morgan, I recall a remark of Judge Crawford confirmatory of the account given by Weed.

"At the time of Morgan's murder I was a young man, I am now near seventy-four years old. George Crawford was a man in his prime, a member of the Masonic order. He was also an elder in the Presbyterian church and an associate judge of the Clinton county court. He was a man of irreproachable character and of the strictest probity and integrity and was dearly beloved by his neighbors.

"We were talking about Morgan and I made the following remark: 'Well, the Masons did kill Morgan, did they not?'

"I shall not forget his reply, nor the manner of it. It was: 'I suppose they did; but he deserved it.' Of the language of the above sentences I have a distinct recollection, but I cannot recollect the language that followed; but the import was that he had violated his oath and invoked death upon himself. He did not deny the truth of Morgan's revelations, nor of his murder by the Masons. Your brother in Christ."

Our aged but yet active friend R. W. Lyman of Arcade, N. Y., whom many who attended the Batavia Convention will remember, sends in this. Mark what fearful sentiments prevail among the worshippers at the lodge shrine:

"This place, early settled by some of New England's earnest and good Christian men and woman, is now almost wholly under Masonic and other secret society rule. Of the ministers, two have no objections to the darkness and moral blasphemy of Masonry, the other is opposed theoretically, to Masonry, but two of his most prominent members, of the M. E. sect, are accepted Freemasons and he is dumb upon the subject. If there is any fund in your hand to supply the poor and needy, please send me some of Thurlow Weed's expose and I will faithfully distribute.

One of the highest Masons here claimed to me that Mr. Weed wandered in mind near the close of his life. I met upon the street not long since two Masons to whom I said, 'We are sure to overthrow Masonry, because God fights with and for us.' One of them replied that a greater force than that would be needed to accomplish that end. The other spread out his hand toward the sun and said that it would be easier to extinguish it than Masonry."

LESSONS.

Christian courage is a rare gift. We often see the sad sight of a bold sinner and a fearful saint—and we have all need to watch and pray against cowardice lest at last we should be found among "the fearful and unbelieving." Rev. 21:8. We have here in (18) The test of Christian courage, (19) The standard of Christian courage. "Whether it be right in the sight of God." (20) The source of Christian courage, a living faith. (21 and 22) The Triumph of Christian courage. (23 to 31) The support of Christian courage, first from fellowship with the saints and second from social prayer. This prayer lays hold first of the power of God, second it appeals to the purpose of God, and third it rests upon the blessed fact of God's presence with his people at every step to protect and guide and strengthen. If we were as ready to appeal to the scripture, if we were as often pouring out our hearts in prayer, if we were as strong in faith as these disciples, we would possess like courage and be able to speak the words with boldness.—Notes for Bible Study.

NOTES.

"Whether it be right," etc. The point of the apostles' reply was, that they were not teaching as self-appointed rabbis, but were only acting as witnesses of Jesus. Their words may be thus paraphrased: "The love of Christ constrains us; we cannot drown the voice we know to be God's voice, which forbids us to suppress our message, as ye would have us do, and tells us to bear our public witness to those mighty works we saw and heard during our Master's life on earth."—Schaff.

"For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard." The Christian assurance of conviction compels courage in utterance (Amos 3:8; 1 Cor. 9:16) The "seen" here is the personal character and example of Christ; the "heard" are his instructions.—Abbott. To be silent would have been treachery.—Hackett. Here, then, ought to be our rule,—to do the right. The right, not the profitable; the right, not the pleasant; the right, not the fashionable; the right, not that which leads to earthly honor. And to know what is right, we must betake ourselves, not to any human statute book, but to the divine law. For the Christian rule is to do that which is right in the sight of God.—W. M. Taylor.

The church is no doubt shaken; but it is the shaking of a tree by the wind, which only causes it to strike a deeper and firmer root into the ground.—Baumgarten. Observe the evidence of vital Christian sympathy and fellowship in the primitive church. It is a good sign when the Christian goes to his church as to "his own," for sympathetic help in time of trouble.—Abbott.

"Who by the mouth of thy servant David." Here is a divine attestation of the inspiration of the Psalms of David, and an inspired comment upon the Second Psalm, a portion of which is quoted, and which is peculiarly fulfilled, as a prophecy, in this junction of the church, it foretelling the ineffectual attempts of powerful enemies against Christ and his church, and their utter confusion.—Pierce. When writing this Psalm, David was like a man in a storm, who hears only the roaring of the tempest, or sees nothing but the raging billows. And yet his faith enabled him to say, "the people imagine a vain thing."—David Pitcairn. By citing this passage the disciples express their confidence in the success of the cause for which they were persecuted; for it is the object of the Second Psalm to set forth the ultimate and complete triumph of the Gospel, notwithstanding the opposition which the wicked may array against it.—Hackett.

"Were gathered together." Unity without truth is conspiracy. The wicked unite, not through love, but through their common hatred to him they ought to love. —Augustine.

How vain a thing their gathering together was, may be seen from the death of Pharaoh, the last days of Pilate, and from the fact mentioned by Rev. Dr. William S. Plumer, that, of thirty Roman emperors and high officers who distinguished themselves by their persecutions of the early church, one became insane after a deed of atrocious cruelty; one was slain by his own son; one became blind; one died in captivity; one died of so loathsome disease, that several physicians were put to death because they could not abide the stench that filled his room; five were assassinated; two committed suicide; several died most miserable and excruciating deaths; and eight were killed in battle, or after being taken prisoners. Not one of these things was done by Christians, nor at the desire of Christians.—Peloubet.

The apostles who had shown "boldness of speech" (ver. 13) pray, as conscious of their natural weakness, for a yet further bestowal of that gift, as being now more than ever needed, both for themselves and the whole community. It is well worthy of notice in this first great public prayer of the church, how the spirit of their Master had sunk into the disciples' hearts. No fire from heaven is called down on the guilty heads of the enemies of Christ who would stamp out his struggling church, —only for themselves they pray for bravery and constancy. —Schaff.

"By stretching forth thine hand to heal." And the solitary special sign of almighty power which they pray for, is to be able to relieve such suffering among men as they had often seen their Master remove,—the power to be able to work such works as Peter and John had performed the afternoon before at the "Beautiful Gate" of the temple, when to the hopeless cripple they gave health and strength in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth; and with this name, the earnest pleading of the church of the first days ceased, and as the murmur of these last words, "Thy holy child Jesus" was dying away, the place was shaken where they were assembled together, as though the wings of the descending Spirit had touched the walls and caused the house of prayer to rock, giving this outward sign of his blessed presence.—Schaff.

PRACTICAL.

1. Ver. 19. The test of the true disciple is that he obeys God, at whatever cost.
2. Ver. 20. The true Christian must speak out what he knows and has experienced of the Gospel.
3. Ver. 23. Every person naturally tends to go to his own place and his own company. Like to like.
4. The place for the Christian to go for sympathy and help is his own church.
5. Ver. 24. We should lay all our cares and burdens before the Lord.
6. Because God is the Creator of heaven and earth, therefore he has power to aid his people against all enemies. "For thine is the power," etc., is the fit ending of the Lord's Prayer.
7. Ver. 25-27. The Christian must expect the antagonism of wicked men.
8. Nothing is more irrational than irreligion.—Spurgeon.
9. But in vain do men try to oppose the Gospel; as vain as Xerxes' threatening of the Hellespont, or as defying the power of gravitation.
10. Ver. 28. God controls the results of the bad deeds of bad men. In this belief lies comfort and strength.
11. Ver. 29. True prayer desires not so much to escape from trouble, as to do right in it, and be enabled by it to serve God better.
12. Ver. 31. There are immediate answers to prayers even when there are no visible signs.—Peloubet.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

What Old Testament prophet could not go beyond the commandment of the Lord? What did he say he would speak? What Old Testament prophet, centuries later than the other, said the same thing about what he would speak? What other Old Testament prophet was imprisoned for declaring the word of the Lord? From the Old Testament, how can you show when it is a prophet's duty to speak, and not hold his peace? What should one not speak, and against whom, even though it may be true? How does the apostle Peter say a man should speak? Whose feet did not swell for forty years? Who was sent as a spy at the age of forty years? Who judged Israel forty years? With whom was God displeased forty years? —Scholars' Quarterly.

Many words spoken by well-meaning Christians to their unconverted friends fall to the ground like blighted fruit blossoms through lack of tact. The thought expressed is unsuited to the person and the occasion. A fine example of a word fitly spoken is found in Dr. Bushnell's biography. An intelligent but not religious young lady, after spending a social evening with the good Doctor's family, was escorted home by her courteous host. On their way the brilliant starlight led them to talk of astronomy. The Doctor spoke of the law of harmony which held each little star in its appointed place, and then turning to the bright-minded girl, with a winning smile, he said, "Sarah, I want to see you in your place." This was all he said that was personal, but the thought thrilled her young soul as if it had "dropped upon her from the skies." Its effect was to win her to discipleship. "A word spoken in due season, how good is it!"

A DRUNKARD'S LAST WILL.

I die a wretched sinner, and I leave to the world a worthless reputation, a wicked example, and a memory that is only fit to perish. I leave to my parents sorrow and bitterness of soul all the days of their lives. I leave to my brothers and sisters shame and grief, and the reproach of their acquaintances. I leave my wife widowed and heart-broken, and a life of lonely struggling with want and suffering. I leave my children a tainted name, and a ruined position, a pitiful ignorance, and the mortifying recollection of a father, who, by his life, disgraced humanity, and at his premature death joined the great company of those who are never to enter the kingdom of God.—Selected.

Queen Victoria, in her speech at the recent dissolution of Parliament, referred to "the diminution of the receipts of the exchequer from duties on intoxicating liquors" as a thing "to be contemplated with satisfaction."

A WORD TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We have said but little about changes already made in your paper, and we do not intend to speak of others contemplated in advance; we prefer to submit them to your inspection, and if you are pleased we shall be encouraged, and if you are displeased we shall hope to hear before it is too late to repent and try again. If you think we have done reasonably well, and have faith in the future sufficient to warrant a little extra exertion on your part, we ask you to call the attention of your neighbors to what is being done. If after making an effort you fail to secure a subscription for six months or a year, and can secure a trial subscriber we will send four consecutive numbers for 10cts., to begin with the number immediately following the receipt of the money. Please put us in communication with persons who in your judgment ought to read the Cynosure, and let us see how many we can hold. We are willing to test this plan and e wmake this offer to continue for one month from the date of this issue. Give name, postoffice and State very plainly.

An additional 5 cents secures the Weed pamphlet with a wood cut and brief description of the Morgan monument. Please look out for "Business," on the last page.

TWO HUNDRED.—There is a balance remaining to the credit of the Cynosure Extension Fund. It is designed to aid those who are not able to pay the full price of the paper but can pay a part. We want the names of two hundred such persons to put on our list within a week. Will you look them up and send them along at one dollar per year. The Extension Fund pays 50 cents on each subscription, making up the price to our lowest club rates.

THE FOLDER FUND.

We want names and addresses of the persons to whom you want the Cynosure sent on your subscription to the $15.00 "Folder Fund." We have your money, please do not compel us to remain your debtors. We are anxious to furnish all papers paid for, folded, pasted, trimmed and mailed on time. Why not give your paper a clean financial status as well as a clean face and new dress? If you can't fill the list tell us to do it, and we will remember the poor and make some of God's needy ones glad at your expense.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1883.

MRS. J. B. COLLINS has given the New York Witness a sprightly and agreeable account of St. John's Topeka Convention of Jan. 9th. She thinks it a bright augury for the success of prohibition. She sums up the causes of St. John's defeat as consisting of "the third term," that the Republican party was averse to his "hobbyism", "whiskey money", and the politicians envy and aspirations. The real cause of his defeat she touches thus: "It is hinted that he is not a very great admirer of the lodge, and that this had something to do in the matter." Lay this light-fingered touch on our national political cancers along with the facts, that there are secret lodges which are night caucuses, in rooms from which the public is kept out by a tyler's sword, meeting weekly in the cities, towns, villages and hamlets of Kansas; under a Grand Commander, (Albert Pike) who carries a hamper of brandy while on his rounds of "inspection" of the lodges. Is there a reasonable doubt what defeated St. John? Prohibition is fatal to the lodge, and the lodge knows it.

FRANCES E. AND MARY B. WILLARD.—These two women are sisters-in-law. They compare somewhat as D'Israeli and Gladstone, one leaning to policy, the other to principle. The first is the ablest politician; the other the profoundest woman. It is seldom two such natures meet. They are so unlike that they do not envy, but supplement each other; and, thus far, neither seems damaged by prominence, which is seldom given to mortals. But these two "bright particular stars" must soon be lost in the glow of the firmament of women whom they are calling forth. And let us hope that this coming of women to the front in the temperance cause, will escape the dangers which attend all great changes; and that these two women like the two jets of flame in a compound blow-pipe, may help to melt away the hard selfishness of American human nature, which obstructs and keeps back the coming millennium of prohibition, without losing the beauty of womanhood, or the humility of Christ.

SEWARD, WEED AND GREELEY.

This political trio, fifty-three years ago, led one hundred and twenty-eight thousand Americans to vote against the lodge. Seward wrote the doctrines of the party; Weed was its political mentor, and Greeley its poet and "Tribune of the People." Seward kept his personal faith to old age; denounced secret societies in the United States Senate, and refused even to enter, as an honored guest, a literary society under a pledge of secrecy. Weed concealed the murderers of Morgan to save the life of a friend, (Whitney) but left a sworn exposure at his death; and exposed, too, Mr. Greeley's packing the Vermont delegation of Masons to defeat Seward for the Presidency, in Chicago in 1860. All three of these great men and Anti-masons together soon after 1830, fused all the Anti-masons but those under the lead of Stevens in Penusylvania, with adhering Masons in the Whig party, and so sank the Anti-masonic cause. The only time I ever saw Mr. Seward, was when, in his old age, he was at the lodge-laying of the corner stone of Douglas's mouument, in company with Andrew Johnson, a drunken Freemason of twenty-one degrees.

It is said, and it is true, that the anti-slavery question swallowed up all others, the lodge question among the rest. But this never could have happened if there had been a national religious combination excluding the secret false worships from their fellowships. Hence the incalculable importance of the "NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES" proposed by Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of North Cedar, Kansas, in a recent Cynosure. If this article escaped the attention of his brothers in Allegheny, Pa., and New York city, will Dr. A. M. Milligan look up his brother's proposition, and communicate with this paper. This matter should be seen to without delay, before the national political battle opens.

"THE SMOKE OF THE PIT."

All prophecy is generic, fulfilled by whatever fulfils it, adown the ages. If Nast should undertake to cartoon the teachings of Masons, Mormons, spiritualists, infidels, socialists, and broad-gauge preachers of the present day, he could do no better than to copy the drapery of the ninth chapter of the Revelation. Whatever darkens is smoke; and a false teacher is a locust whose power is in his "mouth," and his "tail," or what follows him. In the above chapter, "A star falls from heaven;" "He opens the bottomless pit;" a smoke rises and "darkens the sun and the air;" locusts come out of the smoke, whose power is "in their mouths and in their tails;" teaching and stinging! No more graphic sketch of the false teachers of the present day, and of their results could possibly be given than is given in this whole chapter. They send their papers to the Cynosure for exchange. The men who hear and are stung by them lose the power of reason and intelligence as if bit by rabid dogs or stung by asps and scorpions; and they all clump together. The Chicago Spiritualist organ, Jan. 20th, prints in full a sermon by an apostate Episcopalian, preached in his church, Brooklyn, N. Y., and hails him as a brother. Verily, "In the last days perilous times shall come," and we are in "the last days." But, in all the churches, there is a turning to and studying the Bible; and we shall "overcome by the blood of the Lamb, and the word of our testimony."

A THEOLOGICAL ATTILA.

Joseph Cook, on the 8th of January resumed his lectures in Tremont Temple, Boston. He begins with a brief "invocation;" sits down and delivers a "prelude" long enough for a lecture; prayer is then offered; he then gives the lecture of the day. He advertises twelve lectures on "Advanced Thought," which he shows, in England and Scotland, rejects Huxley, Tyndall, Herbert Spencer and company; whom he compares to a small troop in London marching in a circle round and round the summit of the hill, and making the impression that they are an army, because no outsider sees the end of them. Mr. Cook claims, for orthodox Christian teaching, a monoply of true "Scientific Method," and calls it Carlyle's "Natural Supernaturalism."

We think Paul's method of dealing with "oppositions of science falsely so-called," better than Mr. Cook's. That Apostle did not affect to fight spurious scientists with their own weapons, or to refute them in their own style. But as against the teachers of "vain deceits" for philosophy, "after the rudiments of the world," Mr. Cook is crushingly and fearfully effective. His seemingly endless research, and his apparently interminable acquaintance with learned men, make him, like Attila, a "Scourge of God" to philosophic charlatans.

GUESSES FOR "DEATH PILLOWS."

Since the above was written we have read another lecture of Mr. Cook, and Lyman Abbott's sharp taking him off upon his theory of a possible preparation for heaven while in and under the article of death. The clash of these two minds is having a salutary effect. Abbott sharply admits that his own doctrine of a possible probation after death for those who have not had a fair chance here, is mere "guess" and "conjecture," not Scripture; and he asserts with as much force as truth that "Christian faith will have nothing to do with guesses in so solemn a matter." And he (Mr. Abbott) declares Mr. Cook's "guess" of a possible preparation for heaven under the "films of death to be a "restatement of the balder form of Universalism which made death the final and perfect means of grace." Here Mr. Abbott is right; and Mr. Cook is equally so, when he denounces Abbott's probation-after-death theory, as "a guess for a dying pillow." As condemning each others' teaching doubts for doctrines, both are sound.

But when Mr. Abbott says that "the great mass of faiths, pagan and Christian," anticipate probation after death, for all who "are apparently neither wicked enough to deserve eternal torment nor good enough to be the companions of the Holy God," he practically teaches a post mortem probation for the mass of mankind; and the Smyths and Thayers will put his "guesses" into their creeds and give them to councils! But "The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream: and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." (Jer. 23: 28.)

Infants, idiots and the human gorillas of Africa, are in no Christian sense in probation. Neither are "half-reasoning" animals. But they all fall under the Atonement of Christ, by which the "creature (creation) itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Romans 8: 21.) But precisely what God will do with animals in eternity he has not told us. Probation is for those who know enough to dispute about and reject it: and Christianity is not a theorem to be proved, but a problem to be worked out and applied to those who hear it. Doubtless Christ's coming in death, to those who have before chosen God and goodness under difficulties and errors, may complete their redemption, as quick as he received the thief on the cross, which is what Mr. Cook hints. And "the Judge of all the earth" will doubtless handle the cases of infants, idiots and animals, brute or human, so as to maintain the moral stability of his government over all the benevolent minds in his universe. And there may be more things and theories bearing on human destiny than ten thousand Messrs. Cook's and Abbott's ever dreamt of. While there is still reserved "Unto them that are contentious and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil." (Rom. 2: 8, 9.) God is more loving and merciful than we are, and hates sin and sinners worse.

"Hope humbly then; with trembling pinions soar:
Wait the great teacher, Death; and God adore."

A STRIKING PARALLEL.

FENIANISM AND FREEMASONRY.

The dispatches of January 21st give brief notes of the Dublin assassination trials that will repay careful study. The statements made give a glimpse of Fenianism "gone to seed," and furnish a key to the citadel of the system of secret orders.

A witness named Farrel was on the stand who was a member of the "Inner Circle." This Inner Circle, it appears, is composed of a few experts and men of nerve, who can be trusted with the execution of any order, or the consummation of any scheme that they may themselves devise. It further appears that while Fenianism did not originally design to employ violence in carrying out its measures, this assassin society originated in and now derives its power from this professedly benevolent, patriotic and harmless secret order. Farrel avers that the major part of Fenians are kept in ignorance of the work and designs of their own assassination society and still adhere to their original purpose; and thus while respectable members are manufacturing public sentiment in favor of secret orders, the vicious and aspiring are assassinating their rulers and subverting the liberties of the people.

The account given by Farrel has a straight forward appearance, and is confirmed by strong corroborating evidence. The similarity between Fenianism, with its "Inner Circle", and Freemasonry with its "Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General" will readily be seen by the most casual observer. Their methods and fruits present an exact parallelism. Fenianism and its allied secret orders create public sentiment and fill the minds of the people with distrust, and then John Mullen with the thugs of his trained band, butchers ministers of justice in Phœnix Park, in broad day-light, and, aided by their emissaries, make good their escape. Freemasonry and its allies manufacture public sentiment; impress the people with their dignity and great antiquity; appropriate the offices of both church and state, and, while professing benevolence and good works, murdered Prichard, Miller, Morgan and others whom their Inner Circle had marked for vengeance, and now proscribe every man who exposes their movements or publicly discusses their principles.

The British government in attempting to ferret out and bring to justice the murderers of Lord Cavendish and Secretary Burke, is confronted by a powerful secret league whose efforts to screen their accomplices in crime are only thwarted by the revelations of Farrel and others who are denounced as "perjured villains," because they refuse to keep their "oath" and "ever conceal and never reveal," the crimes of their brethren. The State of New York attempted to ferret out and bring to justice the men who murdered Morgan, but the civil authorities were baffled and ultimately defeated. So complete was the victory of Freemasonry that this bloody secret of the lodge would have doubtless perished with the generation that mingled in those exciting scenes had not the facts been given recently under oath by the late Thurlow Weed.

Gladstone and Parliament, having discovered in the secret orders a foe dangerous to the personal safety of honest subjects and hostile to the very life of the government itself are taking vigorous measures for their extirpation, while as yet our own government beset by the same dangerous system of secret orders is indifferent and inactive. Politicians who see the danger cower before it. Ministers as a rule either wink at the sinfulness of this system or feebly protest against its inroads upon their churches.

When the secret scheme was matured in the Inner Circle of Fenianism then the British government was startled by the intelligence that her ministers of justice were being butchered in cold blood under her own flag, and our nation resting supinely may be startled from her delusive dream of security to contemplate like hideous crimes committed upon her own soil by secret assassins. The Freemasons, the Odd fellows, the Knights of Pythias and a hundred kindred cabals are at work as the Fenians and their allies worked manufacturing public opinion, and like causes produce like effects. Combinations of men, whose aims and acts are of such a nature that personal safety and public justice can be maintained only by violating the oath or bond by which they are united, are just objects of suspicion, and when, as in the murder of Cavendish and Burke by the "Inner Circle" of Fenianism or the murder of Morgan by Freemasons, they disclose their true character by their own acts of blood, indifference on the part of individuals savors strongly of crime against our commonwealth, and inaction on the part of the church and state is little less than treason against divine and civil government.

—Our special correspondent engaged for Washington has, since his return, been prevented by sickness in his family from furnishing the hoped-for facts from the Capitol. Bro. Milton Ford, in charge of our building, will see that the interests of the N. C. A. are properly cared for. Other matters have so absorbed the thought and time of all at this office that little has been done with direct reference to the Washington movement.

—We are occasionally reminded of the interest felt by others and assured of their approval by encouraging words and small donations. Such expressions of approbation are duly appreciated, and we have learned that "many a little makes a mickle," but those of our friends who have received bountifully in trust for their Lord, will remember his words, "Where much is given, much also will be required."

—Bro. S. E. Starry of Iowa called at the Cynosure office last week, and, missing his train for the East, remained over night. He expected to speak in the Northeast Pennsylvania meeting on Thursday. Bro. Hinman, as may be guessed from his letters, is at the same convention. The presence of these two workers will cheer the faithful Pennsylvania brethren who have nobly stood for the truth.

—On the subject of co-operative stores, which formed part of the discussion of the labor problem last week in our columns, a correspondent of the New York Witness writes that several successful enterprises of the kind exist among the farmers of Kansas.

—The Alpha Delta Phi college secret society has some 500 members in the northwest who keep fresh the memories of their college folly by a great annual banquet. This banquet was spread Tuesday evening. Dr. H. A. Johnson, a 32 degree Freemason was presiding officer, and Henry Ward Beecher, an active member of the lodge, was a participant.

—The "Oriental Consistory of the Valley of Chicago," which is the name given by the poetic license of the lodge to the Scottish Rite Freemasons of this city, lately put twenty-seven dupes through their rites. To close the job a grand banquet was eaten, after Henry G. Perry, a 32 degree Episcopalian preacher had offered the semblance of a prayer over it, and then the company of candidates were elevated into the "military grade" of "Sovereign Princes of the Royal Secret." Men who go through this business are unfitted surely to be sovereign princes of anything else but some nonsense they call "royal secret."

—With the new ritual of Odd-fellowship, adopted a year or two since in Toronto, have come in aristocratic degrees and aristocratic methods of initiation. Wealthy Masonic lodges have for years carried through the lodge ceremony with lavish display and great spectacular effect, but the Odd-fellows have been content to plod in a humbler path more suited to the character of their members. A late number of the Odd-fellow's Talisman shows that this order is beginning to put on airs, and round about Boston the lodges are training a set of members to go through the ritual in grand style. These twenty-five picked men travel about like a cheap theatrical society. The charitable order sends them to a hotel. They draw a crowd to the lodge with their gay costumes, paraphernalia, military precision and other dramatic effects. The initiation which was designed to be formidable with its bug-bear solemnity and masquerade thus becomes as good as a second class variety theater.

A good man and a staunch reformer, at Union Mills, Bro. A. Rodgers, has departed this life. After a brief illness of lung fever he fell asleep in death, closing a life of usefulness. A few years ago God led him out of secrecy, and made it his duty to renounce the evil institution, which he did in the name of the Lord, without fear. He left a good evidence of God's saving power, testifying to the ability of God to save men from the galling yoke of oath-bound secret societies. May God bless the bereaved family and raise up a host of friends for them.

WHY ODD-FELLOWS USE THE BIBLE.

In his tract on Odd-fellowship, Bro. G. W. Donaldson, of Washington City, presents this argument, which is forcible and original:

"Why do Masonry and Odd-fellowship take their sacred lessons from the Christian Bible? Why not from the Koran or the Book of Mormon? Why are there no degrees of brotherly love taught by Odd-fellows in Dahomey or the Cannibal Islands? The answer is, The lodge depends on Christ for their ideas of virtue. Christ has come; he has elevated mankind by his teachings, sufferings, death, and by sending his Holy Spirit on Christians; and their den of hell (so-called lodge) impudently put his Bible on a level with the false revelations, which they never quote. When Christianity has civilized a land, these lodges stand by and seize on the Christian virtues as their capital stock and claim the merit of originating the virtues thus stolen from Christ; and in the degree called Brotherly Love they dramatize Christ's wonderful parable, while they treat its author with silent contempt. The lodge is thus deism and infidelity. If it were not, deists and infidels would not love it as they now do. With amazing effrontery, which sinks below shame, they claim superiority for the lodge as a world-wide religion, and cast out Christ whose scriptures give them their ideas of virtue, and whose civilization furnishes them members, degrees, fees and dues. The idea that brotherly love can be promoted by such a concern is simply preposterous. The pastor of the Congregational Church in Sandwich, Illinois, who has been both Mason and Odd-fellow, said to me, 'It is the devil's worship, as you say.' 'Why, brother,' said I, 'you never belonged to them, did you?' 'Yes,' he replied; 'when a clerk in a business house in New York I joined both orders, and see at this distance the faces of myself and the members. The whole thing seems to me diabolical.' There is but one person in the universe who can overthrow these secret dens—that is our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; and may the day speedily arrive. The direst of all hatred is counterfeit love. It is the best thing corrupted into the worst. It is indeed the kiss of Judas. Such is the brotherly love of Odd-fellowship. True love is natural; that of the lodge is artificial. Bible love worketh no ill to its neighbor; lodge love worketh no good. This Odd-fellowship is a counterfeit or mimicry of the friendship of Jesus Christ."

REFORM NEWS.

NOTICE.

To the Friends of Reform in Southeast Pennsylvania and Adjoining Localities.

We, the undersigned, were appointed a committee by the official meeting of King Street Church, Chambersburg, to call a general convention of the anti-secrecy reform advocates to meet in Chambersburg, Pa., Feb. 13th, at 7 P. M., and to continue through the two following days. Speakers of ability are expected to be present and to address the meeting.

S. E. Starry, of Iowa, is engaged to attend this meeting and work the degrees of Masonry. Free entertainment will be provided all friends from abroad.

BRO. HINMAN'S LETTERS.

INDIAN TRAINING SCHOOL.

Carlisle, Pa., Jan. 29, 1883.

Dear Cynosure:—On the 25th inst. I left Shippensburg on the C. V. R. R. and rode twelve miles to the northeast where I spent several days with David LeFevre, a minister of the Disciples, and whose wife is a niece of Governor Ritner, inheriting from him an intense opposition to secret societies. I lectured twice in the Disciple church and preached twice; but several protracted meetings were in progress and the attendance was small. The only secret society in the vicinity (I. O. O. F.) has recently ceased to be.

To-day I came here eight miles and have visited the Indian Training School at Carlisle Barracks. Carlisle is a fine town of 8,000 to 10,000 inhabitants and the county seat of Cumberland county. The government buildings here were burned by Gen. Lee, but were rebuilt soon after and are large, comfortable, but rather inelegant. They have been occupied as a school for Indians during three years, a much more useful purpose than as a nursery of war. There are now in attendance 377 pupils.—261 boys and 116 girls. The extremes of age are seven and twenty-two. They come from twenty-five different tribes, each having a different language, with nothing in common but a sign language, in which Southern Indians are said to excel. To learn to speak English is one of the greatest obstacles to civilization, the difficulty being greater with adults than children.

I visited the ten school rooms, each under the care of an efficient lady teacher. The deportment was excellent. A few classes went to their blackboards and wrote some examples in arithmetic rapidly and neatly, but most were engaged in writing letters to their friends, the day being set apart for that purpose. I saw and read a number of these letters. They were written in a clear, bold hand, without blots or erasures. Those who have been here but a short time make many mistakes in their English; but others write with great accuracy of language and style I saw the whole 377 at dinner and had no doubt as to their ability to do justice to a "square meal." While they ate I conversed with the matron, a lady educated at Oberlin, and acquainted with nearly all the workers of the American Missionary Association. She told me that the cooking and laundry work was done by the Indian girls; that the boys took care of their rooms, keeping them clean; that all attended Sabbath-school, and much pains was taken in Christian instruction, and that quite a number profess faith in Christ.

After dinner with Captain Pratt, I was conducted through the work shops. The first half of each day is devoted to study. The last half to work. They make carriages, harness, tinware, shoes, and clothing; besides cultivating 129 acres. The shops have been a source of revenue to the government. Scholars are paid for work at the rate of one dollar for six days' work, and the money is kept for them until they return home. There has been some sickness incident to so great a change of habits, but not great; about twenty-five deaths in all. Those coming from the more civilized tribes are sick the least.

I found Captain Pratt a true philanthropist and an excellent Christian. He has evidently studied the Indian problem with great care and from many points of observation. His plan is embodied in two words: Educate, absorb. Cease to treat Indians as a distinct race. Educate them and diffuse them among civilized people, and they will be civilized. Concentrate them and pauperize them and they will be heathen paupers and savages. By education of course is meant Christian education.

I was not surprised to find Captain Pratt, like all thinking Christians, strongly opposed to all secret order, though he had found time to give the subject but little attention. I left strongly impressed with the moral grandeur of the work he is doing, inconceivably nobler than the greatest achievements of arms.

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Scranton, Jan. 31,—To day this body has its annual reunion at Wilkesbarre, Pa. The cars are thronged with men decked in the tinpelry of the order. Of a large number I saw at Harrisburg nearly every one puffed his cigar. The saloons reap a harvest. Multitudes of silly women are excited over the show, and are pressing to the front. I am led to consider:

1. There is no good object that these men have in view but could be better accomplished by an organization open to public inspection for approval or criticism.

2. All war is barbarism. Whatever revives the memories and promotes the spirit of war hinders the progress of Christian civilization, and postpones the triumph of the Prince of Peace.

3. The memories of the war of the Rebellion are a source of great bitterness of feeling, especially at the South. To keep alive these memories is to promote sectional strife and retard the peaceful progress of the nation.

4. All powerful secret orders are a standing menace civil government. This is especially true of secret military orders; nor does the fact that these men have sworn to obey the Constitution of the U. S. make the danger materially less. Their conceptions of what the Constitution requires will always be what their leaders affirm. Without impugning the character of our military men, yet how easy it would be for Gen. Grant to use this great power for other than benevolent purposes. Suppose such an emergency to arise as the disputed election of Hayes and Tilden; how easy to use this great army in a way which they might think was strictly constitutional and yet distructive to the liberties of the people. Unless our nation is an exception to all others, the teachings of history abundantly show, that all such powers are dangerous to the body politic, and the men who maintain them would do a service to their country and to Christian civilization if they would at once disband.

ECHOES OF THE STATE CONVENTION.

Emporia, Kan., Jan. 26, 1883.

The Emporia Convention is over more than a month ago, but its ghost "won't down." Even the holiday season with its all-absorbing revelries has not sufficed to drown the echo of its voice. I give herewith a few extracts from the Emporia Republican which will illustrate what I have said.

The following from Hartford, a railway station near Emporia, is suggestive:

Next Friday night there will be a discussion at the school-house upon the question: "Resolved, That the existing condition of things demands the formation of a new political party. All are invited to attend.

The subject: "Resolved, That secret societies are in

THE HOME.

GOD SPEAKS.

God speaks to hearts of men in many ways;
Some the red banner of the rising sun,
Spread o'er the snow-clad hills has taught his praise;
Some the sweet silence when the day is done;
Some, after loveless lives, at length have won
His word in children's hearts and children's gaze:
And some have found him where low rafters ring
To greet the hand that helps, the heart that cheers;
And some in prayer, and some in perfecting
Of watchful toil through unrewarding years:
And some not less are his, who vainly sought
His voice, and with his silence have been taught—
Who bare his chain that bade them to be bound,
And, at the end, in finding not, have found.

OUT OF A SNOW STORM.

"It is an ill wind that blows nobody good," says the proverb; but William Grafton, with whom our story has somewhat to do, was inclined to lose faith in this particular proverb. So hurrying through the little evening chores on his poorly kept farm, he muttered to himself: "A perfect beast of a night. I'll just let the old cows starve before I'll stay out another minute," and throwing down the bushel basket he walked hurriedly toward the house.

"I'd like to know how much good this ill wind'll blow any one," he grumbled, as he shook the snow from his coat and seated himself beside the fire.

Mrs Grafton moved silently around the room, as she prepared the evening meal.

The children, Frank, Elsie, Lena and baby, retired to the farthest corner of the room at the entrance of their father, and their mirth, which had been quite boisterous, became wonderfully subdued. "Don't be in such a mighty hurry, Fannie, about that pretense of a supper. I'm sure I don't care for it. I declare this place will be the death of me, and its gloomy enough without that long face of yours."

"I'll just ride down to the corner house and get some life and heat into me," said the ill-treated husband, and shuffling himself into his coat again, he went out into the storm, closing the door with no very gentle touch.

Perhaps you may imagine the poor wife seating herself to that feminine luxury—a burst of tears and grief: but no, Fannie Grafton had long ago learned that lesson of bitter, silent endurance forced upon every drunkard's wife.

"Frank," said she, turning from the window where she had often stood, with the same aching heart and sad eyes, "your father is saddling Turk, and if he is out late to-night, and—and at all intoxicated, he can not manage that horse. Run out dear, and tell him you will saddle up Bessie for him."

Frank obeyed rather reluctantly, and soon returned: "I knew it would only make him angry, mother. He was just furious. I shouldn't care either, if he did not blame you for everything. It's a perfect shame; 'lonesome' and 'dull" indeed!

"I wonder what makes it so, and if he ever thinks how we endure the loneliness and poverty, and everything else, while he is off enjoying himself.

"Oh! I wish I was a few years older; then I'd take you and the children away and work for you, and let father fish for himself."

"Frank, Frank, remember you are speaking of a parent whom, after all, you are bound to respect. And, my boy, remember that others as far gone as your father have been reclaimed, and let us not forget our duty toward him," said Mrs. Grafton gently to the boy, whose passionate outburst had been provoked by his father's conduct.

"Papa used to be as kind and good as Minnie Maynard's papa is," said little Lena, looking up from her primer, and the hot tears sprang to the mother's eyes as she made some reply to the little one.

The short winter day had closed dismally and stormily, and Mrs. Grafton and Elsie, a girl of twelve, washed the supper dishes, put the little ones to bed and brightened up the room, while Frank was busy outside with his little evening duties.

The kitchen lamp was placed where its glimmer could guide a certain benighted traveler; Mrs. Grafton drew her low rocker to the table and bent over her huge basket of mending; Frank and Elsie sat opposite engaged with their lessons for the morrow, and quiet reigned in the room where the ruddy firelight sent a cheerful glow over the bright rag carpet and carefully dusted furniture, and up to the earnest faces bent over books and work. Five, six, seven and eight strokes issued from the lungs of the clock in the corner, and Elsie, closing the grammer on the well-conned page, reached over for a little garment from her mother's basket, and busied herself in restoring it to a whole condition.

Shortly after, Frank also closed his algebra with a sigh of relief, and placed his books in a neat pile.

"Mother," said he, "you are not going to sit up for father to-night, are you?

"Yes, dear, I have an uncomfortable presentiment that something is about to happen, and could not rest if I did retire; but you and Elsie had better go to bed, for your father may be very late."

"No, sir, we'll stay too, then," answered Frank, while his sister added: "Yes, mamma, and instead of some one of us reading to-night, will you not tell us something about yourself and father, when you were young?"

Mrs. Grafton smiled sadly. She had been very reticent about her past life, but she felt that her children ought to know something of it.

"Well," she began, "there are not many important events to relate, but, as you know, I was born and raised in Boston. Father was an industrious machinist, and, through frugality and honesty, saved sufficient means with which to support and educate his family quite respectably. There were six children of us. Your uncle George, whom you remember visiting us four years ago, is the eldest, and at his own wish and that of our parents, entered the ministry and is a pastor in Boston. Sister Helena came next, and is now in London with her sailor husband. Next eldest is Henry, the little merchant we used to call him, now a great merchant of New York; but I fear his wealth and prosperity have brought him very little happiness. I am next to Henry, while the twins, Frank and Elsie, are the youngest. These two were always inseparable, and when they were married—Frank to Ella Hartley, and Elsie to Charley Hartley—we laughed and said: A very convenient game of change partners.'

"They are now with their families in far California. So you see, our little band is widely scattered, while our dear parents have removed long ago to the new Jerusalem.

"I was always the headstrong child of the family. Yes, indeed (as her children exclaimed at the idea).

"William Grafton and I had not been long acquainted before we were more than friends. He was very gay and fascinating, good-hearted and kind.

"My friends, though they liked Will, feared his weak points would ruin him; and I did not remonstrate with him on account of his habits or use the influence I might have exerted, but excused him on the plea that young men must sow their wild oats, and surely I could not wish for a more indulgent husband. So we were married, and your father's parents, dying soon afterward, left us, their only children, this farm and a snug little sum in bank.

"But my husband's gayety and love of company did not decrease with his growing cares and family, and I never minded his actions so long as he treated us with all his old fondness and off-handed kindness, and it is just in the past few years that the demon has asserted his supreme power over your poor father, to the exclusion of wife and children.

"When your uncle George was here, he advised me to open my eyes and do what I could to save ourselves from the ruin that threatened.

"But though I was a little uneasy, I assured George that William, though a little reckless, was kind as ever.

"Ah, how little did I think it would come to this! By struggles and privation we barely manage to live.

"All we had in bank has gone to the winds, and now your father is angry with me because I will not consent to the sale of the farm that he may have more money to waste with his profligate companions.

"My children, it is hard that our sin and neglect are visited on you, for I am to blame as well as your father in a sense. Oh William! what has come over you?" the poor woman wailed, completely broken down, the long pent-up-grief thus venting itself.

"Don't, mamma, please don't," said Elsie soothingly, while Frank only brought his fists together, vowing vengeance on some one.

"You know, mamma, we have prayed for father so earnestly, and I do believe God will not let him go much further." With these and other words Elsie succeeded in quieting the violence of her mother's grief, and the old, patient look settled over the sweet features again.

"What is that?" exclaimed Mrs. Grafton, a few moments later, springing to her feet, and growing a shade paler, if possible.

Frank sprang to open the door, and there beheld the riderless Turk, tearing madly through the yard, the white foam frozen to his nostrils, and the saddle dragging at his heels.

Mrs. Grafton fell back in a swoon, and Frank, leaving her to the care of his sister, hurried from the house and over the fields to Mr. Maynard's.

It took but few words to explain, and the kind neighbor lost no time in following Frank, while his thoughtful wife proceeded to lend her assistance at the Grafton cottage.

Swiftly and silently over the frozen road sped the two anxious ones, looking right and left in vain for a trace of the unfortunate man.

Mr. Maynard shuddered as they approached the precipice over the creek, and Frank drew back, not daring to face the scene that might there be depicted, for he knew that Turk was always skittish at this spot.

Mr. Maynard leaned over the embankment and peered a moment in breathless dread; then, trying to speak calmly, said, "Quick, Frank, run down after me, and bring the lantern carefully."

Frank staggered, but then with that strength that is sometimes given to the weakest of us in great emergencies, he grasped the lantern and sprang down the side of the road. There, on the frozen side of the creek, lay a dark object, and with the aid of the lantern and the pale light of the stars, they saw the mangled and apparently lifeless body of William Grafton.

"Oh! is he dead?" gasped Frank.

"No, I think not," returned his companion; "but run to the corner house for blankets and a wagon. Stop for Dr. Merrill on your way back, and be very quick."

Frank was on a brisk run before his friend had scarcely finished speaking, and he sped through the gloom with a bursting heart, but light footsteps.

Meanwhile, Mr. Maynard lifted the insensible man from the ice, and succeeded in getting him to the shore, where he wrapped his own great coat about the sufferer and proceeded to wash the blood from his hair and face. But it had frozen, and, sick with the ghastly sight, Mr. Maynard could only turn and gaze anxiously in the direction Frank had taken.

About three-fourths of an hour had elapsed and then the lonely watch was ended, for the doctor and Frank drove rapidly to the spot, and by great exertions they succeeded in lifting the poor body to a comfortable position among the blankets of the wagon.

The proprietor of the corner house had sent these, but who could expect him to come and view another victim to his diabolical though lawful (?) traffic.

In the terrible moments of suspense while Frank was absent, Mrs. Grafton had become somewhat calm, and was prepared for the worst. So that when the men lifted the limp figure from the wagon she neither cried out nor fainted, but proceeded to show them the room and the bed on which to place her husband.

We need not dwell on the misery and watching and exertions of that long night. It was over at last and when the gray dawn looked in upon the anxious group around the bedside, the sufferer, opening his eyes for the first time, looked from one loving, pitying face to another.

"He will live!" exclaimed the physician in a glad whisper. Then there were thankful tears shed and thankful prayers offered, where before they only waited for the death angel's triumph. Weeks of slow, tedious convalescence followed, when the sick man seemed almost overpowered with the cravings of his appetite, but the prayers of his wife and children were being answered, and the resolute look in William Grafton's face as he battled with his foe, told to those most interested that there was more than a human will aiding him in the struggle.

The mild days of spring were approaching, and the invalid began to take new life and was able to leave the house. Up to this time the family had contrived to live on the little sum that they realized from the sale of eggs, butter and poultry.

Frank had left school, and was employed at Farmer Dodds'. The neighbors had been very kind, and the winter was over, and truly the Lord did provide. Every day that was at all pleasant, Mr. Grafton might be seen in some part of the farm, walking to and fro with an expression of deep thought on his haggard face. He would walk up and down the fields inspecting the drainage and prospective yield of his meadows and orchard. Then he would visit the stable, turn the few horses and cattle into the yard and make calculations on them, and sigh over what might have been. Another day he climbed the house to view the shingles and chimneys, which certainly needed attention.

All this made Mrs. Grafton very uneasy; but she need not fear her husband losing his mind, for he said one evening when the entire family was assembled in the pleasant kitchen: "Fannie, I have made a careful inspection of the farm and buildings, and have opened my eyes to the enormity of my sin, and, if you can forgive the past, with divine aid I will do better in the future." We can well imagine how these words were received.

The next week saw the beginning of such doings as had not been enacted on the Grafton farm since the day of old John Grafton. Frank was taken home, men were hired, and the work of plowing and sowing and repairing begun. And when Mrs. Grafton's brother Henry made a flying visit from New York to see the extent of his favorite sister's misery, he was so pleased at William's evident reformation that, on his return, he opened his hitherto close pockets and sent a check of five hundred dollars.

A complete and happy change took place in the family. Frank was again sent to school, Elsie was a member of her uncle's family in New York, where she was attending school preparatory to teaching, and the little ones had entirely ceased to think of papa as the terror of the family.

It is true that these things were not accomplished without many failures on Mr. Grafton's part. More than once his former companions enticed him to their haunts, and he was sometimes tempted to give up in despair, but the God to whom he looked held him back for a happy and useful life.

And when in the many happy winters following, the snow and wind blew and howled around the cozy farmhouse, William Grafton used to say: "It was just such an ill wind as this that blew us good, Fannie," and Mrs. Grafton smiled, for she knew that to a mightier power than a north wind did both her husband and herself attribute praise.—Christian Press.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

STORIES OF MY BOYS.—IV.

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

As Tom Jones was on his way to school one morning a hand was laid lightly on his shouldier and a broadcloth-coated individual thus addressed him:

"Are you one of the boys who belong to the Sabbath-school class taught by the pastor's wife—over at the brick church?"

"Yes, sir," replied the boy, respectfully, "I'm Tom Jones."

"And your class meets together after Sunday-school do you not? What is the object of those meetings?"

"The meetings have stopped now, but the object was to study about secret societies and see how wicked they are according to the Bible."

"Wicked! Why, a great many good men, and ministers too, belong to—the Masonic lodge, for instance."

"That may be," returned Tom; "but it don't make Masonry right, just the same. And they're good in spite of the wicked institution, if they're good at all—and as for the ministers they ought to know what it is, and I think every one of them is either a hypocrite or a fool!"

"What!"

"I mean that's what I think. Likely some ministers belong who don't know but very little about the institution and try to make out it is all right with the little knowledge they have of it.—but the hypocrites do know and just go on dipping into the heathen mysteries which aren't very mysterious after all, and then go into their pulpits and beg money to make Christians of the heathens."

"Tut, tut, boy; what should you know about it?"

"Why, sir, don't everybody know now-a-days? There have been so many among them whose conscience has been waked up and who have asked pardon of the Lord for harnessing themselves to such a wicked thing and taking the awful oaths they do, and the horrible penalties they promise to undergo if they break them—there have been so many such, sir, that most everybody knows all about it, and if they don't it's their own fault. I think its the wickedest thing in our country."

"Oh, well, you're only a boy and it is only what you think."

"No sir, please. It's what the Bible says. It says the Lord didn't say anything in secret; so its wrong to be secret, I drove a nail in there. Then these men who have repented of the awful oaths they took, say that what they do in secret is wicked, and I drove a nail in there. Then one can see with his own eyes some of their wickedness—like the shielding each other from justice and I drove a nail in there. No sir, please, I know it's wicked."

"But remember that most people believe in it."

"But that's nothing, sir. A thing isn't right because it is popular, is it? And I never heard any one argue for it who took the Bible to prove it was right."

"Well, good day, boy."

"Good day, sir;" and each went his way, Tom wondering "who that chap was, anyway," and the Rev. V. Straightlace muttering to himself something about a "worm threshing a mountain"—but whether he used the figure with reference to the popular Rev. and young Tom Jones, or the giant evil of secretism and the principle of reform is not known.

SLANG.—LISTEN, BOYS.

"Bully for you. You're a trump."

Involuntarily my hands went up to my ears. I felt as if I had been shot, while seated at my open window looking out upon a group of boys playing ball with all their might and main. Now if they had been ragamuffins their language would not have appeared at all incousistent, for dirt, tatters and slang go together very well; but they, on the contrary, were the well-dressed, "supposed to be well educated" sons of gentlemen, so you see I was doubly shocked.

"Go in lemons; hit him again, Charlie." Again my ears were covered; certainly I was hit again, and hurt too, whatever might be said of the ball.

"My eye, what a jolly game; he beats you all to flinders, Ned."

"Oh! Oh! Oh!" cried I; and vacated my seat at the window until that game was finished; then I called the boys in and this is what I said to them:

"Boys, you have had a nice game of ball this beautiful morning, but you've spoiled it all, every bit; shall I tell you how?"

"If you please," said victorious Charlie.

"Do you know old Jethro Miller, the half-crazy pauper, who begs from every one he meets a dime to buy 'a bit o' backy'? Do you remember his tangled beard, besmeared with tobacco juice? his mouth drawn out of shape and fairly slobbering over with filth? his discolored teeth? his brown, repulsive lips?"

"Oh! yes, ma'am?" and all their respective noses were upturned.

"Well, now, do you wish your mouths to be figuratively what old Jethro's is literally? If you do not, then stop using such slang phrases as 'Bully for you,' 'Go in lemons,' 'Confound his picture,' 'Darn it all,' etc. Why, boys, I feel as if I must scour my teeth and rinse my mouth, even after once using them for your edification."

The noses were upturned no longer, and the brown cheeks were all crimson with shame.

"Once more, boys; when you had finished that beautiful boat you made this summer, you turned it upside down and covered it with pitch to prevent its leaking. Your hands were besmeared; your clothing, too, was stained, and Oh! what a time you had, scouring and cleaning: for all that, brown patches, dingy and ugly, on your hands, bore testimony for many days to the fact that you had handled something unclean. Now just such discoloration does the use of slang produce upon your souls, that God sent into the world pure and white.

"How vile, how utterly senseless, too, are many of these slang expressions! What ideas do these phrases give expression to, which might not be infinitely better understood if clothed in good, pure, English words!

"Now I will tell you what I am going to ask of you this morning. Each of you is the son of respectable pareuts; each of you counts himself to be a young gentleman; as such, give me your hands, and with them your promise, earnestly, manfully, to wage war against this pernicious habit of using slang. Has the habit gotten such firm hold of you that you fear you cannot free yourselves from its grasp? Then remember there is a weapon mighty enough to conquer it for you, Prayer! using this you will be victorious."

One after another in quick succession the outstretched hands clasped mine, while an almost deafening chorus of "I promise, I promise," greeted my ears; but my hands did not strive to exclude the noise, and so the close of the morning was better than its beginning.—Selected.

LIGHT HOUSE TERRORS.

If those on shore are awed by the terrible violence of the winds and waves during a tempest, what must be the experiences of men who live in a building exposed to the full fury of the heavy ocean breakers? When we look at a lighthouse in calm weather, it is almost impossible to realize that the sea sometimes breaks over the lantern. Such is, however, frequently the case, and an instance of this occurred not long after the completion of the Bishop's Rock Light, which is erected on a rock beyond the Scilly Islands, far out in the Atlantic. One of the builders told of a heavy sea striking under the lantern and carrying away the fog-bell, which hung by a stout arm of iron nearly three inches square. A few years ago the lighthouse keepers on this rock were in a terrible predicament during a hurricane; the violence of which was described as being fearful. The lighthouse was struck by enormous waves in quick succession, each causing a noise like the discharge of a cannon, and making the massive stone building rock to and fro, so that every article fell away from its place. One fearful sea broke the great lense in several pieces, and another smashed the cylinders of the spare light, while sand from the bottom, thirty fathoms deep, was found heaped upon the lighthouse gallery. The power of these unbroken masses of water is so great that lately, at Wick, one of these shocks moved a "concrete block of four hundred tons built up in situ." —Sel.

Obstinancy and intolerance are the surest proofs of ignorance. A man's horizon is measured by his knowledge and by his capacity of knowing.

TEMPERANCE.

THE SECRET TEMPERANCE ORDERS.

A request comes for a concise statement of the objections to secret temperance societies. They may be briefly discussed under the following topics: (1) The Secrecy, (2) The Secrets, (3) Their Omissions (4) Their Origin (5) Their Relatives.

(1.) The Saviour lays down the general principle that good things seek the light and bad ones darkness. This is a universal truth without exceptions. Nobody cares to cover up his good deeds, everybody naturally desires to conceal what he is ashamed of. This is true of the Good Templars and similar orders. They are anxious to publish to the world the good they do for the cause of temperance, while their silly ceremonies are kept under the seal of secrecy. All their good designs are made public, all their secret plottings for office, power and influence are strenuously hidden. Their silly ceremonies of initiation would bring them into contempt if performed publicly.

(2.) The only true reformation of the drunkard is conversion. His crime is not only physical, it is spiritual and any attempt at a partial reformation must fail. This the secret temperance societies omit. They do not teach the drunkard that he must be born again.

(3.) The origin of the secret society method condemns it. All writers on the subject agree that secret societies are of pagan, not Christian, origin. Not one of God'sinstitutions is secret, while all idolaters joined secret societies. No one who investigates will doubt this. If our Lord had approved such societies he would doubtless have recommended them to his disciples. On the other hand all his teaching opposes the method. "In secret have I said nothing." "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light." "He that doeth truth cometh to the light." "Proclaim on the housetop." "The mystery of iniquity." It is a shame to speak of the things done of them in secret," etc., etc. These utterances and many more show that the Saviour and his disciples were familiar with secret societies and disapproved them.

(4.) To put the temperance cause under cover of secrecy allies it to worldly, not Christian institutions. If the devil has any scheme, like killing negroes, corrupting the civil service, overthrowing government, establishing polygamy, or other things of the sort, he invariably organizes a secret society. This was the origin of the Knights of the Golden Circle, the Ku-Klux-Klan, the Molly Maguires, the Mormon Endowment and scores of others in this and foreign countries. How wicked, how absurd, to adopt a similar dark method to promote a holy cause. Secret temperance orders are, in their method, allied to the worst of institutions while they are necessarily widely removed from the church, whose methods are open and unconcealed. This fact has retarded temperance more than all others combined.

Let all good people forsake these orders and do openly what the Lord commands. Of necessity the introduction of secret societies divides temperance people and works havoc in the ranks. They are generally run by Masons and Odd-fellows and manipulated by scheming politicians.

BEWARE OF FIRE.

A medical correspondent of the Medical and Surgical Reporter, Dr. L. J. Collins, reports to that journal the case of a periodical drinker, accustomed to a drinking spree, lasting from two to three weeks, at intervals of six to eight weeks, who, when he commenced to sober up, and to assist the sobering, would have himself bled freely from the arm. At one of these bleedings the person, a witness "whose veracity is undoubted," holding the vessel to receive the blood, was struck by the strongly alcoholic odor of the blood. To test the matter for himself as to whether it was alcohol in the blood, he set the vessel containing the blood aside for a couple of hours, "when there was found floating upon the coagulated blood a liquid resembling alcohol, and which burned with the characteristic flame of alcohol." We commend this significant fact to the consumers of alcohol as added evidence that the alcohol they drink is not assimilated, that it enters the circulation with the blood as an irritant poison; and we also suggest that, as the alcohol thus accumulated in their systems is liable, as in case of alcoholic combustion heretofore reported, to burn, they will do well to beware of fire!—Temperance Advocate.

THE little city of Elmwood, Ills., population 2,000, has been afflicted with license since April last after several previous years of Prohibition. Price of licenses was fixed at $800—the highest known in the State. And yet these saloons are making money and the city for the first time in a long period is in debt—the policeman—an honest reformed man—fell, on the opening of the dram-shops, committed murder and involved the city in suits which have drained its treasury and over-taxed its people. "By their fruits ye shall know them."—Signal.

The following was clipped from the same paper and same date; advertising the services of a Masonic minister in one of the churches in Emporia. With a Masonic cunning which I dare not trust myself to characterize, he preaches in the forenoon "Christ, the power of God in the world," and in the afternoon praises a Christ-excluding lodge:

ST. ANDREW'S.—Rev. ——, rector. Hours of service, 11 a. m., 7 p. m., Sunday-school, 10 a. m. Subjects for the day: Forenoon, "Christ the power of God in the world;" evening, "A Talk on Secret Societies," or "Secret Oath-bound Societies." All are invited and welcome to attend the services.

I find also in the Republican of January 24th an article signed "X. Y.," who I learn by inquiry is a lawyer and the secretary of a lodge in Emporia. This article is the third from the same writer, reviewing an essay read at the State Convention by Mrs. J. S. Collins, and since published in the Cynosure, on "Women vs. Slavery." I do not wonder that this lawyer is disturbed if he should be in the fix that some in Emporia are supposed to be. There is a whisper on the street and my ear has caught a little of it. And it surely would be nothing strange if wives should sometimes ask their husbands what drawers they wore when they were "taken in" to the lodge.

By way of introduction to the Rev. —— before referred to I give you another scrap, referring to the same minister:

Rev. Mr. ——'s sermon Sunday evening on the question of the passion play and public amusements in general drew a large congregation to the Episcopal church, which listened with great interest to the views advanced on topics upon which a great diversity of opinion is entertained. The speaker's position was that the passion play comes within the scope of legitimate drama, and cannot be consistently objected to. He also believed that the drama in general, dancing, billiards, and various games and amusements in vogue are, when conducted reasonable regulations, necessary and beneficial, and are therefore not to be frowned upon as irreligious, but rather to be encouraged and managed in the interest of religious denominations.

"I would have a church with a building hard by or in a suitable place where parties and entertainments and amateur theatricals and charades and all games could be had for the young. I would have a dancing room, a smoking room, a billiard room, a reading room; for experience, common sense and philosophy show that men need amusements and should have them."

The following is the closing sentence of the sermon, the climax of all:

"Dance then and be merry, since all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

Is this whither a Masonic minister is drifting us? My inmost soul exclaims, "In the name of God what next?

P. S. FEEMSTER.

RATHBUN AT BIRMINGHAM.

BIRMINGHAM, IOWA, Feb'y 2, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The past week has been a glorious one for the friends of our reform in Birmingham and vicinity. Elder D. P. Rathbun was with us, preaching, lecturing and conversing on the diabolism of Freemasonry and kindred cabals. His work here has done the cause great good. Some who heretofore hesitated to identify themselves with us, now "acknowledge the corn" and "'fess up" as Anti-masons. Elder Rathbun also forced a pitiful whine from the would be moral and religious teacher who presides in the sanctum of the so-called Enterprise published in this place. Listen to the "whine:"

"Sunday evening the union meetings were brought to a close. For three weeks Revs. Pike and Bracken labored earnestly and faithfully for the conversion of sinners, and had the members of their congregations manifested as much zeal as their pastors, Birmingham might have experienced one of her old-fashioned revivals. We fear there are too many persons in the church who care more for hearing a red-faced monte-bank, who comes without any worthy recommendation, denounce their neighbors, than to hear the Word of God expounded by their own ministers, whose every day walk has proven them to be gentlemen and Christians, and far above the average as teachers. Less personal abuse of other denominations and more charity for those who do not happen to believe as you do, might be the means of getting yourself and neighbors a seat in the glorious mansion, which we are afraid many will lose unless they practice more Christian charity."

"Oh, isn't it pitiful, to see a whole city full," of church members neglect their own services to run after a "red-faced monte-bank." The members of the aforesaid churches will, no doubt, feel awfully cut up over such a severe castigation from the Worshipful Master of Birmingham lodge! And how will the above fulsome flattery, from such a one fit the stomachs of those "more than average teachers, Revs. Pike and Bracken."

Elder Rathbun was in splendid health and the verdict of all who heard him is that he never presented the truth more clearly, forcibly, and in better spirit. It has been circulated to some extent that the injuries received by him at the hands of the Masonic mob at Kellerton had injured his mind, but it is to be devoutly hoped that many more of us will get our minds in the same condition, and that soon. Yours for the war,

W. PITT NORRIS.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

This unpopular party though young is growing in influence and numbers beyond the most sanguine hopes of its votaries. It was called into existence out of pure necessity, and there can be no way of accounting for its rapid growth, than that God is in the movement, as its propelling power. Good men all over the States are carefully studying the propriety of organizing a new political party, but before a step of this kind is taken they fall into the lap of the American Party. Seeing the corruption in the present political parties, loyal men—loyal to God, and humanity, are withholding their support and influence and are waiting for an opportunity to defend true principles with their ballots. There should be many more votes cast for the American party than there has been. There are many Anti-masons, who profess to be zealous in their efforts to overthrow the secret empire, but where have you cast your vote? Have you done your duty? Does not God demand of you an abhorrence of that which is evil? May God help you to see the necessity of voting as you pray.

"PUSH THINGS."

BY REV. J. L. BARLOW.

This American party is in the field and, God willing, it has come to stay. It has a mission as grand as that which fired the hearts of our sires in '76; and they take action against a foe more dangerous than the armies of the United Kingdom. They entered the contest weak in numbers, poor in resources, with only a principle to unite them; and against the most powerful Government on earth, and panoplied in right, they conquered. They fought for liberty and self-government with collateral blessings. We take action for the preservation of that same liberty and self-government as well as for the sanctity and unity of our homes, and for our holy religion, which is threatened and undermined by the growing Baalism of the secret lodges, whose minions are to-day filling the uppermost places in pulpit and pew, as well as on the bench, at the bar, in legislative halls, and all other places of honor and power, to the exclusion of other and better men, who love their families, the church and their government too well to sell themselves as slaves to an irresponsible despotism, conceived in a monarchical government and brought to birth in a grog-shop in London, 165 years ago last June.

That every interest which a patriot and a Christian holds dear, is endangered by the existence and growth of Freemasonry and its kindred, whose name is Legion, is becoming apparent to every mind having manhood enough left to dare to face the facts pressed upon their attention as they have been and still are, being sown broad-cast by the living voice, as well as by the ubiquitous leaflet, so that none need remain ignorant who love and long for light.

This American party gave its completed platform to the country during the last decade, and has made a steady progress from thence onward, to the perplexity of mere politicians, and the dismay of the secret plotters of the lodges, who see in it a foe with a "grip," whose name is "Never-let-go," till the lodge power in this country is dead and buried so deep as to preclude the hope of a resurrection.

This party, with an aim so lofty, a purpose so grand, and a platform so pure is destined to rally to its banners the best elements of our population; and will at no distant day surely displace the rotten and effete party which has so long ruled the country, and which has just been buried under an avalanche of public indignation and scorn.

Let all Christian patriots and reformers join this party and with their best efforts help in its advance to power, that we may save the church, the government, and the family from the ruin impending over them. It is time that all were up and doing, and if we would stay the tide of evil breaking upon us, we must "push things."

IDOLS.

It is the Masonic lodge that makes our political idols for us. It is not particular as to what kind of material it uses for that purpose; though it seldom makes one out of a man of principle. When a man once suffers himself to be hewn and shaped into an idol, he ceases to be independent, and abandons his principles for the sake of pleasing his worshipers. This fact is illustrated in a striking manner in the case of that distinguished politician, Horace Greeley. In his early and better days he was an Anti-mason, as all true Americans should be; but when in course of time he became ambitious to be made an idol, with a view of winning the Presidency, his Anti-masonic principles became evidently greatly relaxed. Believing that the Anti-masonic party had been the means of defeating Henry Clay, the Whig candidate in 1832, he had some reason to fear that they might help to defeat him, Greeley, in 1872, even though he had allowed himself to be hewn and shaped into a Democrat. Messrs. Seward and Weed, Anti-masons, stood in his way; and this was an additional reason for destroying Anti-masonic sentiment as a possible marplot to his prospects.

In the article on Anti-masonry written by Mr. Greeley for Johnson's Encyclopedia, William Morgan is termed a "thriftless tailor," seemingly for the purpose of throwing discredit upon the origin and character of the Anti-masonic party. Though Mr. Greeley himself owed much of his own popular favoritism to a humble origin and to a traditional respect for his early Anti-masonic and Whig principles, yet in his heated pursuit after the Presidency he seems to have forgotten this, and to have sought by disparaging Anti-masonry to win favor with the lodge, and thus become its idol. But he little knew the unrelenting character of Freemasonry. Its narrow, bigoted spirit seldom forgives a man of talent for having once opposed it. Mr. Greeley's short article ends, as it begins, by a disparaging fling at the Anti-masonic party, declaring that the party was soon dissolved by "absorbing questions of finance and political economy", as if such material considerations were of more importance than a great moral issue upon which depends the religion and the life of the Republic!

It is very true that the people abandoned their opposition of lodge-tyranny, and followed after the idol which the lodge offered them, viz., the great Democrat and Royal Arch Mason, General Jackson; and doubtless, as Mr. Greeley says, New Jersey and Ohio were lost to the Whigs by the persistence of the Anti-masons in voting for their own candidates. But this fact should now serve to render us Anti-masons only the more determined to recover the ground which was then lost. Ohio and New Jersey should now honor themselves for the constancy with which they maintained their cause. They should show that if the Whig heavens did fall in 1832, they are not to be diverted from principles so evidently just as those of the American party. In fact, what the country needed in 1872 was not the candidacy of Horace Greeley, but that of a decided Anti-mason; not a mere political idol, but a man of unshaken American principle; not a time-server standing astride, with a foot on each of the two contending parties, but a man whose sole object is to restore to supremacy of the American Constitution over the usurpation of the Masonic lodge.

We are told that we are foolish in continuing our opposition against Freemasonry; that we are too weak to contend against so powerful an evil; that all our struggles will only serve to strengthen the lodge; that we shall ruin a good cause by striving to oppose a bad one, and that we must therefore suffer ourselves to be overcome of evil, and make no longer any resistance against it! We must give up the ideal of the Republic and attend only to the material interests of society! When the lodge sets up its idol, its Jackson, its Polk, its Pierce, its Buchanan, its Johnson, its Grant, its Hayes, its Garfield, and we hear Rob. Morris, Ben Perley Poore and Albert Pike sounding the silver-toned flute, and those men of war, Butler, Sickles and Logan stand by with the sword, then we must bow down and worship: we must yield or die.

There is one statement in Mr. Greeley's Anti-masonic article that may well arrest our attention. It is this:—that the governments of Europe have sought to strengthen themselves against opposition from secret societies by securing the election of princes or other eminent persons to the chief offices of "the order". We observe a similar state of things here in the United States. Eminent men, or at least prominent politicians, become members of the lodge, or are sustained in office by the lodge; not however to strengthen the government against the lodge, but to sustain the lodge which sustains them against men of principle. In consequence there are no men whom the people ought to distrust more than those leading politicians who serve the lodge either by active membership, or by allowing it to operate without offering resistance. During the last ten or fifteen years it cannot be denied of our best members of Congress that they have remained generally silent while being repeatedly found in bad company. Of all the numerous frauds and corruptions that have been exposed in and around Congress during those years, the members in both Houses have generally "concealed and never revealed," as "duly and truly" initiated Freemasons are bound to do. It is ruinous to the Republic to continue such men in positions of trust and honor They are mere idolaters. AMERICAN.

THE CHURCHES.

—Dr. Dana, of St. Paul, made a pilgrimage of four hundred miles to preach the sermon at the dedication of a Congregational Church at Winnipeg, Manitoba. The church and parsonage cost $45,000, and $30,000 of the amount was obtained by twice selling lots purchased as a site for the building, the city's growth sendiug the price of real estate upward rapidly.

—At a late Sabbath evening service in Father O'Conners Independent Catholic Church, New York, Rev. John C. Collins, of New Haven, delivered an eloquent discourse on his own conversion from the Roman Catholic Church, and his labors in New Haven in preaching to the non-church-goers and the poor. Mr. Collins is a graduate of Yale College, and of the Divinity School, and is now superintendent of the Gospel Union of New Haven. The Independent Catholic congregation cordially welcomed Mr. Collins, and requested him to visit them again. Father O'Conner referred to letters he received and notices in the papers saying he had been ill-treated in Ohio recently. He was not the person referred to. Another man of the same name was going about. He had no connection with tnis work, and it was to be hoped that no one would be misled by the similarity of name. It might be that the Roman Church did not love him any more than his namesake, but the Catholic people respected the work that is being done in the Independent Catholic Church, for their enlightment and conversion, and for his part they treated him most courteously, for he had only a message of good tidings of salvation for them. He wanted to give them Christ instead of the Blessed Virgin Mary or the Pope.

—Religious statistics are published, and show the total amount contributed by the various denominations in the United States the past year for benevolent and congregational purposes to be $106,962,000, of which the amount collected for purely benevolent purposes is $31,331,150. The amount contributed for church purposes, including the maintainance of the churches, sustaining the ministry, etc., is $75,252,866. There are 92,653 Protestant churches in the United States, with 71,602 ministers and 9,003,030 members. These figures may safely be left to tell their own story.

—Denver, Col., had a year ago only two Presbyterian churches, within two blocks of each other in the central part of the city. One had wisdom and grace given to it to sell its property and move to the growing southeastern part of the city. That, however, was only the beginning. Colonies left the two churches and formed four new churches in the four suburban corners. Besides a colored Presbyterian church was organized, and a Chinese one will probably be formed soon. The amount paid out and contracted for work on church buildings during the year foots up $49,450.

—The New Orleans and Charleston Presbyteries, two of the strongest in the Presbyterian Church South, lately formally disavowed and condemned the action of the Atlanta General Assembly in opening the way for fraternal relations with the Presbyterian Church North. Dr. Mack led the movement in the Charleston Presbytery, and Dr. B. M. Palmer at New Orleans, both taking substantially the same ground, that the Northern church had sinned beyond forgivness in denouncing the Presbyterians of the South as "traitors and rebels." A large majority of the Presbyterians in the South, however, have voted to sustain the action of the Assembly at Atlanta.

—Rev. Wm. G. Schauffler, D. D., L. L. D., died at the residence of his son, in New York, Jan. 26th. He was born in Stuttgart, Germany, Aug. 22, 1798. His father was a turner, and to escape the hardships of the Napoleonic wars removed to Odessa. At the age of twenty-two he determined to prepare himself for foreign missionary service, came to this country, and entered Andover Seminary in 1827. He was sent by the German Reformed Church, through the American Board to Turkey. At Constantinople he was associated with Drs. Riggs and Goodell upon various translations of the Scriptures. Such a triumvirate, so distinguished for piety, for linguistic attainments, sagacity and intellectual power, has seldom existed anywhere. Dr. Schauffler was familiar with nineteen languages, and could preach extemporaneously in six. Since his return to this country a few years ago, he has devoted himself to ministering to the poor of this city. His funeral was conducted on Monday by Rev. Drs. Crosby and Irenæus Prime.

THE WORK ABROAD.

—Dr. Yates says the Chinese pay $154,752,000 per year to quiet the spirits of their ancestors.

—A mission church is to be erected in Zululand, South Africa, on the fatal battle-field of Isandulwana.

—The English Presbyterians are taking steps to thoroughly equip a theological college in China for the training of native evangelists.

—Over seventy students were matriculated last year in the Anglo-Chinese College, at Foochow, connected with Methodist Mission.

—There are now two Methodist congregations of native Christians in Cawnpore, India, and the prospects of the work there are very encouraging.

—The number of foreign mission stations of the Protestant Episcopal Church is 147, 34 of which are in Western Africa, 31 in China, 15 in Japan, 1 in Greece, 14 in Hayti, and 15 in Mexico.

THE AMERICAN COMMISSION ON NATIVE MISSIONS.

In response to a call from the College Church of Wheaton, for a cousultation of churches in regard to the support of native missionaries in Armenia, delegates from the Streator Independent Church, the Congregational Church of Tonica, and Mr. S. J. Hayes, met with the delegates and other members of the College Church in the President's office of the College.

President J. Blanchard was elected chairman. After prayer and introductory remarks by the chairman, letters and printed documents were read showing that some of the missionaries of the American Board seem hostile to those Armenian Christians who come to America for the purpose of preparing for the Gospel ministry. These letters were from returned missionaries, corporate members of the American Board and others. One of the corporate members of the Board stated that in 1867 he visited the missionaries in Constantinople and was much surprised to find not one native pastor present at their meetings, and that he was still more surprised to learn that they would not be permitted to attend even as spectators. It was also shown that when young Armenians have left their native land for the purpose of studying in America, have quietly attended to their own affairs and finally been ordained to preach, those who should rejoice over and with them have thrown obstacles in their way. In view of these facts it was voted, that in the judgment of this council a national commissiou for native missions in foreign lands should be organized.

Voted, that Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Mrs. L. H. Plumb and Mr. S. J. Hayes be a committee to present a plan of organization at an adjourned meeting.

On re-assembling at 2 o'clock p. m., after prayer the committee on plan of organization reported. Their report was amended and at last adopted as follows:

Art. I. This society shall be called "The American Commission on Native Missions."

Art. II. The object of this Commission shall be to assist converted and able men, of non-English speaking races, in preaching the gospel to their countrymen and establishing Christian churches where they are required.

Art. III. Any person of evangelical sentiments, who professes faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, who is not a member of any secret society, or otherwise offending against the Spirit and word of God, and who contributes to the funds, may become a member of the society.

Art. IV. The officers of the society shall be a President, Vice President, Home Secretary, Foreign Secretary, Treasurer, two Auditors, and an Executive Committee of not less than seven of which the Secretaries shall be members.

Art. V. The annual meeting shall be constituted of the officers and members of the society at the time of meeting, together with one delegate from each church or other Christian organization contributing to its funds.

Art. VI. The annual meeting shall be held in the month of June of each year, for the election of officers and transaction of other business, at such time and place as may be designated by the Executive Committee.

Art. VII. The Executive Committee shall also collect and disburse funds, decide what persons shall be assisted, to what extent and for how long a time assistance shall be given, but no officer or agent of the society shall receive any compensation for service rendered thereto. Needful expenses of postage or travel shall be paid from the funds of the society.

The Executive Committee shall also have power to fill all vacancies occurring among the officers between the regular annual meetings; to hold missionary meetings at such times and places as it shall deem expedient, and perform such other duties as may seem needful to the progress of our work.

Art. VIII. This society will endeavor to discourage secret societies, and the use and sale of intoxicating drinks and narcotics, by refusing to appoint to office or aid in preaching those who are members of any secret society, or who use intoxicating drinks as beverages or sell them for such use, or who are given to the use of tobacco or other narcotics.

Art. IX. Any missionary organization agreeing with the articles herein found, may become auxiliary to this society and shall be known as "The American Commission on Native Missions." Such organizations may, if they choose, direct their contributions to the support of any person whom they may know and desire to aid.

Art. X. This Constitution may be altered or amended at any regular meeting by a two-thirds majority of the members present, provided that notice shall have been given in the published call for said meeting at least one month before its time of gathering.

Officers were elected as follows:

PRESIDENT.—Pres. J. Blanchard, Wheaton, Ill.

HOME SECRETARY.—Prof. O. F. Lumry, Wheaton, Ill.

FOREIGN SECRETARY.—Mr. S. M. Minasian, Tarrytown, N. Y.

TREASURER.—Mrs. L. H. Plumb, Streator, Ill.

VICE PRESIDENTS.—Dr. J. B. Walker, Wheaton, Ill.; Dea. T. W. Baird, Tonica, Ill.; J. T. Buckley, Streator, Ill.; Rev. A. J. Chittenden, Rockford, Ill.; Rev. S. M. Mangasarian, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dea. Elijah Dresser, Lindenwood, Ill.; and Mr. Samuel J. Hayes, Grand Ridge, Ill.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Prof. O. F. Lumry, S. M. Minasian, Mrs. L. H. Plumb, Rev. W. I. Phillips, Prof. H. A. Fischer, Dea. T. W. Baird, Mrs. M. Griswold, N. Richey, Mrs. A. F. Ryder, Esbon Manville and Pres. C. A. Blanchard.

Subscriptions were then announced to the amount of over four hundred dollars toward the purposes of the Commission.

Voted, that we assist Bro. G. H. Filian during the coming year in his work of preaching the Gospel in Syria.

Adjourned after prayer.

Friends who favor the enterprise as set forth in its constitution, printed above, are invited to communicate with the secretary of the Commission, Prof. O. F. Lumry, Wheaton. Contributions can be sent to Mrs. L. H. Plumb, Streator, Ill. J. BLANCHARD, Chairman.

J. J. DUNKLEBERG, Secretary.

FARM NOTES.

MILK RECORDS OF AYRSHIRE COWS.

Alonzo Libby, of Succarappa, Me., sends a statement of milk, etc., and of his method of feeding, which is particularly valuable, as it embraces a term of years with a daily of milk, and also gives information in regard to food consumed in production. The feed was hay in winter and good clay pasture in summer, with an average grain allowance of four quarts bran, one and a half quarts each of cottonseed meal and corn meal. The highest feed was to cows in full flow, gradually lessening the feed as they shrauk toward coming in again, During the last two years graiu was fed in summer and ensilage in winter. The reeord is for the imported cow Queen of Ayr, 1766, A. R., beginning Sept. 1, 1875, when she was ten years old, and for such of her calves as have come to milk since, to Sept. 1, 1882. The old eow gave for six years following Sept. 1, 1875, an average of 9,404½ pounds a year, the largest yield being 9,775 pounds. Queen of Ayr 3d, 4,464, A. R., from Sept. 1, 1877, to Sept. 1, 1882, gave an average of 8,610 pounds of milk a year; largest yield, 9,290; smallest, 7,847, at two years, with first calf. Queen of Ayr, 4th, 4,465, A. R., from Sept. 1, 1878, to 1, 1882, gave an average of 9,243¾ pounds; highest, 10,426 pounds; smallest, 7,925 pounds, at two years old. Queen of Ayr, 5th, 4,466, A. R., from Sept. 1, 1879, to Sept. 1, 1882, gave an average of 9,464 pounds; highest yield, 10,801 pounds; smallest 7,981 pounds, at two years. Queen of Ayr, 6th, 4,881, A. R., from Sept. 1, 1880, to Sept. 1, 1882, gave an average of 8,439½ pounds for the two years—first year as a two-year-old, 7,890 pounds; second year, 8,989 pounds.

A plan in use in South Australia for leading cattle, said to be very effective, is as follows: Tie the end of the rope around the base of the near horn, pass the line across the forehead, back behind the horns and under the back of the near ear, thence up between the ropes and the animal's forehead. When hauled taut a hitch is made which takes in the ear, the least pressure upon which by pulling the rope, it is said, prevents the most obstinate beast from hanging back.

Cotswold sheep have become one of the most popular of breeds in America, their large carcasses furnishing a good weight of mutton as well as a fairly heavy fleece. They are the opposite of the Merino in some respects, and where mutton is marketable are well adapted to the needs of the general farmer.

The cultivation of mushroons is a paying branch of gardening in France, where this esculent is consumed every year to the value of $1,800,000.

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen, $15.00.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusiog, and is doubtless the last historioal article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

As previously announced the reform story, HOLDEN WITH CORDS is being put in book form, and is to be completed by April 1st. 1883

Prices will be: bound in cloth $1.00 each, $9 00 per dozen. Paper covers 50cts each. $4.00 per dozeu.

SCOTCH RITE MASONRY ILLUSTRATED.

is the title selected for the complete Illustrated Ritual of all the Scotch Rite Degrees The Ineffable or Scotch Rite Degrees begin with the 4th degree, the first three, called Blue Lodge or Ancient Craft Masonry, being common to the Scotch, York and all other Masonic Rites. The Scotch Rite consists of 29 degrees (4th to 33d.) and the manuscript with drawings for profusely illustrating the work are all ready and will make two volumes of about 400 pages each Owing doubtless to the fact that few of these degrees have ever been exposed in their order and those very imperfectly, Scotch Rite Masonry has, in all the larger towns, for several years been recognized as the ruling rite and to become a Thirty-two degree Mason is the highest ambition of thousaods of lodge devotees.

Two "Supreme Councils" Control the Scotch Rite In this Country. "The Southern Jurisdiction" which includes the District of Columbia, Iowa and several other Northern States is presided over by the Guerrilla Rebel General Albert Pike as "Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander"

The expense of getting out the first edition of these rituals will be very heavy but as soon as the cash is secured for 1,500 copies of each volume, work will be commenced. Price in cloth $1 00 per vol. $9.00 per doz. In paper covers 50 cts. per vol. $4.00 per doz.

All cash orders received before publicatioo for either of these books will be filled at 20 per cent discount, and orders may be to sent the publisher, Ezra A. Cook, No. 13 Wabash Avenue, or to W. I. Phillips, Cyoosure Office, Chicago.

We are prepared to fill all orders for anti-secrecy literature and to take subscriptions for the Christian Cynosure at No. 221 West Madison street, Chicago.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Moultorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich, and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Rnth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each, per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2 00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the enurch trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry 15 cents each; per dozen $1 25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4 00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—President Arthur gave an elaborate dinner to the Judges of the Supreme Court last week.

—The National Republican, supposed to reflect the views of the Administration, has an article urging the passage of the Whisky-Bonded bill. It says the whisky interest comes in a fair, open manner, asking relief, and the fact that the great commercial bodies of Cincinnati, Louisville, Chicago, and St. Louis, have urged the passage of the Extension bill, is cited as indisputable proof that it ought to pass.

—Judge Jere Black has been arguing for the repeal of the Edmunds Utah law, before the House judiciary committee. The committee will not report any repeal of the law. The bill introduced by Mr. Cassidy, of Nevada, to abolish woman suffrage in the territory of Utah, in view of the number of alien women who voted at the last election will probably be reported favorably, and every effort made to have it passed this session.

—Senator Logan's army bill providing that the number of enlisted men in the army, the engineer battalion of 520 men, the hospital stewards, and 1,000 Indian scouts, shall not exceed 30,000, increases the pay of privates from $13 to $16 per month, and non-commissioned officers and subalterns in proportion.

—The Secretary of the interior has decided not to ratify the leases of lands which have been obtained in the Indian Territory, conveying large areas both from individual Indians and from tribal councils. The Standard Oil Company is one of the sufferers by this decision, as are several Western companies and associations which have secured leases for pasturing purposes.

—The House on Thursday discussed the chemical schedule of the Ways and Means Tariff bill and worried through about 100 items, almost completing that schedule —In Minnesota the long senatorial contest was brought to a close Thursday by the election of Dwight M. Sabin as United States senator to succeed Hon. William Windom, who has held the position for the last twelve years.

—The committee on Constitutional Reform in the Pennsylvania Legislature it is said will report favorably a prohibitory amendment bill, with a proviso that compensation be made out of the Treasury to all owning real estate occupied, leased, and license paid for the manufacture or sale of liquors for five successive years previous to the adoption of that amendment, and which real estate may be reduced in value by reason of the destruction of the business by its adoption.

—The Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company has had in course of construction for some time a new direct line from Denver to Salt Lake City and Ogden, where connection is made with the Central Pacific. This line will be completed and ready for business by the 1st of April. An arrangement has just been concluded between the Chicago Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company and the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company by which the former is to run its California freight and passenger business over the latter's line, and the Burlington already announces that on and after April 1st its business will go via the new route. This will be the shortest to California, and will no doubt prove quite a formidable competitor of the Union Pacific, with which it runs almost parallel from the Missouri River to Ogden.

—A party, to consist of Prof, Hillyard and numerous other scientific men, will leave San Francisco about the first of March for the Caroline and Flint Islands of the South Sea group, to take observations of the eclipse of the sun, which will take place May 6. This, it is supposed, will be the most remarkable eclipse of the century, as the period of totality will be six minutes.

—The destruction of the Inman Line Pier No. 36, North River, New York, and the damage to vessels moored about it caused a loss now estimated at $415,000. There will be a moderate amount of salvage. There is no doubt that the fire started in the gear-locker or rope-closet, and the first cause of its starting may be laid at the door of some surreptitious pipe-smoker.

—The trial of Neal and Craft for the Ashland murders occurs at Grayson, Carter county, Ky., this week, and the mob feeling is so strong that Judge Brown has called upon Gov. Blackburn for militia to protect the court and the prisoners. Five companies of infantry and a battery of artillery have accordingly been ordered to Grayson.

FOREIGN.

—Two leading Russian nihilists, imprisoned in the fortress Peter and Paul, have been driven insane by cruel torture.

—The German military budget includes an extraordinary grant of 1,500,000 marks for strengthening the fortresses of the western frontier.

—A placard was posted a few days ago in a public garden at St. Petersburg, enjoining the people to avoid places frequented by the Court, lest they should be hurt by anything that might happen. Two of the leading Nihilist prisoners, a man and a woman, confined in the fortress of Peter and Paul, have become insane. Their names are carefully concealed.

—The attitude of China toward Japan is becoming unpleasant, if not actually hostile, the cause of ill feeling being the still unsettled Loo Choo question. The Chinese officials profess great indignation because the new Envoy from Japan comes without instructions to reopen the subject on his side, and several petty affronts have been given Japanese officials now in China.

—The visit of M. de Giers, the Russian Foreign Minister, at Vienna, is said to have resulted in a complete understanding between Russia and Austria on the leading political questions, and also in the arrangement of the differences regarding the navigation of the Danube.

—The Emperor William and Prince Bismarck are both sick and there is great apprehension among German Political circles.

BUSINESS.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

A very few persons in writing have mentioned the omission of weekly acknowledgments of receipts in our paper. No one has complained.

The receipt of the Weed Pamphlet by all who renew or subscribe during the months of January and February while not a legal receipt is a notice that the money has been received, this, with change of date on the tag, we have thought in most instances sufficient. Where there was anything special seeming to require it, we have sent receipts. By this method valuable space is saved and such subscriber furnished a notice that is itself a document of permanent interest and will aid in enlisting others and inducing them to subscribe if judiciously used. Our supply of this kind of notices is not exhausted and are awaiting your orders.

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE.

All funds in what was known as the "One Hundred" or "Folder Fund," that remained unexpended January 1st, 1883, were turned over with the Cynosure to the National Christian Association. Persons entitled to send subscribers on that fund will please mention the fact in sending to W. I. Phillips, 221 West Madison St., and they will receive their proper credits.

A HOLE AT THE BOTTOM.

There is a hole in the bottom which ought to be stopped, that is, the hatchway of discontinuances, through which a few of our subscribers are dropping out of the ranks. It may be done by a united effort.

1st. We must make the paper more attractive and more useful.

2nd. You must be more diligent in looking up those whose time is nearly out, or who are delinquent.

3d. If you like your paper and wish to continue on the list, make a special effort to be in the renewal list "on time." If pecuniary reverses or other causes embarrass you, write us a statement of your case. Possibly the Lord may answer our united prayers and by our joint efforts open a way for you to continue. If you are in the second class named, and will make an effort, notify us and we will forward a list of the subscribers at your post office. It's the leak that keeps the list below zero. Put in as much as you like and the bag that's open at both ends never gets full. Stop the hole at the bottom, if you want the sack to stand alone. Help us and we'll help you, and together we'll make Bro. Phillip's package of "cut-off notices" a dead loss.

AN OFFER.

Doubtless many who are now unacquainted with the Christian Cynosure would be glad to receive it weekly if once they knew its worth. We are grateful for the favorable notices which have appeared in quite a number of our exchanges, and shall gladly reciprocate that kindness as occasion may permit, but we feel that nothing less than a perusal of the paper itself for several consecutive issues will enable persons to form a correct estimate of its value. We therefore offer to send the Christian Cynosure for four consecutive weeks for 10 cents to the address of any new subscriber, beginning with the first issue after the money is received. This offer to continue for one month from February first. There will of course be a loss on the first numbers ordered, but we believe that if followed up there will be an ultimate gain to the cause. Will our friends take hold and give this plan a fair trial? Furnish a good list of monthly readers, and give us a chance to see how many we can hold.

TO OLD SUBSCRIBERS.

We want to keep all our old readers while adding many new ones to our list. We shall do our best to merit your confidence, and hope to receive your co-operation and continued patronage. Give us a fair trial before you "cut our acquaintance." We come to you with a clean dress, a pleasant face, and words of truth and soberness, modestly asking a weekly welcome at your fireside. We shall aim to make your home brighter, your burdens lighter, and your hearts better, by our coming; so be sure it's the right thing to do before you say, "Discontinue my paper."

A large number of the deeply interesting letter of the late Thurlow Weed to the Batavia Convention are still awaiting the orders of friends. Single copy, 5c; $3.00 per hundred, or $20.00 per thousand. Now is the time to distribute this very important document. Send orders to 221 West Madison street, Chicago, office of the Christian Cynosure.

☞Send your orders for the Weed pamphlet, one hundred thousand now ready. The general and the religious press are discussing it. Dr. McMurdy and the secretists generally denouncing it and its author. Everybody ought to read it. Next week we shall give our readers a portrait of its author and more facts in the case.

THE WEED PAMPHLET OFFER.

The interest in Mr. Weed's statement of Morgan's fate is becoming more general. Corroborating proofs are accumulating and the document itself is standing the test of adverse criticism. It will well repay a careful reading. Our offer to send it FREE with yearly renewals and subscribers before Feb. 1st., has met such a favorable response that we feel justified in continuing it another month. To those desiring it for circulation, 50 cents per dozen; $3.00 per hundred.

CLUB OFFER.

The price of the Cynosure is $2.00 per year; of the American Agriculturist, the best farmers' illustrated monthly, is $1.50. We will send the two, with a fine steel engraving "In the Meadow," for $3.10.

☞We have arranged with dealers to furnish books, etc., in the general trade so that you need not divide you orders but send direct to headquarters.

FARM FOR SALE.

W. H. LAYTON OF MT. AYR. RINGGOLD CO., IOWA,

offers for sale his valuable farm of over seven hundred acres. This is a fine opportunity for some man who has six sons (more or less) to colonize and gather his children around him. Stock and implements sold with farm if desired. Price reasonable and terms easy. For particulars write as above.

IT IS A PLEASURE

to call attention to our editorial pages this week. Without egotism, both pages will be found of value to our readers, and this we say without detracting from the rest of the paper. The two columns of shot from lodge lockers will do fine execution from the batteries of our lecturers. We are able to promise a first letter from our special Washington correspondent; and very soon, perhaps next week, look for another illustrated paper on

CHARLES G. FINNEY.

We shall print a large extra edition of this number, and have some special contributions preparing for it. Any friend, who may have in print or in memory interesting recollections of President Finney, is requested to send them in immediately. A paper on

FROM THE WATCHTOWER.

While northern Illinois is under a foot and a half of snow and the thermometer down to zero every day, Ohio and western Pennsylvania are under water and floods more are falling. The rivers of southern Ohio are at a height seldom if ever before known. At Cincinnati on Sunday ten miles or more of the river front were more or less under water. Along the landing the water was up to the second and third stories of many buildings. The river was sixty-three feet above low-water mark with a prospect that the rise would continue for twenty-four hours longer. The gas-works were submerged, and except for lamps and candles the city was in darkness. Already the damage is reckoned in millions, and throughout the State and in western Pennsylvania by millions more. Some towns along the river, as Lawrenceburg, Ind., are entirely inundated and cut off from all communication with the world outside, except by telegraph, The loss of life has been small and confined to railway disasters, but the sickness and suffering that come with such a flood must surely follow, and the country which has escaped must be ready to meet a demand upon its charity fund.

A leading local paper of northeastern Kansas who calls Miss Nilsson the singer, a "stuck-up fraud" who should "do her bawling to the winds," is also one of the most persistent opponents of prohibition and St. John, though "loyal to the Republican party." The editor is a great Odd-fellow, has once been Grand Master of the order in the State, and was ever a ready enemy of Senator Pomeroy. This sheet heartily approves the objection of one of the State Supreme Court Judges to the decision of the majority in a case where a brewer sued to recover damage for loss in business because of the prohibition amendment. The Court gave judgment that the brewer would have no trouble if engaged in legitimate business. Gov. Glick, the liquor sellers' abettor, who has taken an oath to support a prohibition constitution, issued a long and verbose executive message which made no reference to the great question of prohibition but deplores the fact there is no larger immigration to the State, since the inducements to settlers are so great. The causes for this deficit the governor does not venture to state, though it is the standing charge of the saloonists that prohibition is the sole and sufficient reason.

The temperance struggle in Illinois is centering about the high license question, which is advocated by the Chicago Tribune and other organs of the high-toned saloons who are anxious to gain that public respect for their business which the suppression of the dives and doggeries would be apt to beget. In Chicago the aldermen have been wrestling with the question for weeks without much result. They recognize the fact that the poor man's drinking place cannot be a mirrored palace and claim that a low license for the outlying parts of the city must be allowed. Many strong temperance advocates, agreeing that "half a loaf is better than no bread" and knowing that the city council would do nothing, have petitioned the State legislature for a uniform license of $500. In six hours 6000 names of Chicago business men were signed to this petition. A bill meeting this request has been approved in committee and on Thursday the lower House will act on it. If favorably the Senate will approve, and the enforcement of the law will confine the whisky business to men who have money. The agitation of this question has kept the work of the Women's Christian Temperance Unions somewhat in the back ground. Their petitions for the submission of a prohibitory amendment have been widely circulated, however, and the legislature will have another opportunity to redeem its miserable record on this question. No observing temperance man believes that high license, even if enforced, will be more than a temporary check to the business. At best it is only a temporary expedient whose effect is more apparent than real.

There is no risk in offering a reward for the discovery of a statesman who thoroughly understands the tariff question. Congress is yet worrying over the bill for the revision of protective duties and makes slow and doubtful progress. A few leaders of the Democrats are becoming anxious lest the last days of the term shall expire before the work is complete, when they will be under the necessity of meeting the question in the face of the next popular election. The high tariff demands of the iron workers has had a singular comment in the failure of the great Union Iron and Steel Company of this city and their branch establishment at Kansas City. The business managers were wealthy and successful men who were neither dishonest or negligent, and their business was enjoying all the advantages that could be afforded by a high protective tariff. It seems that their business had been successful and large additions were being made to an already immense establishment. Perhaps they were tempted to over-expansion by this very protection, and what was to have been an aid has proved a ruin.

Mr. Gladstone, who is regaining at Cannes in France some of that vigor which has been freely given to Ireland, is reported by the cable as remarking to an eminent French statesman that the curse of Ireland had been centralization. "We are now trying," he said, "to make the humblest Irishman realize that he is a governing agency, and also that the government will be carried on for him and by him." He could not have spoken more strongly against the subordination of every interest, political, religious, educational, to the rule of Romish priests, and in this he confirms the views of the historian Froude, which have been thought severe, and have been attacked most bitterly by the Catholic press. If Mr. Gladstone shall, by God's grace, recover strength, he may yet open the way for a grander reform in Ireland than has yet been thought possible. Independence of priestly dictation from Rome and a consciousness of individual responsibility for peaceful and stable government will be a condition for Irishmen beyond the fondest dream of Land Leaguer or Fenian.

The Irish secret societies have at length gone down in the fight, and the British courts have the murderers of Cavendish and Burke within their grasp. Nearly a year has passed, and every effort to apprehend them has been used by the most powerful of governments. No reward has been too great to offer; no law has been asked for which Parliament has not granted; but the struggle has been prolonged until the conspirators began to fear each other, and the dread of legal punishment became stronger than that of assination under the oaths of their murderous lodge. The testimony of Farrel, a carman, a fortnight since, revealed the names of leading Fenians who were managing an inner circle for the purposes of assassination. So carefully was this cabal arranged that its members were unknown to each other and were controled by the peremptory orders of some sovereign grand commander or sublime prince of the royal secret. A dozen prisoners in court listened to his testimony with derision. But when Kavanagh, the driver of the car upon which the Phœnix Park assassins escaped, was called upon to testify, they heard him with dogged silence. He positively identified several men engaged in that fearful crime, and confessed that he received three pounds sterling and a new harness for participating with them. It is believed that the assassination of Burke only was contemplated, but Lord Cavendish fell to make the work complete. Another witness is expected to point out the very man who did the stabbing, and the shadow of the gallows will soon fall across the last scene in this renowned tragedy. But the time seems not yet when men will understand that the same possibilities of crime exist in the "benevolent" societies of Freemasons as in the "benevolent" society of Fenians.

With all her afflictions there is another threat of famine in Ireland. Even the overbearing importance of their political affairs cannot prevent the serious consideration of this impending calamity. The attitude of the English leaders has inspired much hope for greater liberty of self-government in Ireland, which will appear in the quickened pulse of the next election for parliament. But the famine question is not settled by such means. Meetings are already being held in London to open ways for relief to reach the suffering people. A picture of their distress is thus given by a Dublin correspondent: "I have just returned from the famine districts of County Donegal where more than three thousand people are in a starving condition, existing from day to day on the meager relief afforded by scattering charity. The whole north of Ireland is in a most wretched condition. The same nature of things exists to a large extent in the west, but the destitution is not, as a rule, so complete as it is in the places where I have just come from. In many cabins I entered during the past five days the sole articles of consumption were limited to a quantity of Indian meal and a slight portion of seaweed. In most of the villages whole families exist in that manner. On the north and west coasts, where the soil is either mostly composed of rocks or mud, special destitution prevails this season owing to the complete destruction of the grain crops in September by a terrible tornado and the rotting of the entire potato crop owing to the constant rain."

MASONIC HALL ASSOCIATION.

BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

The Anti-masonic party ought never to forget that one of its most important steps of late years was the petition which it presented to Congress for a repeal of the charter which, in bold defiance of the spirit and letter of the Constitution, has been granted to the "Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia." This charter was granted by Congress in the month of April, 1864, nearly twenty years ago. The country then was in a state of war; and by this extraordinary action Congress turned aside from asserting the Constitution with vigor and energy against the Masonic rebels, and inflicted this severe blow upon the Constitution itself. Its course in this respect has been precisely like that of a weak man phrensied with fear; it has turned back from the enemy and attacked the power which it ought to have defended.

There has been a time in former years when the slave-pen and auction-block were in full operation within close view of the Capitol of this Christian Republic; but great and outrageous as that infamy was, it hardly surpassed this other infamy of establishing a secret, irresponsible power of infidel proclivities at the capital of the country. The American citizen ought never to remain quiet so long as that secret power retains its charter. The District of Columbia ought never to be desecrated by the legal existence of an institution so perfectly out of accord with the institutions of the country as the Masonic lodge.

The right to administer oaths belongs to the state, and cannot be delegated to a secret, irresponsible tribunal.

This secret tribunal punishes American citizens with penalties of extraordinary severity which the Constitution prohibits.

The Constitution forbids the punishment for crimes except by courts of law.

The Constitutional provisions against the acceptance of aristocratic titles and for governing the militia are both nullified by the Masonic lodge.

And under the terror of the lodge, which constitutes the most aristocratic element of the British Constitution, Congress nullifies a law of the State of Vermont forbidding the administration of secret oaths, thereby encouraging the Masons of that State to violate their own law.

The slave-pen was a sin chiefly against humanity; but the Masonic lodge is a determined, obdurate sin against the Prince of humanity; against the Redeemer of humanity. It turns a hard, impudent cheek to the appeals of the cross, and secretly defies the divine power that abolished the slave-pen. It never admitted the slave to its altars. It shut him out; ignored his common humanity, and, while Congress was being pushed by Christian people to recognize the manhood of the slave, the lodge was forcing upon Congress a recognition of its own dark and inhuman powers, which are so hostile to all Christian uprightness and manly dignity.

This foreign institution, which is of the same stamp as the Inquisition and Star-chamber exists in the District of Columbia only by the dereliction of duty of the Congressmen of 1864. It is a political machine that puts the threads of action for the whole Union in the hands of a few unprincipled men in Washington, and may well compete for the ascendency with Congress itself. Under the influence of such an institution, not even a Star-route fraud, nor the lodge administration that hatches it, need to blush. A power that defies the Saviour of mankind will ever give employment to some Ingersoll to work for the subversion of the laws of the country.

It is to the everlasting honor of the Anti-masonic party that it has found sixteen thousand persons who have dared to assert American manhood in the face of this foreign institution, and demand that the power conferred upon it by a servile Congress should be repealed. Every man in Congress in 1864 ought to be held accountable for that recreant act. To bestow confidence upon men who have so needlessly betrayed the rights and liberties of the citizen to the aggressions of a foreign institution, can tend only in one direction, and that is to the destruction of the Republic.

There is but one end that the "Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia" can serve, so far as Congress is concerned; and that is to hinder and clog every honest, patriotic aspiration, and favor low talents coupled with criminal proclivities. It can give great aid to a bad cause; but can never yield any reliable support to a good one. It is a power behind the Republican throne greater than the throne itself. If the religious press remains silent toward it as it generally has done heretofore, it will inevitably bring disparagement upon the cause of religion; for to remain silent toward so great a crime is to participate in the crime itself. Under such silence the tissue-ballots and the polygamous marriages of the Ku-klux and Mormon lodges might become recognized institutions of the land.

AN IMPORTANT FACT.

BY WOODRUFF POST.

In taking up Hon. Seth M. Gates' tract on Freemasonry a fresh remembrance of the discussion that took place between him and myself, by letter, has led me to think it would be advantageous to the cause of the prohibition of Masonry and kindred conclaves, to state the result.

On reading Mr. Gates' tract for the first time, years since, there seemed to me a serious contradiction in it originating in just one sentence. I soon directed his attention to it by letter, and cited him to the character he gave of Freemasonry. Having once been a Mason himself, he knew its genius of course. Where he says,

"I submitted to the humiliating ceremonies of initiation, as they are correctly detailed in Morgan's book and took the extra-judicial and profane oaths of the first three degrees. * * * The pernicious influence of the institution and its oaths upon the membership became so manifest in the abduction and murder of Morgan and the attempt upon Miller; in the justification of these outrages by HUNDREDS of Freemasons * * * I openly renounced Masonry. Its obligations are wicked and profane and no more obligatory than Herod's oath. The opportunity that Masonry affords bad, designing and unscrupulous men to further their wicked designs, to perpetuate iniquity, to screen the guilty from punishment, and defeat the ends of justice, is very great and most dangerous."

All through the tract he shows Masonry to be corrupt, profane, pretentious, deceptive, murderous, and yet he had introduced therein the following strange sentence: "A good man may remain a good and upright man despite his Masonry." The incongruity was pressed home upon his attention. It was argued that intelligent Christianty could not coalesce with such corruptness as he had described; that no upright and good man could be one with it and remain unpolluted.

During two or three interchanges of communications, at the first he laughed, at the second was serious, and at last he was convinced, and corrected the paragraph, omitting the obnoxious and erroneous idea incorporated in the strange statement that a good and upright man can be in league with a system of rank iniquity. Being a man of generous and noble impulses, he was lenient to the faults of others, but on discovering where his illogical position left him, he promptly, with an intense desire to do good, made the correction. Now, the readers of his tract will not find therein the unreliable declaration that a good man may remain a good and upright man despite his close affinity with Masonry. Reader, get the corrected tract. Let the wealthy circulate it by the tens of thousands. Do good before you go hence; and do not forget to add a codicil to your will, leaving a large sum to help the cause.

The above is most respectfully submitted to show the unsoundness and the danger of admitting that which is not true in fact, that "good and upright men" can be in sworn affinity with a blaspheming craft, infidel and abominable; sworn to keep the secrets thereof, murder and treason not excepted, and retain uprightness and purity.

Such an institution one hundred and three seceders in convention in 1828 declared Masonry to be exceedingly dangerous, blasphemous, murderous; unfit to exist among a free people. And every seceder since substantially has said the same thing, and all who dare reveal have but one corroborating voice. One such correspondent, a preacher, wrote me: "My soul loathes the accursed abomination. I look upon none of my defects, errors and sins of the past with such horror and loathing as with my experience as a Mason." O, an oath which makes humanity shudder! O, blasphemous! O, heaven-daring! Enough! Can then Christ and Belial dwell together?

"POINTED MEN."

"Pointed men! They are heard from occasionally, for they cannot be hidden and unknown. They do something, and what they do reports itself, like powder and ball. They make a stir. They have ideas, plans, experiences, that are strong, clear, and well-defined; and also will and heart to push them forward to the notice and acceptance of the world. They meet opposition, and know how to meet it. They are neither slaves nor cowards, but straight-meaning, straight-forward, straight-dealing men. They are manufacturers, rather than dealers in opinions; and while pushing out, like the notable horn spoken of by Daniel, they draw with the loadstone of truth, and melt as well as destroy. Though fearless, they are not unwise. Such as described are the typical, or balanced and standard-pointed men.

The devil fears these men of point, when aroused against him. We heard the report of a conversation between Satan and a saint, in which the latter was warned not to attend the ministry of a couple of evangelists whom he styled 'pointed men.' He cannot stand the falchions of such, but runs pell mell.

The Lord is searching for pointed men; men loaded with truth and the Holy Ghost, that will not wince in the storm; men so sharpened and tempered that every stroke they make goes through the slum and surface of error, down to the rock of ages. They have an open, divine commission to strike, and spare not.—The Harvester.

CONSTITUTED AUTHORITY.

The church of God has two grand divisions, the church militant, and the church triumphant. This great body has but one head; Jesus Christ the Lord of glory. Eph. 1: 22, 23; 4: 15; 5: 23; Col. 1: 18. This glorious church has but one infallible bishop. 1 Peter 2: 25.

The way into the second division of this church is through the first division. The only way into the first division is through "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." The "constituted authority" of this church is its Head and Bishop. John 5: 22—27; 1 Cor. 15: 24.

If assemblies calling themselves a church adopt, as fundamental law, an article declaring "There shall be no connection with secret combinations," this law is in harmony with the constituted authority of the church of God, and peculiarly honoring to the Head of his church. Then should it sometime happen that the "constituted authority" of these assemblies should prove to be out of harmony with that article of their law, would they be in harmony with the "constituted authority" of the church of God? Would it be right to "promote harmony with constituted authority," which is not in harmony with the constituted authority of the church of God? An individual cannot, neither can assemblies, abide in the militant division of the church of God, after ceasing to be in harmony with the constituted authority of his church. Rev. 2: 1—5; John 15: 6, 10.

When the great Head of the church of God was manifest in the flesh, there were those, in harmony with "constituted authority" who were not in harmony with the constituted authority of the church of God; who said, "As for this fellow we know not from whence he is." John 9: 29. And they clamorously demanded that he be crucified. Matt. 26: 59; Luke 23: 21; John 19: 5, 6. It was said of this great Jewish body (as well as of their temple, we think,) and their "constituted authority," "Behold your house is left unto you desolate." Matt. 23: 37—39; Luke 13: 35. "But as many as received him, to them gave he power (or right) to become the sons of God." John 1: 12. Those who were in harmony with the constituted authority of the church of God, were separated from the Jewish body and their "constituted authority," and the former became the true militant division of his church, while the latter became a desolate house, and will continue desolate, until they shall say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

The Divinely appointed leaders in this militant division of the church of God began the work for which they were ordained, (Mark 16: 15,) of publishing the joyful message of pardon, emancipation, and peace, through "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ;" first to the Jews (Luke 24: 47,) then to the Gentiles, and unto the uttermost part of the earth. Acts 1: 8; 13: 46. Many were gathered into the militant division of the church of God through their labors; numerous Christian assemblies were erected; and out of great tribulation, these leaders, one by one, passed to the triumphant division of his glorious church.

After their departure, men arose in these assemblies (Acts 20: 30,) in whose hearts ambition usurped the place of love to God, and gradually the "constituted authority" of the assemblies ceased to be in harmony with the constituted authority of the church of God. Desolation ensued. Eventually the assemblies and their "constituted authority" became a kind of ecclesiastical monstrosity, a body with two or three heads, each loudly cursing the other. (Mosheim, page 343: XV.) Many beheld it with wonder and perplexity. Separation and the Reformation followed; Other Christian assemblies were erected by the true soldiers of the militant division of the church of God.

"Ravening wolves" are not all dead. Matt. 7: 15. Men in whose hearts ambition rules, still come and go. "History repeats itself." The "god of this world" (2 Cor. 4: 4; John 12: 40) always working to accomplish the same object, but by different means, having made this great Christian body desolate, as he did the Jewish, by bringing it into harmony with "constituted authority," that is, in harmony with himself, at once turns his attention to these new Christian assemblies.

Now what do we see?

Dark lodges erected by the side of these Christian assemblies all over the world. Men are gathered into these lodges, promise and swear allegiance to, "constituted authority" in harmony with the "god of this world, then find their way into Christian assemblies, and if possible, gain control of them and their "constituted authority." Then the true soldiers of the militant division of the church of God, are forced into "back seats," and the "constituted authority" of these assemblies gradually ceases to be in harmony with the constituted authority of the church of God. Then desolation, separation and another reformation. "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

O brethren, honor your Head. Keep in harmony with the constituted authority of the church of God, and do not permit yourselves to be misled by "constituted authority," not in harmony with that of his church. M. Y. S.

SOME SUPPOSITIONS.

BY REV. HENRY AVERY.

"Suppose that three or five Freemasons did kill Captain William Morgan, what has that to do with Freemasonry?"

"Suppose that John Calvin was influential in procuring the burning of Servetus, what has that to do with Presbyterianism?"

"Suppose that Archbishop Purcell has failed and lost a milli dollars of trust funds, what has that to do with Romanism?"

"The world has never seen, and probably never will see a church or other society so compact and powerful as to regulate the behavior of all its members. To hold a great society, otherwise reputable, responsible for the crimes and eccentricities of here and there a member, or squad of zealots, is ungenerous and unjust."

The above is from the pen of T. K. Beecher, in the Elmira Gazette and Free Press. It is amazing that a man of Mr. Beecher's acknowledged ability should assume the position which those questions imply. With what an air of triumph does he, by a single question vindicate a system. Why does he not keep on and say, Suppose some hundreds of church members have engaged in the liquor traffic, what has that to do with the church; suppose some thousands of professedly loyal men were slaveholders, what had that to do with our country?

Let us try our hand at supposing: Suppose that, when we examine the case, we find that Romanism excuses embezzlement in a bishop, that it commands it under certain circumstances, that it enforces it by the strongest obligations profanity can suggest, and that Bishop Purcell acted in strict accordance with the letter and spirit of his instructions; suppose all this, then a child need not ask what Bishop Purcell's act has to do with Romanism.

All this, and more, do we find in the system of Freemasonry. In the first and second degrees the candidate binds himself to secrecy under the penalty of being barbarously murdered. In the third degree he promises to keep a Master Mason's secrets, except murder and treason, thus showing absolutely that the reference is to crime; binding himself under a penalty just as murderous, and still more barbarous. In the seventh degree he promises aid to a companion Royal Arch Mason, "whether he be right or wrong;" also to keep his secrets inviolable, "murder and treason not excepted;" or, as sometimes administered "without exception." It matters very little to say that these penalties are not always inflicted. They have been inflicted, and may be again, since there is the authority in the system itself.

Now the murderers of Morgan were carrying out the letter and spirit of Masonic law. They were doing just what they had been taught ought to be done. Besides, many Masons from that time to this, have justified the act. It is true that others have tried to evade the responsibility by inventing the Smyrna story, but the evidence accumulates as the years go by that the murderous penalty was inflicted. A man supposed to be a loyal, law-abiding citizen, an Odd-fellow, said to the writer, "Well, if the Masons did not kill Morgan, they didn't do their duty, that's all." Similar expressions can be quoted by the dozen, showing how the system has blinded its devotees, till wrong seems right; and murder, God's service.

Now, if it is asked what Morgan's murder has to do with Masonry; the answer is ready. It is the outworking of the criminal tendency found in the system from the very first obligation. It is a sample of the fruit the evil tree may be expected to produce. It is the legitimate result of evil teaching in an evil system. It bears the same relation that sutteeism bears to Brahminism, that polygamy bears to Mormonism.

We do not say that every Mason is a murderer, but we do say he is connected with a system that teaches murder and the concealment of crime. Many a man is better than the order to which he belongs, but the system is not to be judged by these. Many Romanists have been exemplary Christians, but this was in spite of indulgences, priest-pardoning, and probation in purgatory. So Masonry must be judged by its teachings, its tendency and its practical results. Above, we have given some of its teachings. Its tendency and results may be considered hereafter.

THE SERMON.

SEEKERS AND FINDERS.—A QUESTION.

BY D. L. MOODY.

"Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near" (Isa. 4:6.) Remember, it is not to seek for feeling, nor to seek repentance, nor even to seek faith, nor to seek joy, nor to seek good impressions; it goes beyond and above all that; it is, seek ye the Lord himself, and if we do seek the Lord there's no trouble about the result, for we shall find him. "For thus saith the Lord, seek ye me, and ye shall live" (Amos 5:4.) Life is in him, he is our life, seek him and we shall live. How shall we seek him? "Ye shall find me when ye shall search for me with all your heart" (Jer. 29:13.)

How shall we seek God? Seek him as men seek for wealth. Look at the men of business in this town. How terribly in earnest they are about it! When a man becomes really in earnest about the salvation of his soul, when a man seeks for the pearl of great price as men seek wealth and position down here, then we shall see multitudes of souls saved. When I was out in California a few years ago, I found men who were terribly in earnest for gold. I found men who had crossed the great American desert on foot when it took them six months to do it, and when they were exposed to great dangers and hardships all the way. But they did it, for they were really in earnest for wealth. When men seek for God as they seek for wealth, there will be no trouble about finding him.

How shall you seek God? Seek him as you seek for wealth. Men will go round the world to gain wealth, to add a few years if they can to life. They are terribly in earnest about it. But you don't have to go round the world to find God. "Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven?" (that is, to bring Christ down.) "or, Who shall descend into the abyss?" (that is, to bring Christ up from the dead.) "The word is nigh thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith which we preach." Salvation is here, and those who seek shall find it. God himself is near here, and he is seeking you. He has long been seeking you. He has sought you by your mother's prayers, or by your godly wife. He has sought you by dark and startling providences, so startling that at times in your life you've cried out, "Where shall I go, that I may hide from thee?"

A SEEKING SAVIOUR.

God is seeking your soul; he sought you in the rousing sermon that so alarmed you, and it was long before you could shake off the impression. God was seeking you when he laid you on that sick bed, and through the long weary hours you lay tossing to and fro. He has sought you in the still small voice of his Spirit whispering to your soul; it was the Son of man seeking for lost souls. I don't believe the Son of man has first to be sought for; he is the first seeker, and you must take the place of a seeker, too, for he came to save the lost. It won't be long till a seeking Saviour and a seeking sinner meet. How often do we meet with a man who is crying out, "My God, my God, where art Thou?" No, no, it is God who seeks first, not man. And it don't take long for a seeking God to meet an anxious seeking soul. Seek God seek him with all your heart, and see how quickly you will have the blessing.

How shall you seek God? Seek him as you seek your life. If this building were on fire and there was danger, how eager you would be to get out of it! How terribly in earnest you would be! Strange that man should be so earnest about his bodily life, and yet so careless and indifferent about his soul's salvation. Seek God as you would seek to save your life, and there won't be any trouble about finding him.

THE DAY OF HIS CONVERSION.

From first to last I have met a great many anxious inquirers in my time, and I never in my life saw one man who was in thorough earnest about salvation who didn't find it. I remember saying to a man some time ago, "I can tell you the day and the hour when you'll be converted." "Indeed! I didn't know you were a prophet."

"No, I ain't, nor the son of a prophet." "Well, I'd like to know how you can tell me that?"

"Well, you'll find him when you search for him with all your heart, for God himself has said so." That's Scripture.

TERRIBLY IN EARNEST.

I remember reading of a vessel being wrecked at sea. The lifeboats were lowered, but soon it was found that there was not room enough for all, some must be left to perish. One man, who was swimming in the water, was terribly in earnest to save his life, so he swam up to one of the lifeboats that was full and seized hold of it. They tried to prevent him but could not, so one of the men drew a sword and cut off his right hand. He swam up again and laid hold with the other hand. The man drew the sword again and cut off that hand. Still the man would not give up, and he swam to the boat and seized it with his teeth. Some of them said, "Don't cut off his head," and so they took and drew him into the boat. He saved his life because he was terribly in earnest.

So should we seek God. So should we seek the salvation of God, which is a thousand times more worth than any earthly treasure. "If thou seekest Him as silver, and searchest for Him as for hid treasure, thou shalt understand the fear of God, and find the knowledge of God." On the day of Pentecost these men were terribly in earnest: there was no trifling then. None went to sleep; I see one man gone to sleep here, but none went to sleep under Peter's preaching. When you and I value our souls as we value our life, then shall we find salvation.

THE PRESENT LORD.

Now I want to ask you this question: Do you believe the Lord may be found here? It says, "Seek the Lord while he may be found:" can the Lord be found here to-night?

Mr. Champness, do you believe the Lord may be found right here to-night? ("I do: I'll stake my life on it.")

Mr. Sankey, do you believe the Lord may be found right here? ("I do.")

My friends in the gallery, do you believe the Lord may be found right here? ("Yes, yes.")

You in the body of the house, do you believe that the Lord may be found here? ("Yes.")

Suppose I were to say that I lost a very valuable diamond here yesterday—which I didn't do, for I haven't got one—but suppose I should say I did, and that I valued it not only because of its worth, but also because it was the dying gift of a very dear friend, and that I would give five thousand dollars or £1,000 to the finder, I don't believe you'd hear much more of my sermon; you'd be thinking all the time: "I'd like to get that money." You would hardly wait to the end of the sermon; all the time you'd be looking down at your feet and around under the benches. I do believe all the police in Newcastle wouldn't get you out of this building till you had searched on your hands and knees every nook and corner on this platform. You'd be ready enough to let people see you search for the diamond for a thousand pounds, but you are ashamed to let them see you are in earnest about the salvation of your soul. Is there a man or woman in this audience who will venture to say that the salvation of their soul is not worth more than the most valuable diamond? You are ashamed to be seen seeking eternal life. You'd search eagerly enough for a diamond, but if your soul's salvation depended on it would you come right forward here?—("I would.") Well, that man needn't come forward; he can take Christ just right where he is. Take Christ not from the hand of man, but go right to himself. Listen to his own words, "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Salvation is God's gift, free as the air we breathe. Christ came to save sinners; he is seeking you now, and if you seek him you won't have to seek long.

I DARE NOT WAIT.

It is told of Dr. Chalmers that when he was on a visit in the northern part of Scotland he was entertained by a Christian lady, who told him she was very anxious about her daughter, and she asked him, "Will you talk to her?" He said he would; but the lady told him, "You will find her mind is set very firmly against religion. Her father and I and various friends have tried to talk to her, but it's no use; she is fairly set against it." "Oh, is that the case?" said Dr. Chalmers; "leave her in my hands, I'll do what I can." By and by he was left alone with the young lady, with whom he had made friends, and he said, "They have troubled you a good deal about this question of religion, have they not?" "Yes, they have." Suppose I was to ask them not to trouble you about religion for six months?" "Well," and she hesitated, "but perhaps I mayn't live that time." "Suppose then we say three months?" Still she thought she might be gone by that time. "Suppose we say one month?" Still the young lady trembled to put it off so definitely, for she might not live a month. "Suppose we say a week, then?" "I had better not put it off a week, it mayn't be safe." "You are quite right," replied the good doctor, "suppose we settle it now?" He got down on his knees and prayed for her, and they didn't separate until she was safe in the arms of Christ.

My friends, I tell you its the safest thing to do what God says: "Seek ye the Lord, while he may be found." He may be found now, we don't know that he may be found to-morrow. We are clearly taught in Scripture that now is the accepted time. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is yet near." Those antidelnvians would not pray while the ark was building, they would not listen to the preaching of Noah, but when the flood came, then they cried, but it was too late. When Judas went to the dark mountain garden to betray his Lord, it was time enough to repent, but when he came back and threw down the money in the temple it was too late, the Lord was gone. He repented after a sort, but too late, too late. So we read of the five virgins who forgot oil; they were waiting, they went to buy oil, but it was too late, the door was shut.

SEEK NOW.

Now God calls you, still he is near; seek ye him while he may be found. To-night is the night of mercy. I may be speaking to some one whose days of grace are numbered, who may be snatched away very soon. Some may never hear another gospel sermon, may never have another opportunity. You may even now be listening to your last call, the last words of mercy may even now be spoken to you. Make up your minds that this very night, ere you leave this hall, you will seek, seek earnestly, and seek till you find the salvation of your souls. Make up your minds that, come what will, you will not rest till you have crossed the line from danger to safety, till you have passed from death unto life. Make up your mind if you can get it eternal life you will have; eternal life, life without an end, life that is the power of God, life that is God's life in us. If, my friends, you can get that, is there any riches, any wealth, any honor, any fame, any glory to be compared with it? Is there a man or woman in this hall, or for that matter in all Newcastle, who would deliberately sign away their soul for all the wealth in the world! Is there one that would come forward to th reporters' table and take pen and ink to sign away their soul? I don't believe there is. You'd be horrified. "What, sign away my soul! sign away my soul! No, no." Yet though you would not take and sign it away, you trifle it away; you fritter it away; you lose its golden opportunities; the sands of life run out and you are not saved. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near."—The Watchman.

REFORM STORY.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.—UNDER THE JUNIPER TREE.

There is a certain exaltatiou of spirit whieh overcomes the weakness of the flesh when we engage iu a stern wrestle with any kind of moral evil. Henee it is that reformers in every age have goue through life with the step of laurelled victors moving to the sound of triumphal psalms. Yet God has so coustituted the human soul that it cannot always keep stretched to this heroic tension. The Elijahs who climb the nearest heaven on those heights of sublime daring for truth's sake generally find their juniper tree somewhere in the way.

Mark Stedman had eucountered threats, obloquy, persecution with unfaltering heart. He expected uothing else. He was renewing the battle at double odds, for while the murderous spirit of Masonry remained unchanged, as evidenced by the attempted attack on Lovejoy, there was not now, as in the Morgan days, an awakeued public sentiment to back up its opposers. To rouse that slumbering public sentiment, to lift up his voice like a trumpet and show the house of Judah their siu he conceived to be one of his peculiar duties as a sentinel of Zion; and he made no aecouut of possible difficulties in convincing of her guilt a lukewarm church that had forsaken her first love.

"Really, brother Stedman;" said the first of his brother ministers in the conference to whom Mark addressed himself, "I gave you credit for beiug a mau of more sense than to run a tilt against Masonry at your age. You might as well try to throw Gibralter into the sea."

"Amen," returned the elder, while his dark eye kindled and his thin cheek flushed. "Every false worship has been called impreguable. But the God I serve is a God of the hills as well as a God of the valleys; and moreover I have Christ's promise, 'If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, be thou removed and be thou cast into the sea, and it shall be done.'"

"These are not the days of miracles," returned the other rather curtly. "And to tell the truth I don't think it is Christian charity to indulge iu such wholesale denunciations of Masonry when four-fifths of the ministers in our conference belong to the lodge."

"Counting yourself, I see;" dryly answered Mark, who had just caught sight of a Masonic pin gleaming under the coat of his charitably-disposed clerical brother.

The latter looked a trifle embarrassed, not to say ashamed at the discovery.

"You see I don't wear it out in open sight. If I was all wrapped up in the institution like Elder Chadband, I should. I joined the lodge a few years ago because I thought it might increase my influence as a pastor. You know St. Paul became all things to all men that he might save a few."

Mark rose to his feet, stern and solemu.

"I have one question to ask, Was it to save men, or to gain more hearers, and as a consequence more popularity and more money that you joined an order whose badge you are ashamed to wear openly? You need not answer it to me. Answer it to God and your owu soul."

And having launched this keen arrow of truth Mark went his way with an inward prayer for this self-deceived shepherd of the flock, who after all was not so blameworthy as his elders in the ministry who had lured him by their example into such a path of hypocrisy.

Elder Chadband was an altogether different subject to deal with. Far from being ashamed of Masonry he gloried in the many degrees he had taken, and sounded the praises of the handmaid at every funeral and coruer stone laying, at which the fraternity figured, far and near.

He saw with alarm the serious trouble that Mark's fanatical views were likely to make in the conference, and he felt warranted in using almost any measure that might rid that body of his undesirable presence. But he believed in trying a little diplomacy first, and to this end he sought au interview with Mark who on his part had rather avoided any discussions with the elder, considering him as being too much in the situation of the Scriptural Ephraim to warrant the hope that any good might arise therefrom. He was therefore proportionately surprised wheu the elder thus urbanely began the conversation:

"While I am sorry that you feel it your duty to oppose such an excellent thing as Freemasonry, my dear brother Stedman, a system that in its leading points is drawn from revelation, and teaches in such an admirable manner so many important moral truths, I must say that your sincerity and earnestness, however misdirected, is above praise. And I wish that there was more of that spirit in the church. We need a fresh baptism of the old time zeal. There is too little of it—altogether too little of it nowadays." And the elder sighed as if deeply impressed with the melancholy truth just uttered.

Mark opened his eyes. What did it mean? Was Saul also among the prophets.

"Now I believe in the largest Christian liberty;" continued the elder, not waiting for an answer; "aud no doubt one important use of having so many different sects is to make that liberty possible. I have been seriously thinking, my dear brother Stedman, that in some other church holding similar views on the subject of Masoury, you could preach those views without offence, and thus labor with more freedom and a greater prospect of usefulness. Of course we should be sorry to lose one of our most valuable preachers; but our loss would be the gain of some other denomination, such as the United Brethren, for instance. We will give you letters of recommendation to that or any church you may prefer."

Mark's eye flashed. He had been unsuspicious hitherto; now he saw through the whole thing. Elder Chadband had been playing to perfection the part of a boa constrictor, which slimes its victim over before swallowiug it, and I am afraid that Mark's reply to his proposal had less than the usual savor of Gospel meckness.

"Is this Christian liberty—to be able to declare the whole counsel of God, not freely in any part of the church universal, but only in a few sectariau by-ways and corners? No, Elder Chadband, while I have Christian fellowship with all who walk in the truth, by whatever name they are called, the church of the Wesleys' is the church of my adoption. It was there my first vows were paid, and until she casts me out of her communion I will join no other."

This outburst rather startled Elder Chadband. He had hoped for a different result, not calculating that there was still some unquenched fire under Mark's meek countenance and threadbare coat.

"Really, Brother Stedman"—and there was a decided dropping of the elder's urbaue tone—"I am grieved that you should take a mere kindly hint in such a spirit. We are commanded to separate ourselves from such as cause schism and offense, and to tell you the truth many in our conference consider you liable to that charge. So in the truest spirit of brotherly love I have pointed out to you a course that will prevent all necessity for such a painful and disagreeable step."

"It seems then that you are willing to recommeud me to some unsuspecting church as 'a brother beloved for his work's sake, while all the while I am layiug under a grievous charge of 'causing schism and offeuse.' You would have me act a lie by representing that I seek another church from personal preference, when I do it to avoid the 'painful and disagreeable' notoriety of being forcibly ejected by the one I go from. Is this Christian charity or lodge dissimulation? If truth, faithfully preached, causes schism in any church, the worse for that church. Elder Chadband, in the day of Christ's appearing, how will you answer before him for your connection with a system that points out to man another way of salvation than through his atoniug cross? How will you bear to stand at his judgment bar with the blood of souls cliuging to your skirts that the lodge has deluded and destroyed? Woe unto you Masonic pastors, for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men. Ye neither go in yourselves, and them that are entering in ye hiuder."

And having thus delivered his righteously iudignant soul, Mark left Elder Chadband in a more disturbed state of mind than Masonic philosophy would seem to warrant, and more than ever confirmed in his opinion that Brother Stedman was a dangerous man to remain in the ranks of the Methodist ministry.

Now the church in Brownsville, presided over by Elder Cushing, was Baptist; and though, as Mark truly said, "the church of the Wesleys was the church of his adoption," he always felt in the hiddeu depths of his soul a yearning impulse of affection towards that particular chamber in Zion where he had been cradled. So when a certain Baptist minister came in his way a little while after, who "had never joined the lodge, and considered all secret societies at variance with the spirit of the Gospel,' Mark began with considerable hopefulness to urge upon him his duty as a Christian minister to express those views in the pulpit.

"I have very few Masons in my church; I could count them all on my finger's ends," said the Baptist pastor, looking a trifle disturbed at this very direct application of his principles. "It would hardly be worth the while for me to leave the saving doctrines of the Gospel to preach on a side issue."

"You acknowledge that Masonry is an evil thing," returned the severely logical elder. "Then if you have one Mason in your congregation his soul is in danger, aud you can no more neglect to warn him without incurring guilt than if there were fifty or a huudred."

The Baptist minister was sileut for a moment, and then answered coldly:

"You were once yourself in the Masouic order, I understand."

"It is true that I have worn the mark of the beast," qnietly answered the elder; "and for a short time I reudered him faithful service. But Christ's own blood washed away that mark long ago."

"Well, everybody has his own ideas of duty, Elder Stedman. Now for my part I couldn't take the solemn obligations that are required of all who become Freemasons, and then feel right to break them afterwards. The just man, we are told, sweareth to his own hurt and changes not. So we must agree to differ on the other question. I think hobbies should be kept out of the pulpit—reform hobbies as much as any."

This was the taunt that sent Mark under his juniper tree—that is to say into his plain, bare little study, where he paced back and forth for awhile, his whole soul in one of those wild tumults to which only the still small voice can speak peace. But the earthquake and the whirlwind must go before. Where he had a right to expect understanding and sympathy, he had received a stone—nay! worse, a stinging scorpion. His heart writhed under the injustice, and cried out in the bitterness of its agony. Why must he ever lead a forlorn hope? Why must he be the one to always stand in the breach? How could he hope to batter down this grim fortress of secret iniquity single-handed? Had he not been very jealous for the Lord God of Hosts when every pastor around him was either openly committed to the worship of Baal or preserving a cowardly and shameful silence? Surely he had battled long enough. Death seemed better than life; an ignominious retreat better than to continue a hopeless struggle, with the church and the world against him.

But God never leaves his servants under the juniper tree without sending an angel to strengthen them. And even now his angel was on the way to strengthen the poor discouraged elder who, to spiritual weakness, was beginuing to add bodily faintness; though when there came a tap at his study door, which he took for a call to dinner, he only answered:

"I thiuk I won't come down to-day, Hannah."

Hannah was used to her husband's frequent seasons of fasting, and it did not strike her as anything unusual. So she only replied: "There is a stranger waiting below who wants to see you. He didn't give me his name."

"Tell him I will be there iu a moment."

As soon as Hanuah closed the door Mark threw himself ou his knees aud tried to pray; but the moment passed in a wordless trance of pain; and risiug, Elder Stedman went wearily down stairs to greet his unknown visitor.

—Miss Isabella Bird, whose account of travels ou horseback through the interior of Japan is one of the best books yet writteu upon the customs of that interestiug people, shows that beneath the fair exterior of Japanese politeness exits a foul sink of uuchastity, love of lyiug, and a hideous drain of manifold iniquities. She says iu the final chapter of "Unbeaten tracks in Japan": "Of the shadows which hang upon the horizou of Japan, the darkest, to my thinking, arises from the fact that she is making the attempt, for the first time in history, to secure the fruits of Christianity without transplanting the tree from whence they spring. The nation is sunk in immorality, the millstone of orieutalism hangs around her neck iu the race ou which she has started, and her progress is political and intellectual rather than moral; iu other words, as regards the highest destiny of man, individually or collectively, it is at present a failure. The great hope for her is that she may grasp the truth and purity of primitive Christianity, as taught by the lips and life of our Lord Jesus Christ, as resolutely as she has grasped our arts and sciences; and that in the reception of Christiahity, with its true principles of mauliness and national greatuess, she may become in the highest sense 'The Land of the Rising Sun' and the light of Eastern Asia."

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.

J. E. Gates of Halifax, Vt., sends us a good word, with a contribution for the work. He is determined to stand for the truth as long as secret orders oppose it.

A young man to whom we sent an exposition of the Knights of Pythias replies: "I have seen enough now without joining them. I should consider it a disgrace to go through such ceremonies."

Mr. A. M. Paull writes that he wishes to have a meeting in Providence that shall command the attention of worthy people, and mentions places in Rhode Island which he thinks are ready for lectures.

An excellent letter from Stephen Grover of East Boston gives details of work done by the way while on a business tour through Maine. It is encouraging to hear of a growing opposition to secret orders and a desire to hear more about them.

At a Methodist ministers' meeting at Springfield, Mass., recently, one subject discussed was the "Social life of the church." One minister said, while settled in a certain city he joined a sporting club and the members came to his church because he had come down to their level, socially. Another said that Masonry helps ministers to reach men, but failed to say whether it helped them lead them to Christ.

A lecturer's attempt to set forth the truth concerning secret societies is usually supplemented by the efforts of the lodge to discredit it. In regard to the Vermont lectures, Mrs. DeWolf says: "Mr. DeWolf thinks he has had a very hard time in defending your character for truth and integrity. You would smile at what the opposition can say."

Rev. Dr. Terhune said at last night's meeting of the Congregational club that if there was one thing that he failed to understand and never expected to this side of that future when all things are to be made plain, it was the relation of a parish to a church.—Springfield Republican.

From observation and experience it looks like that of a master to a servant, and a hard master at that.

A minister's wife once said to me "Is your husband a Mason or Odd-fellow?" I replied, "He is not." "Has he not been invited to become one? I overheard my husband and another minister talking about it, they seemed to be very anxious I should join one or the other,—but don't let him join; for when Freemasonry or Odd-fellowship comes in, all happiness goes out. You cannot trust your husband when he goes to the lodge; you never know what he is doing there."—Extract from a letter.

THE LETTER.

THE SECRETARY SICK, BUT THE WORK GOES ON.

WORCESTER, Mass., Feb. 6, 1883.

Your N. E. Secretary being temporarily disabled and laid aside for repairs, his pen will be taken up, and his place as correspondent occupied by a "weaker instrument." Mr. Bailey came home from Connecticut quite tired, and on Sabbath was obliged to give up half his appointments, as he was too ill to leave his room. He is recovering and will soon be once more in the field.

His trip to Western Connecticut was encouraging and hopeful. He visited Thompsonville, Hartford, Tariffville, Simsburg, Weatogue and Windsor, visiting old friends, finding new ones and improving opportunities to speak the truth where it would do good. The details will be reserved for the next letter. At Hartford he visited the Theological Seminary and left a supply of Weed pamphlets for the students. He also called upon the friends in that city, and after consultation decided to engage Melodeon Hall for the next Connecticut Convention, subject to the approval of Messrs. Conant and Barlow. At Tariffville he was hospitably entertained by Mr. Mitchellson, where he providentially met a large number of young people and was allowed to make some "remarks" in their hearing, and also gained some information which will be valuable to him in pursuing his work.

Though Mr. Bailey has not lectured on his late trips, he feels that the work done is quite as profitable, if not more so. He meets in one way and another as many people, without the constraint of a formal meeting or the necessity of paying for a hall. He has many opportunities for private conversation with people who desire information, and many friends are gained in this way.

Here in Worcester we hope the cause is gaining. We want to take no backward steps here or elsewhere in New England, and hence the work must often appear to be progressing but slowly. But we believe it is progressing, and that with the help of the many friends scattered all over these New England States there will be a broad foundation laid on which to build the truth. A large amount of reform literature is being circulated and the demand for more is increasing. Mr. Spaulding finds friends and an open door everywhere, and our little paper is going to hundreds who never so much as knew there was an organized opposition to secret societies; and though some say it isn't time to agitate the subject yet, and others think we could do so much more good if we would "drop that question," we still feel encouraged to go on, believing that, having to tolerate the reform because it will not budge, people will "first endure, then pity, then embrace."

We hear many commendations of the Cynosure in its improved appearance and the strength of its articles. The sample copies sent us go out almost immediately to parties we hope may subscribe, and we hope to make use of the last proposition for trial subscribers and gain some in that way.

MRS. E. D. BAILEY.

REFORM NEWS.

NORTH EAST PENNSYLVANIA.

THE CLIFFORD CONVENTION—A PERILOUS RIDE—WHEREFORE THE DIFFERENCE.

JACKSON VALLEY, Pa., Feb. 5, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE.—The convention at Clifford, on the 1st and 2nd inst. was both pleasant and profitable. It had not closed when we left on the morning of the 3d, but I can report progress. On the evening of the 1st, after devotional exercises and a brief address, Bro. S. E. Starry worked the Entered Apprentice degree, together with explanations, all of which were quite satisfactory to the audience with the exception of two Masons who claimed that the secrets of their order were being unlawfully exposed. It was with some difficulty that they were induced to be quiet. It is probable that they had both been made drunk for the occasion.

Feb. 2d was devoted to various items of business, and in the evening Bro. Starry worked the Master's degree to a quite full house, notwithstanding the bad state of the roads, which rendered walking very difficult, and the charge of fifteen cents for admission. The working of the degree and the accompanying remarks by Bro S. and others were highly satisfactory and left an excellent impression on the people. The following is the series of resolutions adopted.

Resolved, That regarding Freemasonry as a relic of barbarism, an obstacle to Christianity and an enemy to good government, and regarding the other secret orders as more or less subordinate and tributary to this order, we earnestly protest against their continued existence and heartily approve of the American party candidates.

Resolved, That the history of secret military orders shows that they have heretofore been a standing menace to free government; and that whatever may have been the reasons for the existence of the Grand Army of the Republic, we believe that it has survived its usefulness, and that its members would confer a great public benefit by quietly disbanding.

Resolved, That we hail with entire satisfaction the improved appearance and excellent editorial management of the Christian Cynosure, and as the success of our reform depends mainly on an increase of its circulation, we will strive to do all that is practicable to increase its subscription list.

Resolved, That we recommend Eld. Nathan Callender as State Lecturer, and urge on all the friends of the reform to arrange for lectures and to circulate the publications of the National Christian Association, and we especially urge the distribution of tracts and the support of the tract fund.

Five of us left early Saturday, Feb. 3d, in a wagon to come to this place nearly fifty miles distant. It rained in the morning and during a large part of the day, and the roads were a sheet of ice, on which it was very difficult to walk. The country is mountainous all the way, and the whole trip was full of danger. Rev. E. Barnetson, who was our driver, had evidently been trained in the school of Jehu. Nor could we find fault with furious driving. Indeed, it was our only safety. Had he driven slowly, down these long, steep, icy hills, it would have inevitably resulted in our sliding round and upsetting. As it was we were mercifully preserved, and got within a few rods of Bro. B.'s house before we were upset. All but Bro. B. and I had been left and we suddenly found ourselves on the ice; but aside from being pretty thoroughly shaken up and wet down we suffered no serious harm.

Yesterday, Sabbath, our aching limbs and injured horse prevented our going to more than one meeting, to which we could walk, and where we met but a few. The roads remain in about the same condition and until there is a change it will be impossible to do much. Though the country we passed through was all very rough, yet I was greatly pleased with the neat villages, fine country churches and school-houses, and marks of industry, economy and thrift, so strikingly in contrast with the squalid poverty I have seen in similar regions in the South. I was led to reflect that mental and moral culture do more for the development of a country than the greatest natural capacities.

CABIN CREEK, Lewis Co., Ky., Jan. 16, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Uncle Sam's last trip each week usually brings us the Cynosure, but last Saturday though the mail was on time the Cynosure failed to put in an appearance. We couldn't imagine the cause, but see now it was stopping for a new dress. We are rather old-fashioned in our notions and don't like to see our friends follow the fashions unless we can see some good cause for the change. We think, however, the change made in the Cynosure is for the better. We miss the name of the editor and his associates which have spoken to us so kindly from the first page for so long, but gladly welcome the name of another old friend in their places. We wish success to the paper in its new home.

Some of the readers think strange that we are still here at this place when we fully intended to leave the work here in the fall in the care of some one else. Let me explain that the benevolent (?) institution of Freemasonry has a finger in the pie.

Some time last summer Mr. Browne answered an enquirer in the New York Witness who was asking for some one to advise him. He had for ten years tried to run away from duty, refused to obey what seemed to be a call from God to preach, until he had become "of all men most miserable." Mr. Browne wrote, asking to correspond with him. He proved to be a young man in Illinois, who wrote in reply an interesting letter asking about our work here, and saying he believed this to be a call from God. Mr. Browne in his first letter sent him one of our circulars, a copy of which was printed in an August number of the Cynosure, which stated clearly our position on secretism and other reform matters. In a letter dated October 6th, our Illinois friend says he has some friends whom he thinks would be interested in an enterprise of this kind, and asks for further information concerning our present needs, prospects of the school, etc., etc., and adds: "I think I shall not swerve from this thing that has been so clearly pointed out to me. The whole matter seems to be providential. In a few weeks I shall have made arrangements and will see you." Mr. Browne wrote at length giving the asked for information, and speaking of the battle we were having against lodgery and other prominent evils of the day. After some time came a card saying, "My being allied to Masonry would prevent my doing anything for you, for by your last I see you are opposed to it. I had not noticed that fact before. It was by that very agency that I expected to help you." I can not do better than to quote a part of Mr Browne's reply (which was returned unopened) to the card verbatim:

"I am, however, very sorry to learn of your sad entanglement. As a messenger of Jesus Christ I exhort you in the words of the Holy Ghost, 'Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove (convict, expose; see Adam Clark's notes;) them,' and 'Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers,' and so on. (See context of last passage, also Matt. 5:34-37; Jas. 5:12; Lev. 5:4, 5; Ezk. 8; 2 John 9; Ex. 20:5; 2 Thes. 5:5; Acts 14:12, etc., etc.) Masonry is a religion rivaling the religion of Christ; no one can be intelligently loyal to the two systems at the same time. I exhort you in humility and the fear of God, do not transgress (go beyond) the doctrine of Christ. I send you a few tracts; please read them and don't fail to read some good book on the subject. Let me recommend to you Pres. C. G. Finney's work on Masonry. I can send to you, or you can get for 35 cents of Ezra A. Cook, 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill. But how is it you can so readily set aside a work to which you believe God has called you, even though Masonry does stand in the way? Is the voice of the lodge more imperative than the voice of God? Is Masonry a power behind the throne of God even? After this ten-years struggle do you finally succumb to the 'god of this world?'"

As I have said before this was returned unopened and we hear no more of the young man.

This is too long already. I'll tell more of our work another time. Yours truly, M. C. BROWNE.

—Among other movements and projects in Germany to commemorate the 400th anniversary of the birth of Martin Luther, on November 10, 1883, says the Lutheran Observer, is that of restoring old castle church (Schloss Kirche) at Wittenberg, upon whose doors the famous Ninety-five Theses against indulgences were nailed on October 31, 1517. The building has suffered much from the destructive vicissitudes of war and time, and has been for many years in a state of general decay and neglect. Its strong stone towers have been pierced with openings for canon, to serve its purpose as a military fortress, but they have no bells or belfries to call the people to worship in the renowned old edifice, in which Luther first proclaimed the gospel of justification by faith and not by works, and thundered against the corruptions of the Church of Rome.

—Affairs are brightening on the West Coast of Africa in the new mission of the American Board. The missionary band now numbers six men and three women, all in good health and spirits.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A CAUSE OF DULL PRAYER MEETINGS.

The following remarks are good, taken from an address in the London Freeman:

We are told that the last time Phillip of Macedon harangued his soldiers they knew that it must be the last time because they noticed with a chill and awful foreboding that he stood on a tomb to speak. So a shiver creeps through me at the sight of a man who being pastor of a church answering to the picture we have just looked at [causes of dull prayer meetings] stands on a tomb of dead souls to preach, for I fear that cold from his dismal standing place will shoot into his soul, kill his heart, and nullify his message. Depend upon it sound gospel preaching is not the only thing that is essential to evangelical success.

If the author of the above language had had in his mind's eye the preacher standing as it were in the "dismal" Masonic lodge he would have illustrated his point as exactly as he has done by Phillip of Macedon standing on a grave. The Masonic lodge is a grave for Christianity. Those preachers who are knowu Freemasons verily vaccinate their every sermon with the poison of Masoury. They preach two gospels; oue in the secret chamber, another in the church; two ways of salvation, one by Christ to the people another by Masonry in the lodge. With such men it is "good Lord, good devil." They coudemu for uubelief iu Christ, and teach the way to the Grand Lodge above without him! They occupy indeed "a dismal standiug place" which kills the heart, and nullifies the gospel message. What! expect sermons with Masonry as an ally to promote Christianity! So Eve hoped for blessing from the apple. So slavery nurtured, brought forth our great war, and the religion of Masonry must disrupt the churches. SENEX.

MASONIC DUPLICITY.

ALLEGAN, MICH., JAN. 17, 1883.

A man with whom I was once acquainted was asked by one to whom he was trying to sell a horse, if the animal would jump. The answer was, "If you put a light poke on him he will go anywhere," given with tone aud gesture that satisfied the purchaser that the horse so treated would be perfectly orderly. But of coursc he wasn't; and when his jumping was complained of the owner was comforted with an "I told you so." Moral: When a seller makes a statement to yon as buyer, look at both sides of it.

Masonry, in the person of the Worshipful Master as the seller, assures the candidate as buyer of Masonic secrets aud obligations, on the honor of a man and a Mason, that there is nothing in the obligation that can conflict with the exalted duties he may owe to his God, his country, his neighbor, his family or himself, and the buyer is satisfied and takes his purchase accordingly. Now we wish to make apparent the fact that there are two interpretations of this language, one for the order and one for the candidate. What is it intended that the caudidate shall understand by this language? Simply this, that this obligation is not to be construed to conflict with any of these exalted duties; in other words, where there may seem to be a conflict between the obligation and any of these duties, the obligation is to be so interpreted that the seeming conflict will disappear without in the least infringing upon these duties; and this is the interpretation always given to outsiders. Now let us look at the other side of this assurance.

What does the order understand by this langnage? Simply this, that the exalted duties, etc., are not to be construed to conflict with the paramount obligation of Freemasonry; in other words, that nothing that God, country or family requires, is a duty, if it conflicts with his masonic obligations. Let no one suppose for one moment that he will be permitted to briug qnestions of conflict between duty and Masonic obligation, to the bar of his conscience for decision. The order settles all snch questions in favor of the obligation, and the individual must snbmit. In fact, to have it otherwise would be utterly subversive to the institution, as any one may readily see. Let ns supposc a man comes to his Worshipful Master and says, I feel that my duty to God requires that I expose the secrets of Masonry. Will the W. M. approve the plan for the sake of the man's conscience? Try it and see. Or he says, My duty to my own country requires that I pursue Masonic criminals to justice; will he receive encouragement for conscience's sake? Try it and see. You can test this matter in mauy ways, but the result will be the same in all cases: the lodge obligation upheld at the expense of every law, human or divine.

To our secret society friends we have this to say, If you have been imposed upon by this lying assurance, you have every reason to throw off the obligation fraudulently imposed upon you, and we call upon you in the name of God whose law is broken again and again, in the name of Christ whose name is cast out as evil, in the name of conntry whose laws are defied, in the name of every sacred and holy relationship of life which is iuvaded to throw off all allegianec to an institution whose only foundation is unmitigated fraud. W. H. Ross.

EXPERIENCE, TESTIMONY, EXHORTATION.

FROM A SECEDED MASON.

DENVER, Colorado, Feb. 2, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I was onec a Mason, but was suspended by my lodge in 1873 for lack of means to pay my dnes. At the time I gave them ten dollars, which was not given back to me, but was retained, which act I took upon as stealing, for they had no right to keep my money and suspend me also. I have nothing to say against Masonry as taught for moral precepts, but as lived by many at this day and age. There are many good and well-meaning men among the Masons, and many evil disposed ones. I do not condemn a man becausc of Masonry, for all men are already condemned because they have not believed on Jesus Christ the Son of God for life, light aud love. I condemn no man for his acts of beuevolence. A man will not be lost because he is a Mason, nor because he is not a Mason.

In 1875 the Holy Spirit of God revealed to me my Savionr, the Lord Jesus, and then I saw, and not until then, what was iu Masonry. I saw that I, as a child of God, had no fellowship with any orders of man in this world. The calling of God is an high one, a divine oue, a holy one, hence I was called to perfectly separate myself from any and all orders and sects in this world of darkness and sin, which cannot see the true light of God. I felt very bad at the time to think that I must be suspended from Masonry, and clung to it to the very last; bnt it failed me. After I saw the Lord I soon enough saw who was my hope and Saviour. To-day I am glad that they handled me as they did, for had I continued through life in Masonry, asleep to trnths, I should have perished in the end. When God ealls a man into a divine life and walk, he also calls for a separation of that person from all worldly orders. Therefore, a man who walks in these orders and institutions of men has not yet seen the true light which lighteth the world. If a man has passed out from darkness and death into life and light, he does not still abide in darkness, bnt walks with God, who is light.

While I was a Mason in good standing I only had and held a form of the truth, but had not truth as in Jesus. I once said, after I had attained the Master's degree, that this Masonry was all the heaven I desired; but alas! I afterwards found that I had not found the truth, and God made me feel the gross darkness around me, for all my friends in the lodge forsook me at the time of financial trouble.

I need not say that the first three degrees of Masonry have been exposed, for all Masons of any age are fnlly aware of that fact, and of course have made provisions for it. I would say to any professed follower of Christ to separate yourselves from any and all orders in which is strife and division. Masonry is no place for a child of God, for he is deceived when he holds on to it and its forms, for they are only shadows, and therefore is not the place for refuge and safety. Noah did not get into the shadow of the ark, but made sure to get into the ark itself, leaving the shadow without. Many times there is some comfort in the shadow resting, but certainly no security. God cannot nor will not walk with people who presist in walking in shadows and forms and dark places. Such are not sons of the living God, but only those who are separated from idols. God is light, and in him is uo shadow nor any darkuess. A person is deceived if they think they walk with him and continue in these orders. If you are in a lodge of Masons or Odd-fellows, separate yourselves to the honor and glory of God who hath called yon unto himself. I speak kindly of Masous but uot of Masonry. May all orders soon fall into the bottom of the pit, to forever remain there to dceeive no more. Truly yours, GEORGE H. GREENSLITT.

THE CONFERENCE MEETING.

Kansas is first upon the floor with a cheering word of the progress of reform sentiment among thoughtful people. The news which Bro. H. S. Jones of Olathe sends is very significant. May there be many more items like it from Kansas:

People are becoming bolder. Last Sabbath evening Elder Madison of the M. E. church preached a very pointed sermon on the subject, "Have you Christ with you?" He showed where they were allowed to take Christ, and told of some places they were not allowed to take him. This was something neither the church nor the lodge were looking for; but light is breakiug in, and we hope to see the reform work moving steadily on. This was at the same place where Bro. Mathews was so distnrbed about a year ago, while trying to enlighten the people on the subjeet of secret societies. Bro. P. S. Feemster was here last fall and delivered a leeture in the old school house in this same town, but everything was very quiet.

I was told by a granger yesterday that the grange was a grand swindle. He had also been a member of the Grand Army and pronounced it a fraud. I met with a member of the Wesleyan church a few days ago, who was a member of the Grand Army. I thought that church free from such things. Where shall we go that we may not come in contact with some of the unfruitful works of darkness. I am investigating this matter, and standing outside of any church organization, and shall continue to do so unless I can find one frce from such things. If it is a sin to countenauce Masonry, it surely is a sin to tolerate any of its offspring.

We have here two opinions on our grand story. Both from good brethren in Wiseonsin, one a Wesleyan the other an old Baptist preacher:

The changes [in the Cynosure] are all right; but ouc change more I would like, the spaee given to fiction to be given to fact. "Holden with Cords" I do not read. Novels better be left to the secular press. I thiuk that is the sentiment of a large share of the Christian readers of onr paper. I am greatly in sympathy with the sentiments of Jonn G. Fee.

Now the other:

I want to order in advance the forthcoming book "Holden with Cords." I want it for the young. In my judgment it will be to the anti-secret cause what "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was to the anti-slavery. The youth will read it. I shall do all I can for this cause.

An Iowa brother, J. Fender of McVeigh, bears an honorable testimony to the faithful instruction of a parent:

My father was one of the first voters to put down slavery, but did not live to see it; and was also opposed to secret orders. Though he is dead his spirit yet speaketh through his children. I hope to live to see secret societies put down aud the use of intoxicating liquors, tobacco, and pistols prohibited, that the pure air God has given and society shall not be polluted; for which all lovers of Christ should unite. I have read articles from different writers on the subject of church union, and one from Bro. Fee under the title, "Undenominational Churches." Now if we can organize a society without name or tenet, it would be undenominational aud unsectarian; but in order to accomplish certain ends we must organize on principles of union, for how can two walk together except they be agreed? And if we assume the name of "Chnrch," "Church of God," "Church of Christ," though they are biblical terms, that denominates, for we must distinguish ourselves from various other organized bodies. If we could see eye to eye, we would realize the Lord's prayer "that they may all be one;" then salvation would cover the earth as water the great deep. Though we may differ a little iu onr views, let each one work over against his own house in turning down the strongholds of sin.

Bro. G. W. Doualdson of Washingtou is always ready with something from his daily experience:

The light is shining. A brother told me last week that a young man called to see him who has left the Masonic order and has been working for God, preaching against this and all sins. God is leading him day by day, and he is growing stronger receiving truth froun one of God's saiuts. I believe that my prayers are being answered.

W. O. Norval, of Seward, Neb., has been trying to draw the editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate out of his clam shell. The bait does not tempt Dr. Edwards, for as a Freemason he does not desire to be questioned thus:

There is a little agitation here caused by certain publications agaiust secret orders, deuouncing them as hostile to our free institutions, the eueuies of Christ and his cause. They also accuse the press of our conntry with beiug wilfully sileut, so that the masses cannot be informed. As you are a leader in our church and manage one of her papers why do you not defend the secret orders, if they are benevolent as they claim to be? But if it be true that they are a power for evil, why are you silent? Is it not your duty to uphold all truth and deuounce all error and false religion?

Notwithstanding the boasted benevolence of Odd-fellowship, if a member is delinquent in his dues seven days he is not entitled to beuefits.

—At a recent dinner given by President Arthur to the Diplomatic Corps, six wine glasses were set to each plate. Eighteen courses were served with wines at each course. Shame! Belshazzarian, bacchanalian feasts are rendering our national Capitol a modern Babylon. If this continues, we may look out for the handwriting on the wall.—Wesleyan.

—The anniversary of the birth of Tom. Paine, author of the "Age of Reason," was celebrated on Sabbath evening in the German Masonic Temple of New York city—a fit place for the memorial of such a character.

HOW TO MILK.

To answer the inquiry as to how to milk, we would say, practice. To teach the art of milking by rule is practically impossible. To offer some suggestions, the result of much practical experience, which may be of value to persons not wholly inexperienced, is all that may, with any degree of propriety, be attempted by any man, no matter how skillful.

The old method of milking in yards and fields, wherever the cows might be found, is largely abandoned by intelligent and enterprising dairymen. It is better to start right. Always put the cow in the stanchion before beginning to milk her. It is better for the cow, better for the milker, and money in the pocket of the owner. As a rule, it is best to get along if possible without fettering or in any way hampering a cow, but it is better to tie her legs than to attempt by any violent means to subdue a fractious or vicious animal which shows a determination to kick. A plain strap with a ring at one end and a snap at the other put around both legs above the gambrel joint is the simplest and best fetter.

If the cows have been in sloughs or other places where their udders have become filthy, the first business should be to clean them. A whisk broom and a horse brush (the kind made from rice root is best) are the best implements for dusting and cleaning the sides and udders of the cows. Washing should never be resorted to unless absolutely necessary, and then it should be followed by thorough wiping. The teats should be absolutely and entirely dry before commencing to milk. A slovenly, lazy milker will often wet the teats with milk; it is both easier and nastier milking with wet teats. No good dairyman will tolerate a milker of that kind a single day. Many good milkers use a one-legged stool; more use a three-legged one. Some use a bench on which to set the pail while milking; more hold it between their legs; a few set it on the floor. There are several very good devices for keeeping floating impurities out of the milk-pail during the process of milking. They are not, however, an absolute protection against slovenly habits. It will never do to substitute them for care and painstaking. They are only auxiliaries at best, and sometimes foster bad habits more than they conduce to cleanliness.

The good milker always seats himself beside the cow in such a manner that his left arm may be always ready to shield his person and pail from any effort of the cow to use her leg. He should have a milking cap or hat, that he may gently press his head against the side of the cow. The habit is easily acquired by her of submitting to the gentle pressure of the head and arm, and it has a very soothing and quieting effect upon even viciously inclined animals. Some writers recommend milking the forward pair of teats first, and the hind ones after. It is the most unnatural of methods. Some good milkers milk the near pair first, and the far pair after. The best and most expert milkers milk the corner teats and often change, thus drawing the udder down uniformly. The expression "pulling the teats" is often heard, but pulling the teats should be studiously avoided. Stripping the teats with the thumb and finger is a bad habit of the milker, and causes the bad habit of the cow of only giving down her milk when thus manipulated. It injures the teats and udder. The true action of the hand in drawing the milk from the teats is not easily described. It should be placed loosely around it, with a gently lifting motion brought against the udder; then closed around the teat with a progressive motion which completely empties it. The prineipal fault with beginners is that they close the whole hand at once and then pull the teat. The fore finger should close first and each succeeding one in order. Sometimes the beginner gets a better idea of the true motion if he is told to get as much of the udder and as little of the teat in his hand as possible, and then close the hand without pulling at all. To milk gently, rapidly, thoroughly, are the three prineipal requisites.—Live Stock Journal.

HAVE YOUR CHOICE.

If you want a fowl with handsome plumage, proud and majestic carriage, clean cut and stylish, and withal endowed with matchless courage to defend himself and harem—choose the Game. If you want a breed that looks quizzical, combined with matter-of-fact traits, ornamental, though broken in colors, eminently useful for laying and table qualities—choose the Houdan. If you want a mammoth fowl of a quiet disposition, not prone to rambling, a good feeder and persistent sitter, and the best of winter layers—choose one of the Asiatic class. If you want a square-bodied bird with grand proportions, pleasing plumage, steady habits, fair layers and the best of flesh—choose the Dorkings. If you want a stylish fowl, nervous and erratic, proud and coquetish, superbly ornamental, one of the best summer layers and not inclined to sit—choose the Polish. If you want a very handsome plumaged bird with a jaunty comb nicely balanced upon its head, faultless symmetry and carriage, graceful motions, and an extra good layer and a non-sitter—choose the Hamburg. If you want a sprightly, high-toned fowl, with a tall, thin comb, nicely arched, impulsive movements, admirable characteristics, the best of layers, but no brooder—choose the Leghorn. If you want the "aristocracy of poultry," with an unique white face, brilliant plumage, proud and stately, an excellent summer layer and non-sitter—choose the Black Spanish. If you want a good-sized fowl, with sober dress, good layer, good sitter, toothsome flesh, and admirably adapted for general use—choose the Plymouth Rock.—Ex.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1883.

"THE DECAY OF PROTESTANTISM."

The North American Review aspires to have no opinions, to consider nothing as established; but on its pages to put Mormonism on an equality with marriage, atheism on a level with Christianity, and popery on a par with Protestantism. As neither Mormons, atheists, or papists are supposed to pay much for the support of this "Mother of Reviews," it is paid for chiefly by the Protestant population, and thus by its moral and religious noncommittalism the Review compels the friends of truth to furnish ammunition for both sides, and to pay for powder to batter its own walls. The Romish bishop B. J. McQuaid would, we think, have done wisely and well to have put this moral noncommittalism of American reviews, colleges and theological seminaries at the head of his list of causes for the Decay of Protestantism in his article on that subject in the February number of the Review. The reason why Protestantism, as Colerige says, "since the middle of the sixteenth century, has not advanced one step in Europe," is simply this: Luther fought for the truth; his followers fought for Lutheranism; he for the truth, they for the sect founded on it. In the fearful grapple of our country with the slave power, the men who were educated, employed and paid to instruct and guide the Christian masses were precisely those who did not appear on the field till the battle was over; or, if heard from at all, it was in an ignominious whine that the Abolitionists went "too fast and too far," while they themselves went at no pace and no where against the common enemy of church and state.

The name "politician," which is a good word, is become odious to the masses, because office-holders have in such multitudes sought personal and party popularity without apparent principle or end. It is this which subjects parties, ecclesiastical or political, to apoplexy and paralysis. The men who to-day handle, receive and control our libraries, colleges, and seminary funds, as some one said of Oxford and Cambridge, are making our institutions mere "hulks sunk in the stream of public opinion to show how fast the current flows by them." And thus those who seek and obtain the posts of leaders in the ceaseless battle of truth against error, and right against wrong, resemble generals on the literal battle-fields in but one single point: They indeed take post in the rear of the army, but they issue no orders to the troops. Is it wonderful that armies so officered "decay?"

Bishop McQuaid's chief cause of Protestant decay is "sects," evermore "sects." But is not the Church of Rome a "sect" as well as the Church of England? There are Greek Catholics, and Roman Catholics, and Old Catholics, and already a fair number of Independent Catholics, in Italy and in this country, and there is promise of plenty more. The Bishop seems to have felt that in discussing the "decay" of churches he was living in a glass house, and says: "It is not intended in this article to present a comparison with Catholicity." This surely was prudence in him; for one has only to look on a series of charts of North America, from the settlement of this continent by Europeans, to witness a stupendous "decay" of Romanism, which it needs no count by newspaper writers to delineate. Quebec, Plymouth and Jamestown were settled at dates so near each other as, for national purposes, to be set down as settled at the same time. Mexico passed to the Romish communion at the conquest by Cortez in 1520, one hundred years before Plymouth Rock was heard of, and Romanism held the western belt of our continent and dotted the California coast with missions, which at one time reckoned twenty thousand converted or subjugated Indian slaves. When California fell to the United States, under Fremont, there was but one Romish priest to be found there, and he was clerk of the first American convention which met to organize California as a United States territory. French adventurers, guided by Jesuit priests, built a line of forts from Quebec via the St. Lawrence river, the lakes and the Mississippi, to New Orleans, through the heart of the North American continent. Those priests converted five tribes of Indians at a single sitting, near Starved Rock on the Illinois river. Romanism had the whole continent to itself, except the stony soil and frowning forests along the Atlantic coast, where Protestantism cut out openings, caught fish, read the Bible and prayed in its log cabins.

Where was Protestantism then, and where is it now? Which has decayed? Which has displayed the elements of vitality and vigor, the priest or the peasant?

This mighty continent was settled in three strips running north and south through the center and on either coast. The central strip had the soil, and the Pacific slope the sea-ports, scooped out and walled by the hand of the Almighty, and gold in its mountains to cover them with ships. Romanism had these two strips, backed by the wealth, culture, and cunning of France and Spain, then the leading powers of Europe and the world. Protestantism had at first no backing but the pillories and jails of persecuting priests. And it had no earthly resources but a Bible, a fish-hook, and an axe. Which has decayed, and which has sped?

The members of our legislatures, Federal and State, might do better to cross themselves, but they do not. Their chaplains have no tonsures on their heads, their prayers are not masses in a dead language, they are neither forbidden to marry or to eat meats; and if any of them confess their sins, as they all ought, for absolution, it is not to sinners like themselves. True, priestism and will-worship in the secret lodge system has fastened on the hand of Protestantism, but it will shake off the venomous beast into the fire; Protestantism will cease to be Protestant, with nothing to protest against, and the world become one Catholic church of God in Christ.

Bishop McQuaid's second cause of Protestant decay is thus stated:

> Protestantism is decaying in church government. It will be conceded that no society or corporate organization can live that has not the power and the will to enforce discipline and coerce refractory members—that cannot compel obedience to its rules, etc.

This incidentally gives this bishop's conception of a church of Christ. Lay it aside of Christ's conception of his own church, which is thus given by himself:

> Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you.

The real church of God is a purely spiritual combination of souls, allied and assimilated by the Holy Spirit poured out on the day of Pentecost. It is a brotherhood founded on regeneration and the love which flows from it. It can neither "enforce" nor "coerce." The only power it has is to withdraw fellowship from those who "walk disorderly." The friend Quakers have a true conception of it. The State uses force to shield innocence and secure justice and order: and that is a league in which the children of this world unite with the children of light. But whenever the religion is made up of rites the government is despotic. It has neither justice nor love. It is neither state or church.

MARDI GRAS.

This pagan-popish festival ended Tuesday, Feb. 6th inst. The Illinois Central railway ticketed through from Chicago to New Orleans and back for twenty-five dollars. On the cover of a 56-page pamphlet sent out by that company you read: "Rex, King of the Carnival, sends greeting through the Passenger Department of the Illinois Central Railroad." Thousands and tens of thousands have gone to New Orleans for health, for winter roses, for cheap fare, and all for Mardi Gras. Let us see what the thing is:

"Mardi" (French) means Tuesday, and "Gras" means fat. Fat Tuesday was so called because people stuffed themselves on that day, to begin on a full stomach the Lent fast on Ash Wednesday, the day following. Fat Tuesday was also called Shrove Tuesday, because the people on that day flocked to get their sins shrived, which they expected to commit, or had committed in the Mardi Gras festival, during which, as now in New Orleans, society was turned upside down, and the principles of virtue and morals underwent a general relaxation.

When Romish priests converted a Scandinavian pagan native they took down the nation's gods and set up the images of saints in their stead, and turned their carnivals into church festivals. This Mardi Gras was the feast of Saturn; "the lord of misrule" was king of the carnival, and lords and ladies obeyed their servants, feasted them and waited on the tables. The old French Catholic population of New Orleans set up this Mardi Gras festival there as early as 1827, and for thirty years, till 1857, it was mainly confined to them. "The Krewe of Comus" was then introduced. Soon after the "Krewe of Momus" followed; and now the whole festival is consolidated and conducted by a secret association, procession follows procession of tableaux on large floats drawn by horses gaily comparisoned, marching through principal streets and avenues a distance of nine or ten miles.

We take the following snatches of description of these tableaux from the railroad pamphlet advertisement describing the performances of 1882, and advertising those of this year. The quotations are from that pamphlet which begin with—

> "Ramayana, the Illiad of the East.' "Momus, the fun-loving god, on a black steed." "The Temple of India, an elegant picture of worship in this far-off country." "The sacrifice of the white horse, stabbed." "The council of the gods, to bless the queen of the gods with offspring, which could only be accomplished by the son of man." "Vishnu appears, . . . become incarnate and grants Dasantha's prayer for a son. This story was gorgeously represented."

This, of course, is a devil's travesty on the birth of Jesus Christ, "The Son of Man." It is followed by twelve similar spectacular legends of Indian paganism.

The streets were full of people; "the crowds grew more dense every hour," says the pamphlet. Amid these crowds appears the "Krewe of Proteus" in a "burst of light and oriental music," represented as a sea god, riding with a sea nymph "with shells for trumpets." "The second car presented . . . a sun-god knelt in the act of worshiping the Creator." "This (car) was followed by Paradise." Passing over several we have "The festival of Isis," an Egyptian goddess, "seated on her throne. Before her stood a princess burning incense." "Sacred animals worshipped among the Egyptians."

"The Mystic Krewe of Comus" gave, in a series of tableaux, "The worships of the world," "Sun worship," "Worship in the Temple of Belus," "The Druids," "Procession of the sacred bull," "Moses on Sinai holding aloft the two tables, which were to be a law to him and his descendents, and to generations who would receive what Moses believed . . . the Word of God given by one greater than the prophets." This was followed by fetish worship, a Chinese joss-house, and a Mormon marriage; and the lies of Mormonism told and treated as on a level with the Decalogue and Christ. So much for Mardi Gras religion.

We counted in this book of 56 pages over 100 scenes, tableaux and representations, borne on floats and cars drawn by horses in the processions of 1882. Among them were: A car of "Merry-makers representing dice, billiards, ten-pins, croquet (a gay lady), keno, checkers," etc. Next to this car came "Merry Christmas and the jovial old spirit, Cris Cringle," or Santa Claus. Then there was the scene of hunters hunted on trees, and raccoons, rabbits and snipes with guns leveled at them. Car twelve bore "a wine table on which rollicking old port, sweet Catawba, sparkling Mumm, Rodshemer and cigars, inviting us to drive away our cares by clouds of smoke." Car sixteen held two lovers hid in the woods, "The man in moon looking." Car nineteen, "The marriage of Satan's daughter, Beelzebub, Satan, and the bride drinking wine." Car twenty-two, "Elysium, the abode of happiness, where all earthly pleasures are ended in supernatural ones. This closed the display of his majesty's household." We should have mentioned the Mardi Gras temperance car, which we read bore "an immense saloon, improved by a gauze covering," with the welcome sign "Hot Lunch and Drinks of all Kinds." Car thirteen, "Gambrinus and the Queen of May, in a bower supported by immense hogsheads of lager."

Now what are we to think of all this? We answer:

1. It was a heathen religious revel like the Indian's white-dog feast.
2. Baptised by priests for priests' purposes.
3. Carpet-bag Yankees joined it in 1857 to draw multitudes and money to New Orleans.
4. Railroads took stock in it to raise a boom of travel.
5 The one Grand and fifteen subordinate Masonic lodges; the Odd-fellows with one Grand and twenty subordinate lodges, with their spawn of lesser orders, seeing the thing likely to take, joined in to educate the American people in funny king-worship, garish display and senseless mummery, while Satan, seeing his time shortening and American Christianity putting on the armor of God to move on his dark realm, commissions his dusky spirits, not yet shut up in hell, to fan the whole movement with their invisible pinions, and by drinking, dancing, carousing and reveling in general, to put all false religions on a level with the true, exalt his secret lodge system, and effect a flank movement on the temperance and Christian associations which are seeking to rescue the country from his grasp.

—A good report of work has come in from Elder Rathbun which comprises an account of meetings held up to the first of the month. We are sorry for the necessity, but it is a little late to print this week.

—Secretary Stoddard left the office last Friday for Galesburg, Ill., on reform errands, local and national. He hoped to return by the middle of this week with a goodly addition to the fund for the Washington auxiliary establishment.

—Every one will read Bro. Hinman's account of his mountain ride in winter without allowing interruptions. Let us all remember how many hardships and dangers our noble brethren in the field are enduring for Christ's sake.

—The Temple of Honor is getting a foothold in Michigan by taking advantage of the legitimate and open efforts in the great reform against the dram bar. The Legislature of the State has before it a bill for the incorporation of a grand and subordinate lodges of this order.

—Dr. S. L. Cook, the Indiana agent, has written little of his labor of late, but the single line in a business letter means business: "I am having plenty to do; am making the battle hot." He is hoping soon to visit La Porte county, in the northwestern part of the State, where our lamented brother, Alfred Rodgers, left a good record for the truth.

—Bro. M. N. Butler of the Albany, Mo., Freeman has laid aside some of his office duties to engage more actively and freely in the lecture work. He makes the interests of the American party part of his care. His office duties have been intrusted to a gentleman who, we are sorry to note, takes pains to repudiate Anti-masonry in a very needless and witless manner.

—The Cynosure readers will be glad to learn that Mr. Carpenter is slowly recovering from his recent attack. But a little further along in the same direction Elder A. Wait lies, probably on his death bed. His extreme age and the severity of his disease give little hope of his recovery. He has for many years been known as a steadfast, uncompromising follower of Christ in this city.

—Youthful ideas on Freemasonry are sometimes intensely suggestive. The Boston Journal gives an instance: "A six-year-old boy at Belfast, Me., has very advanced ideas. He has a doll which he calls his wife. Recently he was telling his wife his future plans, and remarked, 'By-and-by I shall become a Mason, and then you won't see me until 12 o'clock at night.'" It must occur to sincere parents that their children can be early confirmed in their principles respecting the secret lodges and that faithful instruction is due them.

—The Cynosure has welcomed lately several warm and valued friends. Elder Knapp, of Joliet, vigorous under his more than eighty years, and with heart and zeal as warm for the cause as fifty years ago, came in to talk over its interests in his locality, and add to the growing list of subscriptions. Bro. L. Skinner, of Arlington Heights, near this city, an old pupil of the editor, dropped a word of cheer with his subscription. Dr. George W. Champ, a few years ago the wheel-horse of the work in Indiana, has been in the city to attend professionally a wife's sister. His visit we hope may be repeated.

WHAT LECTURE WORK MEANS IN WISCONSIN.

Our brethren in Wisconsin secured at their last State Conventiou the services of a godly and successful Congregational pastor, who had shown a generous interest in the reform for years. He left his home and church at Monroe for a lecturer's labor, fare and pay, believing that God led him thus. He has for two months and more been visiting country places and school-houses, travelling with his own conveyance and reaching every outlying district possible on his way. Now this is a very unostentatious work. Few reports reach the outside world of great audiences and powerful addresses, and the people he meets are not accustomed to report a lecturer's visits to the press. This is one of Bro. Bancroft's failings. He is too modest by far. He does not advertise himself as his work deserves. But he shall have this commendation as a gratuity. Let every reader in Wisconsin mark. In a business letter reporting his January work he gives us an idea of the arduous life of a lecturer, but only by way of apology for not showing more result of his labor:

"I have just finished my monthly report for January, of which I should be ashamed if it was not for the consciousness that I have done the best I could under the circumstances. I have delivered only ten sermons or lectures, but I have missed five which I had arranged for. Three I attended but it was so cold and stormy no one came out, and the other two I could not reach for snow drifts and cold weather. As it was I froze my ear and the 20th and on the 21st I held morning service with six men and four women, then travelled on seven miles [few will forget the intense cold of that day.—ED.] froze my nose and cheeks slightly, and no one came out. I did not go to my other appointment five miles further on the prairie. I had an appointment nine miles away on the prairie for Monday and Tuesday evenings, but could not get through Monday for snow drifts, but did on Tuesday by taking my horse off the sleigh and leading him over a snow bank as high as the fences, and then by the help of a man pulled my sleigh over. No one came out to the lecture. I have had to lay by several days for cold and bad roads, so I could not get out. Notwithstanding, I find I have travelled 310 miles and have sold more books and got more subscriptions for the Cynosure than last month."

Such a laborer deserves an honest and hearty reward.

BRICKS FOR ANTI-MASONS TO LAY.

A STORM THAT MAY BE REPEATED.

Such were the conditions of society and the feelings of men about the years from 1825 to 1830. Middle New York was the "storm-center," but its ravages extended eastward through Vermont, especially, but more or less through all the New England States; westward to North eastern Ohio, and through Pennsylvania and even into Maryland. Nearly all the lodges in Vermont were compelled to give up their charters or close their doors, as well as many lodges in other States. On "the Reserve," in Ohio, lodge halls were destroyed by mobs, the jewels and records stolen and carried away, the members ostracised, their business injured and their families slandered and abused. Such was Anti-masonry in some portions of the country less than sixty years ago among the pious (?) and intellectual fathers. Is it any better yet? If the Cynosure utters the same sentiments and breathes the same spirit (as I am informed it does,) it is the equal of the past and has been baptized in the same turgid waters; and while it merits the execration of every patriot and Christian, public sentiment restrains it, and this is the safety and safeguard of the Craft and of the community. —Cornelius Moore.

A SAWDUST AND GLUE CORNER-STONE.

It is undeniable that manhood must come of obedience to the fundamental principles of our civilization. This is the corner-stone of Masonry. Without it the institution would sink into oblivion. No association, with any pretensions to the consideration of good men, can withstand the shock of treachery to human welfare. Treat the subject as we may, it is a truth, stern, uncompromising, and written all over the fraternal edifice from foundation to capstone, that to be a Mason is to be a gentleman, in honor above reproach, and seeking avenues to usefulness, rather than wallowing in excesses that wreck both body and mind.—T. T. Gurney, 32°, Sovereign Prince of the Royal Secret and Past Grand Master.

"CHICKENS COME HOME TO ROOST."

We have observed for years an abuse of a sacred trust, on the part of Grand Lodge officials, that has been as surprising as painful. We allude to the Grand Treasurers who have caused the loss of multiplied thousands of money belonging to the Masonic Fraternity. Our own jurisdiction has a history—not written—and silence, though golden, may not be just. We will not repeat the history of our losses. . . . . Masonry, as such, is Masonry. Business is business. One is not the other "by a large majority." The defalcations of Masonic officials occupying positions of responsibility, having sacred trusts in charge for others, have destroyed more fully the confidence of many of the Fraternity than all other causes combined.—Rev. John D. Vincil, Grand Secretary of Grand Lodge of Missouri.

DOWN HILL FAST.

The Grand Secretary reported the subjoined statistics: initiated, 169; passed, 152; raised, 169; affiliated, 37; reinstated, 34; dimitted, 155; died, 33; missing, 30; suspended, 108; rejected, 28; members, 2,898, a decrease of about 600 since 1877, and no wonder, when 107 were suspended in a year for non-payment of dues. Commenting on this decrease, the Grand Secretary said: "This large falling off in contributing members in five years, affords a subject for the very serious and earnest consideration of the Craft in our jurisdiction. What can be done, what steps can be taken to arrest the exodus from our ranks? If some expert in Masonic Political Economy could devise or suggest some scheme that would arrest the evil of a steadily increasing non-affiliation, he would be justly considered a benefactor to our lodges. Surely it cannot be the small tax of three hundred cents per year—less than one cent per day—required by a lodge of its members that causes them to turn their backs upon their duty to contribute to the widow and orphan."—Report of Grand Lodge of Nova Scotia.

SCOLDING GOOD STUDENTS OF MASONRY.

As Masons, we profess to be moral men, and how can we be moral men and continually violate the moral law? If men have formed the disgusting habit of profane swearing, it is high time they had stopped when they take upon themselves the solemn vows of Masonry, and it is no excuse because others are guilty of "backbiting and slandering," etc., that any Mason should disgust, not only Masons, but profanes also, by his blasphemous oaths.—James W. Staton.

GRAND LODGES AT REFRESHMENT.

Grand Lodges nowadays are little better than political conventions. The scramble for office, and what is immeasurably worse, the scramble around the Grand Treasurer at the close of the session, for the per diem and mileage, presents a spectacle sickening in the extreme. A scene of the kind described above was presented to the gaze of the writer at the close of a Grand Session a few years since, sufficiently revolting—well, at this late day, we blush to think of it.—R. E. Richards.

MASONRY AFRAID OF ITSELF.

Masonry can never be destroyed by enemies outside its fortifications; it is the enemies within that are more to be feared—those who are Masons only in name—those who make a trade of the institution—those who use it for mercenary purposes. Then let the Anti-masons rave, and rake up the dead issues of Morgan, as much as they please.—N. Y. Courier.

HIT HIRAM HARDER.

From all jurisdictions comes the cry of non-affiliation, lack of interest, apathy and neglect of Masonic duty. Why? The Craft are not edified. They go to lodge, or chapter, or council, or commandery, only to see and to hear a final opening, a formal attention to business, a formal working of a degree and a formal closing. Not a word of actual information is gained, nothing interesting or edifying transpires, and disappointed and unrefreshed they depart. No wonder is it, then, that quorums are hard to get and that non-affiliation increases. Now, the remedy for this is to open the halls, the corridors, the crypts of the great treasure house of Masonic symbolism, and unfold the philosophy of Masonic ethics.—Voice of Masonry.

SIXTY-TWO YEARS OF LODGE RULE IN SOUTH AMERICA.

I saw recently an extract from a Catholic journal, Indo European Correspondence, in which is the following: "The South Americau Republics are pointed at by our Protestant friends as being sunk low by their Catholicism; but, since 1820, Freemasonry has taken the lead of everything there, and after sixty-two years of rule, the result is misery and anarchy. The candid opinion of M. Sace that Catholicism alone can rebuild the edifice which it had built at first, and which the Masons have pulled down, recommends itself to all serious readers." M. Sace, I believe, was a Protestant, such a one as Blanchard; yet the Catholics quote him because he agrees with them in their hostility to Freemasonry. But every Freemason knows the statement of M. Sace is false in every particular. Who among the Craft ever heard of Masonry meddling with political or ecclesiastical affairs? I venture to say that the entire statement is incorrect—born of hatred or misconception.—C. Moore.

[This is too cunning to be of any use to the lodge. Of course no Mason would say anything else; but the writer dares not make an appeal to disinterested non-Masons. —ED.]

HARD TO AGREE ON A STANDARD.

"It is known to many of you that for something like twenty-five years this Grand Lodge has been engaged in an effort to discover and establish a correct standard of work for the several degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry under its charge, and to promulgate the same to all the Lodges in its jurisdiction."—New York Masonic Grand Lodge Report. 1880.

THE MAJORITY IN THE SECRET EMPIRE.

"Once a Mason always a Mason, once a Masou every where a Mason. However independent, either as individuals or as lodges, whether Grand or subordinate—and we are each and all truly free and uncoutrolled by anything save our ancient laws and constitution—yet no Mason can be a foreigner to another Mason. We are all equal citizens of one common government, having equal rights, equal privileges and equal duties; and in which government, thank God, the majority does not govern. For our order in its very constitution, strikes at the root of that which is the very basis of popular government. It proclaims and practices not that the will of the masses is wise and good, and as such to be obeyed,—not that the majority shall govern but that the law [i. e. above mentioned "ancient law"] shall govern.—Grand Lodge Report of Missouri.

NOT MUCH LEFT FOR MASONRY BUT MUCH FOR A REPENTING SINNER.

Take the Mason's God and the Mason's Bible away and what is there left upon which to build our future moral and Masonic edifice?—Grand Lodge Report of Kentucky.

WON'T HELP AN OLD MASON.

To the shame and disgrace of the Grand Lodge [of Ohio] an application for aid by Bro. Cornelius Moore was declined. Base ingratitude is the right name for such conduct.—Voice of Masonry.

HELP HIM—DON'T STOP TO ASK.

If a person appeals to us as a Mason in imminent peril, or such pressing need that we have not time to inquire into his worthiness, then, lest we might refuse to relieve and aid a worthy brother, we must not stop to inquire as to anything.—Albert Pike, Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander of Masons.

THE MOST MORAL SOCIETY.

A lady whose husband stands suspended for unMasonic conduct, said to us: "My husband never drank a drop of liquor until he joiued the Masons. They led him astray by their conviviality, and he fell into deep dissipation and ruin." We know all the circumstances. This is only one of thousands, especially about the cities. Many Masous think the order was intended just to afford its members a "good time," and they go in for fun. Numbers are led off by the influence and example of older and more prominent brethreu. Being less used to such dissipation, and less stable in character, these younger brethren take a downward course, and soon fall into utter disgrace. Then some of those who wrought this ruin will sit in judgment upon the fallen one, belching whisky fumes from a drunkard's stomach, while they vote "aye" for the condemnation of him whose greatest fault was that he could not carry as much steam as others.—Grand Lodge Report of Missouri for 1878.

ARE YOU COMING TO CHICAGO?—If you have business in the city or if you have occasion to pass through, it will repay you to call at headquarters, see what is being done, and get a supply of tracts, look over our list of publications; order such as you need and give us a word of admonition or encouragement as you may think appropriate. Quite a number of friends from the country and some from the city have dropped in to gladden us by their presence. We appreciate such calls and hope they will in future be more frequent. THE HOME.

THE BLESSED MASTER.

His hands were hardened with carpenters' tools:
His sandals were dusty with going afoot;
He was all unlearned in the subtle schools:
He was meek and lowly and destitute.

The fox in the hill-side burrowed her home;
The bird in the branches builded her bed;
The King of the earth to his kingdom come
Owned never a roof to shelter his head.

But oh, the grace of his loving face!
The touch of his tender hand!
What joy to stay by his side alway,
As he went through all the land!

To hear his talk in the daily walk
By the vineyard or the wheat,
To know he has blessed the couch of our rest
And the poorest food we eat!

THE LION'S PET.

REV. JAS. H. BROOKES.

Henry Moorhouse, who has recently gone to be with the Lord, was fond of relating an incident that beautifully illustrates a precious truth. When he was a boy there came to his native city of Manchester a circus with its accompanying menagerie. In the motley crowd which always gathers about such low exhibitions, there was a man whose little dog had just been beaten in a fight with another dog. The man, in a fit of senseless rage, seized the bleeding and suffering brute, and, hurrying into the circus tent, roughly thrust him through the bars of the lion's cage, expecting of course to see him devoured in a moment.

The dog also seemed to know his danger, and crouched upon the floor in manifest terror. The lion fixed his gaze upon him, but did not stir; and at last the dog, gathering hope, crawled slowly toward the "monarch of the forest," and looked up into his face as if with mute supplication for mercy. To the surprise of the spectators, the king of beasts, who could have crushed him with a single stroke, gently drew the helpless creature to his side, and then raised his lordly head and neck above him like a wall of protection. Meanwhile the owner of the dog recovered from his silly anger, and demanded his property. "You put him in; go to the cage and get him," was the quiet reply of the keeper.

The man drew near and called the dog, but there was no response; for the once obedient servant acted as if he had found a better master, and was satisfied with the change. The old master called again and again, and whistled, and coaxed in vain and at length began to scold and threaten; but the ominous growl of the lion and the flash of his flaming eyes sent back the human brute in fright and haste, amid the laughter of all who witnessed his discomfiture, and the two friends were left in peace and mutual love.

Those who are not the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus (Gal. 3: 26), are frequently described as dogs in the Sacred Scriptures, or, in other words, as unclean. Thus in the Psalm which tells of the good shepherd dying for his sheep, he exclaims, "Dogs have compassed me," and he cries out, "Deliver my soul from the sword; my darling [margin, only one] from the power of the dogs." Ps. 22: 16, 20). Of unfaithful ministers God says, "They are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark: sleeping [margin, dreaming, or, talking in their sleep], lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough." (Is. 56: 10, 11).

So the Lord Jesus says to his disciples, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs" (Matt. 7: 6); and to the woman of Canaan he said, "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and cast it to dogs." (Matt. 15: 26). Likewise the Holy Ghost by the Apostle Paul, speaking of false teachers, warns believers to "beware of dogs," (Phil. 3: 2); and by the Apostle Peter, writing of nominal professors who give up their avowed faith, he tells us, "The dog is turned to his own vomit again." (2 Pet. 2: 22.). In the last chapter of the Bible we get a glimpse of the glorious city, into which all who have washed their robes have a right to enter, we learn that "without are dogs" (Rev. 23: 15).

What a wondrous grace it is that takes up a mean dog, the whipped and kicked cur of the evil one, beaten and dragged down in the conflicts of sin, and places him at the feet of the Lion of the tribe of Judah, saved, protected, cherished, loved forever and ever! But that is just what Jesus does for the devil's castaways. The instant they are brought to a sense of their need and misery, and go to him in their helplessness, looking up into his face for mercy, all the boundless resources that are at his command are pledged to their deliverance from the dominion of sin, to their defense against the assaults of Satan. They may crawl to him like a beaten dog, but from that moment he takes them under his almighty care.

In the first book of the Bible, amid the prophetic blessings uttered by the dying Jacob, he said, "Judah is a lion's whelp; from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he stooped down, he crouched as a lion, and as an old lion; who shall rouse him up?" (Gen. 49: 9). Here the activity of the young lion and the strength of the old lion are combined in One who is described in the following verse as Shiloh, Peace, or the Giver of peace; "and unto him," it is added, "shall the gathering of the people be." Thus the prediction reaches on to the close of the present age, when "the Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall quake: but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel" (Joel 3: 16).

In the last book of the Bible he is presented as "the Lion of the tribe of Judah;" but in the very next verse he "stood a Lamb, as it had been slain" (Rev. v. 5, 6). Even in heaven he bears the marks of his sacrificial death, and never will the saints forget the Lamb of God, "who, his own self, bare our sins in his own body on the tree" (1 Pet. 2: 24). But he is standing, and hence he is no longer the slain Lamb but the living Lion, inviting the confidence of the poor sinner who may feel that he is no better than a "dead dog," as Mephibosheth expressed it, and assuring him of immediate and everlasting salvation, if he will come in simple faith.

Let the anxious and troubled soul know upon the sure testimony of God's Word, that nothing so delights the Lord Jesus Christ as trust in him. When upon the earth he never once turned away from the vilest wretch who believed in his power and willingness to shelter and to shield; and now that he is at the right hand of the Majesty on high, he is still saying, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" (Matt. 11: 28). Burdened with sins and with sorrows, they may fear destruction; but when they believe on his name, they become the "dear children" of God, and "he that is begotten of God, he keepeth him, and that wicked one toucheth him not." They are his "friends," his "beloved," dearer to his heart than the angels; and they are secure while the Lion of the tribe of Judah lives.—The Truth.

THE ONE NAME.

Jesus! How does the very word overflow with exceeding light and joy, and love, and life; filling the air with odors, like precious ointment poured forth, irradiating the mind with a glory of truths in which no fear can live; soothing the wounds of the heart with a balm that turns the sharpest anguish into a delicious peace, shedding through the soul a cordial of immortal strength. Jesus! the answer to all our doubts, the spring of all our courage, the earnest of all our hopes, the charm omnipotent against all our foes, the remedy for all our weakness, the supply of all our wants, the fullness of all our desires. Jesus! at the mention of whose name every knee shall bow and every tongue confess. Jesus! our righteousness, our sanctification, our redemption; Jesus! our elder brother, our blessed Lord and Redeemer. Thy name is the most transporting theme of the ehureh, as they sing going up from the valley of tears to their home on the Mount of God; thy name shall ever be the richest chord in the harmony of heaven, where the angels and the redeemed unite their exulting adoring songs around the throne of God. Jesus! thou only canst interpret thy own name, and thou hast done it by thy works on earth, and thy glory at the right hand of the Father.—Dr. Bethune.

"FREE RELIGIOUS" MOCKERY.

The New York Independent gives the following as a specimen of a responsive exercise in a "Free Religious" Sabbath school in Brooklyn. In the effort to be "free" it has ceased to be religious:

"Superintendent: The treasures of the earth are indeed beyond price: the joy of life is unspeakable; the aspirations of the soul are without limit."

"Assistant: Behold, all the heavens are opened to our thoughts!"

"Superintendent: Let us, then, pledge ourselves anew."

"Right: Inasmuch as we have drawn richly of the wine of life."

"Left: Inasmuch as we have received largely from them that have gone before,"

"Left: Who have borne the heat and burden of the day,"

"Assistant: Who have filled, as it were, great storehouses with the fruits of their labors—

"Right: So that the earth is fairer,"

"Assistant: Let us also bring our sheaves with us."

"Superintendent: Let us not, alone, come empty-handed to the feast of the harvest home!"

"We often hear," says the Independent, "of the weakness of the instruction in our Sabbath-schools, but we challenge the world to find anything more vapid, more inane. Even 'culture' ought to save the children from such stuff."

WOMEN'S WORK.

DON'T WORK FOR ANYBODY.

Singular as it seems, the about phrase may mean the same as "work for everybody." A reference to the following story published in the Woman's Journal and illustrating the constant all-day cares of a mother, will explain the paradox. A little boy, on his way to build fires and sweep offices in Boston while the stars were yet in the sky, told the writer:

"My mother gets me up, builds the fire and gets my breakfast, and sends me off. Then she gets my brother up, and gets his breakfast and sends him off. Then she gives the other children their breakfast and sends them to school, and then she and the baby have their breakfast."

"How old is the baby?" I asked.

"Oh, she is 'most two, but she can talk and walk as well as any of us."

"Are you well paid?"

"I get $2 a week, and my father gets $2 a day."

"How much does your mother get?"

With a bewildered look, he said: "Mother! Why, she don't work for anybody."

"I thought you said she worked for all of you?"

"Oh, yes, for us, she does; but there ain't any money in it."

This wife of a day laborer represents a large class of hard-working women. There is more than one "labor of love" that draws no pay in cash.—Sel.

OUT-DOOR EXERCISE.

"My wife does not go out of doors, except to church, for weeks together," said a gentleman in our hearing, the other day.

It happened that we had some acquaintance with the lady in question, and knew her to be far from strong and vigorous. Yet she had no positive ailment.

We wonder that any woman, able to go out and feel the exhilarating effects of out-door air, can content herself in the house all day and every day. And yet we know that many, as a rule, venture out only when they have a distinct errand, as shopping, or visiting, etc. They consider the trouble of dressing too great, or they are hot house plants, and shrink from a nipping breeze, a little rain or snow, or a little discomfort in weather which is not perfectly adjusted to their wishes.

Nobody can be well who lives wholly within doors. Active exercise in the air sets the blood in motion, gives appetite to plain food, and vitalizes the physical nature. Besides, when we are out-doors, whether in the city street or the country road, we see things which insensibly divert our minds from the routine of the house. Like the bees, we must go abroad to gather honey, as well as hive it in the cells by patient home industry.

Though the wintry day is cold, wrap up warmly and step forth, with well-shod feet, and you will feel the better for it. Many a querulous semi-invalid would be clothed upon with health and beauty if she would take this cheap medicine.—Intelligencer.

SUNLIT ROOMS.

No article of furniture should be put in a room that will not stand sunlight, for every room in a dwelling should have the windows so arranged that some time during the day a flood of sunlight will force itself into the apartments. The importance of admitting the light of the sun freely to all parts of our dwellings cannot be too highly estimated. Indeed, perfect health is nearly as much dependent on pure sunlight as it is on pure air. Sunlight should never be excluded except when so bright as to be uncomfortable to the eyes. And walking should be in bright sunlight, so that the eyes are protected by veil or parasol when inconveniently intense. A sun-bath is of more importance in preserving a healthful condition of the body than is generally understood. A sun-bath costs nothing, and that is a misfortune, for people are deluded with the idea that those things only can be good or useful which cost money, but remember that pure water, fresh air, and sunlit homes, kept free from dampness, will secure you from many heavy bills of the doctors, and give you health and vigor which no money can procure. It is a well-established fact that the people who live much in the sun are usually stronger and more healthy than those whose occupations deprive them of sunlight. And certainly there is nothing strange in the result, since the same law applies with equal force to nearly every animate thing in nature. It is quite easy to arrange an isolated dwelling so that every room may be flooded with sunlight some time in the day, and it is possible that many town houses could be so built as to admit more light than they now receive.—Builder and Woodworker.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

THE GREAT GOD.

Little boy, with laughing eye,
Bright and blue as yonder sky,
Come, and I will teach you, love,
Who is it that lives above.

It is God who made the earth;
God, who gave my darling birth;
God, who sees each sparrow fall;
God, who reigns, great King of all;

God, who sends the pleasant breeze,
Blowing sweet through flow'rs and trees;
God, who gives you every joy;
God, who loves you, little boy.

He is beautiful and bright,
Living in eternal light;
Would you not, my little love,
Like to live with him above?

Ask him, then, to show you how
You may please him here below;
Ask him grace and help to send:
Pray to him, your kindest Friend.

You must learn to read, and look
Often in his Holy Book;
There, my darling, you will find
God is very good and kind. —Sel.

STORIES OF MY BOYS.—V.

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

The boys of the —— Ward school always had grand times here; but on this particular day, more than usual interest was manifested as was evinced by fewer yells and halloos, and less loud talk and laughter. This was owing to the new play which Tom Jones and Sam Slater, leaders in sport, had introduced. This was the enacting of the tragedy of Hiram Abiff. Tom occupied the position of Worshipful Master or King Solomon, Sam and Will Slater and Wilson Butler took the parts respectively of Jubela, Jubelo and Jubelum, and Harvey Horne, whom the boys had begun to think "knew something after all," was the hero Hiram. Several empty ash barrels were placed in the east, south and west, behind which stood the officers of the lodge. A soap box stood in the center on which was placed the Koran of Mohammed, brought to school by Will Slater for this purpose; and on it lay a square and compass, manufactured by George Butler's jack knife. In their respective places three laths were stuck in the ground representing those types (the three lights) used in the lodge room. A huge stove-pipe hat, fished from an old trunk in the garret at the Jones' residence graced —or rather disgraced the curly head of the youthful Worshipful Master.

Everything that they could think of just then being in readiness, the play began; and if there was more noise and confusion in this clandestine (?) lodge than is usual in the "upper rooms" of the brothers of Hiram, and if it wasn't altogether a secret affair, it was, notwithstanding, a perfect success.

Many passers-by stopped a moment to see what the boys were doing. Some walked on with muttered curses. Several stopped and watched the play till its close. Two passed on with grave faces and, after walking a square or two in silence commented on the fact of their secrets being no longer secrets, when school boys so well understood them. Some cheered the boys and demanded of the Master at what hatter's his stove-pipe was purchased. Some said to themselves, "This is the work of these Anti-masons and they're right!"—to which one at least mentally added, "And I'm going to look into the question and find out."

When the old school bell sounded its summons, the boys, more eager than before to practice this tragedy, agreed to be on the spot on the morrow fifteen minutes earlier than to-day, when a new set of actors would take the "stage" and a new Hiram be passed and raised—and thus made a Master Mason in all the significance of school boy play, which significance is not small.

THE GREGORIAN CALENDAR.

A calendar is the means of reckoning time. Our calendar begins with the birth of Christ, from which time we count up eighteen hundred and eighty-two years. The Jews and the Russians begin with the creation of the world. The Chinese and Egyptians reckoned by the lives of their kings. The Romans began with the founding of their city, 753 B. C. The Greeks counted the years by Olympiads of five years each, beginning with the first Olympic Games, in 776 B. C. The Mohammedans reckon from the flight of Mohammed to Medina. Savages notch upon trees a mark for each year as it passes.

Years are of two kinds, the solar and the lunar. The solar or sun year is founded upon the revolution of the earth around the sun. The lunar is composed of twelve revolutions of the moon. Our calendar uses solar years and divides each year into twelve months of different lengths. It is founded upon the Roman calendar, which was reformed by Julius Cæsar and an Egyptian mathematician, Sosigenes. Cæsar found the Roman calendar in great disorder. The true regulation of time had been forgotten. The summer months had become autumn or winter months. Cæsar corrected these errors, and nearly all modern nations use the mode of reckoning time this famous Roman devised. It is known as the Julian calendar.

Cæsar made the year consist of three hundred and sixty-five days and six hours. He divided it into twelve months, and every fourth or leap year added a day to consume the hours unprovided for. His reformed calendar began the forty-sixth year before Christ, and the names of the months were nearly like our own. January became again winter, and March and April spring.

The Romans counted their years from the founding of their city, but about the seventh or eight century the Western Christians began to date from the birth of Christ. A monk, Dionysius, is said to have introduced the new method, and it was soon in use among all the Western nations.

The Julian calendar was not perfectly accurate. The true solar year is only three hundred and sixty-five days, five hours, forty-eight minutes, and forty-six seconds long. The Julian year was therefore nearly twelve minutes too long. It gained more than three days every four hundred years, and hence in 1582 what should have been the 15th of October, dating from the council of Nice, 325 A. D., was known as the 5th. Pope Gregory XIII., aided by intelligent mathematicians, resolved to correct the error, and provide a calendar that should be exact for all time! It is the one we now use, and is called from him the Gregorian calendar. It omitted ten days, making the 5th of October, 1582, the 15th, and for the future provided that three days should be dropped in every four hundred years. The years 1700, 1800, and 1900 each lose a single day, while the year 2000 will be a leap-year. Thus every century not divisible by four loses one day.

The Gregorian calendar was slowly adopted in Protestant countries, and has never been adopted in Russia. It was not received in England until 1752. Eleven days were then omitted from the month of September, 1751; the 2d was made the 14th, and the Gregorian method of computing time became obligatory over England and English America. Much opposition was made; the terms New and Old Style arose, and before 1752 it is always necessary to allow for the change in the calendar. The New Style began January 1, 1752.

On the 15th of October, 1882, occurred the three hundredth anniversary of the reform introduced by Gregory XIII. It recalls the fact that we are computing time by a method first arranged by Julius Cæsar, and corrected by Gregory, but whose origin reaches so far back into the history of man, that we can never discover what race or what man of science first measured the solar year.—Harper's Young People.

HOW TO USE THE BIBLE.

1. To find the Lord Jesus Christ. John 5: 39; 1 Peter 1: 23.
2. For nourishment of life. John 5:63; Ps. 119:9.
3. For direction and assimilation of character. Ps. 119: 105; Jer. 15:16.
4. Systematically. Ex. 30:21; John 15:3; Eph. 5:26.
5. With relish—and for comfort. Ps. 119: 16, 103; Isa. 26: 3.
6. To separate from hurtful things. John 17: 17; Heb. 4: 12.
7. To fully equip for service. 2 Timothy 3: 16, 17; Eph. 6: 17.

THINGS NOT TO SAY.

Don't say "He has drank," but "He has drunk," etc. Don't say, "The ice is froze," for "The ice is frozen," and above all, don't say "frozed," as I once heard a young lady speak of snow. Be careful how you use "see," "saw," and "seen." These are correct: "I have seen him;" "I saw her yesterday;" "Where did you see him?" Don't ask indirect questions. Have you heard of the man who asked, "What might your name be?" and received the reply, "It might be Jones, but it isn't." Don't say, "The scissors is dull," but "are dull:" always the plural verb for scissors, snuffers, trousers and words of that kind. Never say, "It is me." A professor in a college once rapped at a student's door at night, suspecting a forbidden supper was going on. "Who's there?" asked some one within. "It's me, Prof. R.," was the answer. "Oh, no," was returned, "Prof. R. never says, 'It's me.'"

Don't say, "There's the book," which means, "There is the book." Don't say "pants" and "gents." There are no such words. Dr. Holmes says:

> "The things called pants, in certain documents,
> Were never made for gentlemen, but gents."

Don't say, "He learns me," but "He teaches me."

A Sunday-school teacher was endeavoring to impress upon her class the minuteness with which providence watches over us, and quoted the text which says that the very hairs of our head are numbered. "Did you say, teacher, that the hairs of my head were all numbered?" asked a little fellow in the class. "Yes, my dear," she replied. "Well, then," said he, pulling out a hair, and presenting it, "what's the number of that one?"

TEMPERANCE.

AN ANTI-MASONIC TEMPERANCE BAND OF HOPE IN CHICAGO.

BY MRS. M. E. COOK.

The victories of God's people, recorded in the Book of Joshua, were gained by children who had received forty years' instruction in the great and terrible wilderness. A neglect of the proper and diligent instruction of the next and following generation plunged the Jewish nation into the anarchy and defeat recorded in Judges. "Joshua * * died * * and also all that generation * * and there arose another generation after them which knew not the Lord nor yet the works which he had done for Israel." The result—"And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord and served Baalim." (See Judges 2nd chap. 6–13 ver.)

History repeats itself, and being thus forwarned let us diligently turn our attention to the salvation and instruction of the children.

A little Band of Hope in Chicago completed its first year on Friday, Jan. 19th, and a sketch of its history may suggest similar or better methods for other children. Quarterlies at two cents each were obtained for the children, and so the next lesson was always ready, which was altered or improved upon at the discretion of the teachers.

A mother gave her children the privilege of inviting all they saw into her dining-room. A Christian neighbor assisted in the work of instructing them, and occasionally conducted the exercises alone. Sometimes the room was full, and at others only four or five. But the average attendance was usually from ten to fifteen or twenty. During the year thirty-four signed the pledge. In the summer time the children, with parents and friends, spent a day in the woods. In the fall they assisted in preparing a box to send South. In the winter they had a supper together at the home of one of the members. During the year they had two public reviews, repeating portions of Scripture, hymns and singing, reform and other Christian melodies.

Every week the children brought pennies to pay for temperance and religious papers and other expenses. They vote as to how the money shall be used, and keep out of debt. They have attendance tickets, new every quarter, and a number is punched out (with a punch that they bought) each week that they are present. They celebrated their first anniversary with a sleigh ride, singing temperance melodies for the public good on their way home.

This year they hope to add a "Sabbath Library" to their attractions, and have already purchased nineteen volumes with their money. They have received some instruction on the subject of secret societies, and have photographs of the Morgan Monument.

We hope many of them have given their hearts to Christ, and try to keep constantly before us the thought that their salvation is the one thing needful.

—The rumsellers are busy proving that Iowa and Kansas have become drunkard states by means of Constitutional Prohibition. Why should the rumsellers lie awake nights sorrowing over this result? If their "facts and figures" are natural growths, and not manufactured articles, rumsellers can be relied on, to hold their tongues about it. They have been accused of many things; but the wildest "temperance fanatic" never accused them of fretting and worrying, and running about wringing their hands, and shedding buckets of tears, because there is an increase of drinking in any part of the land.

—The Cincinnati Gazette says: "There is a saloon in this city for children. Counting five persons to a family, there is a saloon to every seventeen families. This great army of saloon keepers are engaged in filling the prisons, hospitals and asylums. Wouldn't half the number be sufficient for that kind of work, or say one for every thirty-four families? And would it be unreasonable to tax those toward lightening the burdens they impose upon society? The brewers, it is true, might not sell so many barrels of beer, but they are already rich enough to stand it."

—The whole nation has been indignant, and rightly so, over the waste over the River and Harbor bill, but what is it compared with such profligacy as this? Said Governor Foster of Ohio in a recent speech. "$30,000,000 are invested in Ohio in the brewing interest, with an annual retail sale of $35,000,000. Add to this the sales of other kinds of liquors, and we have a total of sales at retail in a single year of $70,000,000. Of this sum one-half is net profit. We have in Ohio 15,000 saloons, one for every 225 of our population, and one for every forty-eight of our voters." And this is but one State; and one, too, that is considered among the most intelligent and thrifty of the whole nation.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

Pebbles from the Path of a Pilgrim is such a book as Christian parents are always glad to put upon their eentertables for frequent reading during the leisure moments of a long winter. It is written by Mrs. Harriet B. Hastings, wife of Bro. Hastings, editor of the Christian, Boston, Mass., and contains reminiscences of a life of more than ordinary activity, hardship and self-denial for the good of others, in her earlier and later years. The first half of the volume is thus made up of interesting experiences wherein God's mercy was manifested in chastening or deliverance. A considerable part of the volume is filled with a record of Christian work for the bodies and souls of men in the South after the close of the late war. From the chapter on the "Summary of Southern Work" we quote:

"During a period of a little more than six years, from Novem ber 1867 to January 1874, sixty-five missionary journeys were made from the North to the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida, in connection with the mission work of the Scriptural Tract Depositary, besides some others undertaken by independent laborers who visited the fields we occupied and co-operated in our work. For some of these teachers, etc., in a few instances we obtained transportation from the government; a few laborers journeyed mainly at their own expense; the traveling expenses of others were paid, and all were sustained, aided and cared for by funds and supplies which passed through our hands. I myself made five journeys to the South. Four other members of our family made seven journeys to Southern States, the different visits occupying from six weeks to twenty months each. Twenty-eight of the journeys were made by seventeen different men, and twenty-four journeys were made by nineteen different women, who la bored as missionaries and teachers. None of these laborers were sararied by us. They, with hardly an exeeption, gave themselves willingly to the work, not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; and having food and covering they were therewith content, even though the food was sometimes meagre and the shelter often poor and mean."

The record of this truly missionary work reads like a romance, except that the everywhere abounding misery, poverty, starvation and disease among the poor gives to the story a cast of melancholy. It is a revelation of human suffering unfamiliar to many of the readers of the book, yet which all who tread the path of a Saviour who was perfected through suffering should know. Mrs. Hastings was on a tour of gospel work and visitation in the West during the early part of 1881 and had a striking experience of the storms that swept the country at that time, with providential escapes from perishing by cold and exposure. The book is very handsomely printed and bound volume of 320 pages and is published at the office of the Christian, 47 Cornhill, Boston.

Of all the late contributions which are intended to assist the public mind to a true solution of the Egyptian problem an article by Rev. Gulian Lansing, D. D., in the last Evangelical Repository, Pittsburgh, is most rational, satisfactory and complete. Dr. Lansing has spent twenty-seven years among the Moslems of Damascus and Egypt, and from this long experience is able to throw some light upon the dark picture of Egyptian politics which ordinary observers are unable to do. The contributions of the best English writers on the subject he reviews with superior ability, and has little sympathy with Mr. Blount who last summer endeavored to arouse the sympathy of Englishmen for Arabi Bey. Dr. Lansing's views should be studied by all who are interested in this important topic.

The Century for February is the "mid-winter" number, and is finely illustrated, though not containing so able contributions as at times. Mrs. VanRensselaer in an article on "American Etchers" interspersed with fine examples of their work explains to the ignorant why etching is so highly regarded by amateurs and artists. E. V. Smalley, who has written some clear and entertaining articles on the new Northwest gives us a summary of his observations. The splendid portrait of George William Curtis, editor of Harper's Weekly is accompanied with a sketch of his life and work, whose success is appearing in the action of the present Congress on Civil Service reform. Cushing's instructive "Adventures in Zuni" present a picture of one of the religious festivals of this peculiar tribe of sun-worshipping Indians. The analogy of some parts of the ceremony to the rites of the Masonic lodge is so strong as to attract the attention of Mr. Cushing. He notes the resemblance and adds that he has become a Freemason since he participated in the Indian worship. We query whether he entered the white man's lodge worship with the same end in view as among the Indians of New Mexico—scientific investigation.

Many patrons of the American Book Exchange which was forced into liquidation a year ago, will be glad to learn that Mr. Alden, its manager, is again at work at the great business of supplying American readers with good and cheap books. The greatest venture of his former business, the "Library of Universal Knowledge," has been in the hands of other parties; but he has lately again got control of the publication and offers it at the old popular price. The expiration of the copywright on Washington Irving's writings recently, permits Mr. Alden to issue an edition for the millions. The Crayon Papers is among the first volumes from the pen of this inimitable writer which Mr. Alden has prepared.

LITERARY NOTES.

—Three hundred fewer books were published in England in 1881 than in 1880.

—Washington Irving's old house on State street, New York, is to be torn down to make room for a new building. The old house was built at least fifteen years prior to the outbreak of the Revolutionary War. It first owner was a native of Holland, who imported the brick of which it is constructed from Holland. During the war it was occupied by several officers of the British army.

T. B. Arnold, publisher of the Free Methodist, is issuing a new marriage certificate of very neat and handsome design, which is furnished for 50 cents per copy or $3.00 per dozen.

—Dr. Gladden's "Christian League Club of New Al bion," printed in the Century, has incited the ministers of Paris, Texas, to organize a similar Club, the Methodist Episcopal South, Baptist, Christian, Congregational, Episcopal, Old School Presbyterian, and First Cumberland Presbyterian entering heartily into the organization.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—Another voter reports: "I have been a reader of the Cynosure a year, and heartily endorse the American platform. I voted the American ticket this fall for the first time. Seven votes were polled in this (Cedar) township, Vanburen county."—From J. Fender, McVeigh, Iowa.

ONE RELIABLE VOTER.

HOUGHTON, Lee County, Iowa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In the Iowa election returns given by S. E. Starry, there appears to be no American vote in Lee county. I will say I voted the American ticket openly in Cedar township at the last Presidential election, and also the American State ticket last fall; but failed to see any account of either in the official election returns of the county. Secrecy holds the reins of government in Lee county. It is ten years since I renounced secrecy and since that time I have not knowingly voted for any man, for any office in the gift of the people, who belonged to any secret organization. I long to hear tell of an anti-secret lecture in this county. The Lord permitting, I expect still to vote and pray. Respectfully,

O. H. KING.

LET US BE UP AND DOING.

MR. EDITOR:—It is evident to me that in the recent fall elections the Masonic lodge held the balance of power, and decided to turn the election in favor of the Democracy.

If 500,000 Masons can hold the balance of power in this country, why ought not 500,000 Anti-masons be able to do the same thing; and especially as Anti-masons are the real representatives of the character and the power of the country?

I would suggest therefore that every Anti-mason should agree with some other true American never to vote for a Freemason under any consideration, unless under conviction of its extreme necessity to avoid some great possible evil. Then let these two agree separately with two others; then these four with another four, and so on. By this process we might before the next presidential election hold the balance of power in our hands, where it would much more safely rest than in the hands of Freemasons.

If I know myself, I think that I can pretty safely promise that I will never vote for a Freemason, a Jesuit, a Ku-Klux, or a Mormon for President, or any other Republican office. Is there any one who will promise me as much? If so, his and my votes will count for none other than a real ANTI-MASON.

CONGRESS AND THE VOTERS.

The February number of Our Banner, New York, opens with an ably-written review of the political situation, more particularly with relation to the November election and its lessons to both parties. From this paper, written by Mr. Joseph Bowes of Washington City, who is connected with the Government supervision of the national banks, we take pleasure in presenting the following extract:

It is therefore at the door of a Republican Congress that most of the blame is to be laid for the defeat in the recent elections.

Facts show that this was the tender spot in the minds of the people. There is a complete reversal of the political situation in Congress; a Republican majority is swept away, and out of 325 members of the next House, the Democrats have over 200. This is surely significant. In Iowa, while the majority for the State ticket is 30,000, a fair triumph, the aggregate for Republican Congressmen was only a little over half that, and instead of a solid Republican delegation in Congress as at present, three or four Democrats will appear in the next House from that State. In Massachusetts, Bowman and Chandler, who sneered so constantly at civil service reform in Congress, were singled out for retribution, and relegated to the Limbo of defunct Statesmen. In New Jersey four mem bers, two from each party, were defeated in their respective strongholds on account of their obnoxious course in Congress. Thus, I might go over the whole political field, and every portion would furnish examples to show that the thing that rankled in the public mind, the thing with which the people had a hot and ardent controversy, was a Republican Congress.

As this has been the instrument that has wrought most of the mischief, it is to the same instrument that we must look largely for the measures that will reinstate the party in popular favor and recover lost ground. The President has already spoken in his message, and his trumpet gives no uncertain sound; and if the majority in Congress will only give legal effect to the wisdom and courage which he speaks, I think the people will not scruple to give the party a new lease of power in 1884. Of course measures, however excellent, now brought forward under the lash of defeat, will not be received with the favor that would have greeted them, had they sprung from the brain and heart and conscience of the party without the application of such a spur. Still the only course left is to respond at once to the demands of the country; and though it may be somewhat comical, as Harper's Weekly suggests, to see Mr. Robeson recommending retrenchment, and Mr. Butterworth denouncing arbitrary removals, and Mr. Hubbell declaiming against political assessments, still the spectacle would be edifying, and would be a tribute paid to the conscience and intelligence of the party, which these men have so grievously misrepresented. If there is one point clear in the verdict of November, it is that the question of civil service reform shall meet with prompt, hearty and intelligent treatment. This is a crying necessity, and without an immediate and earnest and patriotic attempt to rectify the wrongs of the present system of civil service, the Republican party is doomed. This rectification must include the prohibition or the levying and collecting of political assessments, else it will not be received. The reduction of internal revenue is also demanded, the cutting down of taxation to the necessities of a reasonable national expenditure. It is not too soon for the country to complain that to this hour it groans under a load of taxation almost as heavy as it was when the nation was writhing in the throes of civil war. But if this reduction is to be made in the interests of whisky dealers, of intemperance, and the consumption of tobacco, as is contemplated by bills already introduced into Congress, the reduction will be a misfortune, and the party will suffer from it. The tariff readjustment is imperative to the extent of crushing out tariff monopolies, the abolition of extreme duties, and the removal of duties on raw material in the interests of American commerce. The question of temperance must also be met, and although I am in favor of leaving it largely to be settled by the several State Governments, yet it is the duty of Congress to appoint a commission to collect statistics and present to the people an authoritative statement of the havoc wrought by the liquor traffic in our midst. Congress should also make speedy provision for the settlement of any questions that may arise in connection with the count of the next electoral vote, and immediate steps should be taken to put into the hands of the Executive the power of vetoing one or more items of a bill, and thus protect the National Treasury from the annual raid that is made upon it in such measures as the River and Harbor bill.

There are many other things which Congress ought to do; but these are vital issues with which it must grapple honestly and intelligently. The party cannot live upon the glory of past achievements—that it liberated the slaves, put down the rebellion, saved the Union, accomplished reconstruction, and placed the country on a sound financial basis, will not save it now, unless it keeps abreast with public sentiment and takes hold of the questions that now occupy the public mind.

—The want of a saw-mill is now felt on the Benita River in Africa. The natives who live within reach of the Gaboon and Consee missions are ready to adopt such features of civilization as houses built of boards, but they have as yet no means of sawing logs. It is claimed by the missionaries that the erection of a cheap saw-mill at almost any point along the Benita River would result in greatly increasing the efficiency of the mission work. The expense of such a mill would be about $2,000.

THE CHURCHES.

—Prof. L. N. Stratton of Wheaton Theological Seminary visited Crystal Lake on the cold Sabbath, Jan. 21, and was overborne by exposure and fasting on delayed trains, so that a few days work in the examinations closing his term laid him upon a sick bed for nearly two weeks.

—Rev. George F. Bronson, pastor of the Congregational church at La Salle, Ill., performed a marriage ceremony at Peru on the evening of the 6th inst., and just as he pronounced the couple man and wife he fe.l dead at their feet. The bride was Miss Lou. Taylor, daughter of Rev. L. Taylor, formerly of Wheaton.

—The General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance which was appointed to be held in Stockholm, Sweden, this year, has been postponed until September, 1884, at the request of Bishop Beckman, who thought the holding of the State Church Diet in the same month would interfere with the conference.

—Nearly a hundred persons in Prague have, through the reading of the Bible and the preaching of the gospel, been brought to a living faith in Christ. These are mostly poor people, yet they keep up a room for Bible readings, at the annual rent of five hundred florins. Some of them have recently organized themselves into a Bethany Society with the purpose of providing a house in Prague or its suburbs to be specially devoted to these Bible services.

—The statistics of the Congregational churches. as shown by the Year Book for 1883, are as follows: There 927 churches with pastors, an increase of 50; 1986 with acting pastors and 1023 vacant, including 149 supplied by licentiates, etc.; total, 3936, a gain of 81. Of ministers, there are 918 settled as pastors, an increase of 62; 1607 acting pastors, and 1198 others a decrease of 65; total, 3723, a decrease of 13. The number of church members is 387,619, an increase of 1934. The additions on confessions during the year numbered 13,539, which is 2228 more than for the previous year. The number in the Sunday-schools is 454,578, an increase of 3928.

—The Freewill Baptist Register for 1883 is out, and we gather from it the following: There are in the United States 39 yearly meetings, 171 quarterly meeting and 1414 churches with an aggregate membership of 77,929. The number of ordained ministers is 1258 and of licentiates 136, making a total of 1394. Churches of the denomination are to be found in nearly all the Northern States and and in several of the Southern, but its greatest strength is in New England, where it originated in 1780. There are in this section of our country 6 yearly meetings, 34 quarterly meetings, and 492 churches with a total membership of 33,125. The number of ordained ministers is 454, and of licensed 38, a total of 492, just the same as the number of churches. The denomination has two colleges, one at Hillsdale, Michigan, where D. W. C. Durgin, D. D. is President, and there are eight other professors, and the other Bates College, at Lewiston, Maine, where O. B. Cheney, D. D., is President, and there are nine other professors. The Foreign Mission Society has thirteen male and female missionaries in Orissa, India, where there are sixteen native preachers and nine churches with an aggregate membership of 545. The Home Mission Society aids churches in various parts of the country, and its income last year was $6532. The Education Society made appropriations to 53 needy students for the ministry amounting to $2004.

FAITH CURE.

Another manifestation of the power and willingness of God to heal the body, is given in the case of Mrs. E. K. Meader, of Rochester, N. H., who, having been sick two years with a form of nervous disease, pronounced by physicians incurable, in October last, when all hope from human aid had failed, was led to give her case to the care of the Great Physician, putting aside all remedies. Prayer was offered by Dr. Charles Cullis of Boston, Dr. I. M. Ward, of Newark, N. J., and others, since which time she has continually improved, and is now attending to many domestic duties and praising God.

She trusts his love, so fully manifested to her, may lead other suffering ones to come to him, who saith, "Whosoever cometh to me I will in no wise cast out," "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name I will do it," "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up."

Let us bring all our sicknesses to Him whose promises are "yea and amen," who purchased for us a perfect redemption, for soul and body, to be ours when accepted through faith. A. A. P. CAVERLY.

DON'T BE AFRAID TO SPEAK.

The colleges was the topic at a prayer meeting recently in one of our leading city churches. One brother spoke his belief that the secret college fraternities were a source of great evil in our institutions, fostering infidelity and insubordination, and stated a few facts upon which he predicated his opinion. The pastor followed immediately avowing his personal knowledge of college secret societies, and that the statements made did not accord with the facts, and closed the meeting. The question once started it was not so easily disposed of. It was a very simple matter to close the prayer meeting, but to arrest discussion and thought was not so easy. From different sources I learn that there is increasing interest, and some have determined to investigate for themselves. I was not present at the meeting, but learned the circumstances from a gentleman who came into the office a few days after and left two subscriptions for the Cynosure. He is a member of the church, and after relating the circumstances, he said, "We dearly love our pastor, but wife and I were very sorry that he said anything to detract from what had been so well said against secret societies." He assured us of his hearty sympathy and promised to call again. In all the churches not wholly given over to the god of this world there are persons like minded, and if you would find them and make friends for yourself worth having, and enemies whose bitterness is unspeakable, don't be afraid to speak! J. P. STODDARD.

RELIGION IN A SCHOOL-HOUSE.

A case involving the relation of the public schools to religion was decided in Cincinnati in December last. Elizabeth Patterson and Nicholas Patterson, her husband, brought suit against the Board of Education of Symmes township to restrain the defendants from using the school house in that district for Sabbath-school purposes. It appeared from the testimony that permission had been granted by the School Board for the use of the schoolhouse for a Sabbath school. It was claimed by the plaintiffs that such use was illegal and tended to damage the building and to injure them as tax-payers of the district. The defendants claimed that such use was not illegal; that the Sabbath-school tended to the moral education of the scholars, and afforded facilities for instruction in morals and religion, which could not otherwise be afforded to the children of the district.

We can readily understand how the sectarian divisions of the church embarrass the civil authorities in dealing with such questions. It would not be fair or just for one denomination to use the common property of the school-district for the promotion of strictly sectarian or denominational ends, and no persons of good taste or good sense would make such use of a school-house granted to them for religious exercises. But the public worship of God is not a sectarian purpose; neither is instruction in the common principles of the Christian religion. It is the almost universal practice of district school directors in rural neighborhoods to grant the use of school buildings for any purpose promotive of the public welfare and of general intelligence. Farmers' clubs, political meetings, temperance meetings, lectures, lyceum meetings, are commonly held in the school-house, which is often the only suitable building in the district for such purposes, and which thus becomes a center of intellectual and social influences of the highest value. Of the same character, but more valuable are religious services; and the temporary use of school property, may properly and legally be granted to any body of Christians for such exercises, so long as the grant is not abused or perverted to unworthy ends.

But Judge Connor, before whom this case was tried, rested his decision, not on the ground of embarrassment arising from sectarian differences, but on the ground that religion is a matter entirely alien to the public schools. His words will be read through wide circles with deep indignation. He said: "No one has a higher regard for Sabbath-school or church services than I have, but I cannot believe that it was the intention of the law to hold that it would authorize the use of public school property for purely religious education. That property is maintained, or should be maintained, simply for secular education. No one will deny that instruction in morals may be given in public schools, but it must be a part of the secular education. It must not amount to simply religious education. It seems to me clear that school property cannot be used for religious purposes or Sabbath-school purposes, which, by the very fact of its being religious in character, might well debar all, or portions, of the children of the district from attending by reason of the religious convictions or conscientious scruples of such children or their parents. The injunction will be made perpetual, restraining the Board of Education from permitting said schoolhouse to be used for Sabbath school or other religious purposes."

Judge Connor's decision is based on the assumption that the American school system was intended to be wholly divorced from religion. But, as a matter of fact, our schools, with incidental exceptions, have never been conformed to the secular idea. The reading of the Bible has been generally provided for by law. It is only here and there a judge has been found so ignorant of the history and genius of American institutions, and especially of the history of our common schools, as to be capable of such a decision as this. History, precedent, law, are all against him—except, we must admit, the Constitution of the United States and some judicial decisions which have been wrongfully influenced by it. It is true the Constitution of the United States does not necessarily affect the decision of a local case like this. But nothing can shut out its educating power and its overshadowing moral influence from the minds either of the people or of their judges. American Christians will come to understand in due time to what an extent their secular Constitution has vitiated the thinking and feeling of the nation as to the relation of religion to our government.—Christian Statesman.

A WORD TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We have said but little about changes already made in your paper, and we do not intend to speak of others contemplated in advance; we prefer to submit them to your inspection, and if you are pleased we shall be encouraged, and if you are displeased we shall hope to hear before it is too late to repent and try again. If you think we have done reasonably well, and have faith in the future sufficient to warrant a little extra exertion on your part, we ask you to call the attention of your neighbors to what is being done. If after making an effort you fail to secure a subscription for six months or a year, and can secure a trial subscriber we will send four consecutive numbers for 10cts., to begin with the number immediately following the receipt of the money. Please put us in communication with persons who in your judgment ought to read the Cynosure, and let us see how many we can hold. We are willing to test this plan and we make this offer to continue for one month from February first. Give name, postoffice and State very plainly.

An additional 5 cents secures the Weed pamphlet with a wood cut and brief description of the Morgan monument. Please look out for "Business," on the last page.

TWO HUNDRED.—There is a balance remaining to the credit of the Cynosure Extension Fund. It is designed to aid those who are not able to pay the full price of the paper but can pay a part. We want the names of two hundred such persons to put on our list within a week. Will you look them up and send them along at one dollar per year. The Extension Fund pays 50 cents on each subscription, making up the price to our lowest club rates.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

The Cynosure is happy to announce herewith a grand list of contributors and correspondents for 1883. To read their letters, study their arguments, compare their experiences, and drink with them at the fountain of truth, even Jesus Christ, will be the noble privilege of the readers of the Cynosure. The following is only a partial list. Arrangements are being made for the enlargement of the circle until it shall include every section of our country:

John G. Fee.
Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D.
Rev. P. A. Seguin, French Protestant Mission, N. Y.
Pres. S. B. Allen, Westfield College.

INTRODUCTION.—The growth of the new life in the church was now manifest in numbers—in Christian graces—in the support of all that were poor and weak. This last grace afforded a large opportunity for the Tempter. He improved it. And lest it should weaken the true power of the Church—it was spedily and terribly reproved by the Holy Spirit. Barnabas is our example, Ananias and Sapphira our warning.

ANALYSIS. 1–2. Why did these two sell their land? Acts 4: 34. What is meant by "kept back?" Titus 2: 10. (Same word in Greek.) What does the wife's knowledge show? v. 9. What sins are seen? Lev. 19: 11; Col. 3: 9. What effect on the offering? Mal. 1: 7. 3–4. How did Peter know? Acts 4: 8, 31. Had he any experience of Satan? Luke 22: 31, 32. What was the form of Ananias' lie? Acts 4: 34, 35. Outwardly he appeared as Barnabas, and did the same thing. Where was the Holy Spirit? John 14: 17. Who is he? v. 4, I.e. How many persons in the Godhead? Was Ananias responsible? v. 4. What now implied in the cofession of every church member? Luke 9, 23; 14: 26; 1 Cor. 10: 31; 1 Tim. 6: 17, 19; Titus 3: 8, 14. Is this sin common now? Phil. 3: 18, 19. What makes it more guilty now than then? Luke 10: 13, 16. 5–6. What was the result of this judgment? vs. 13, 14. 7–9. How long did this meeting last? v. 7. What were they doing? Acts 1: 14; 4: 31, 33, 37. How did Sapphira show her guilt? v. 8. Can God be tempted? James 1: 13; that is to do wrong. How did the two tempt the Spirit? In the sense of testing—to see if he could tell the secrets of their hearts, vs. 10,11. Why was judgment so speedily executed? vs. 11; 1 Cor. 11: 30.

LESSONS.—(1.) Hypocrisy cannot be hid from God. (2.) Lying unto God—the besetting sin of professing Christians. (3.) Sins will certainly be punished. (4.) If my sins were punished in Christ, I shall fear to sin and strive against it. (5.) Once yielding to Satan in the heart, puts us in his power. (6.) "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the Living God."—Notes for Bible Study.

NOTES.

"But." The little word "but" is the hinge on which great issues turn. In this case you step from the bright sunshine of a loving Christian life to the graveyard-damp of a hollow hypocrisy. Barnabas is a light at the pier-head, streaming outward through the night, marking for the mariner the way of life: Ananias, dying with a lie on his lips, buoys a rock where many have perished, and warns the wayfayer from the place of doom. Though the two men are not alike good, both examples are for us alike useful.—Arnot.

"Kept back part of the price," i. e., while at the same time they professed to be bringing the whole sum into the common fund. The portion which was kept back was probably not large, for otherwise the general sense of the value of the land would have made it conspicuous. The word translated "kept back" is the same which is rendered (Tit. 2: 10) purloining, and in classical Greek it has frequently the meaning to rob.—Cambridge Bible. The sin consisted: (1) in hypocrisy, pretending to give more than he did; (2) in the remnant of a worldly, distrustful mind, that could not trust God with all; (3) in blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, implied, as if he knew not the heart; (4) in reserving what he pretended to devote, which was a kind of sacrilege.—Barter.

"His wife also being privy to it." It argues an extreme hardness of heart when two persons, united by the tenderest bonds, plan a lie together, and engage to support each other in carrying it out.—Arnot.

"Laid it at the apostles' feet." The indications are that this was done at and as part of a religions service. It was in an assembly of the believers; at a gathering which lasted three hours (ver. 7); apparently at a recognized meeting of the Church (ver. 11); the object of the two, credit in the Church, could have been attained only by a public offering; and the lie is characterized as one told to God, not to man (ver. 4).—Abbott.

"Why." It is not merely, Why has Satan tempted you? for there is no sin in being tempted, but, Why has he overcome you? The question is a twofold one. Why hath Satan filled thine heart? (1) Why has he overcome you by his temptation, and driven you into this sin? and (2) What lust, what sin, hast thou hidden in thine heart, be it of vanity, or of avarice, by which thou hast encouraged Satan to tempt thee to this greater sin?—Denton.

"To lie to the Holy Ghost." There is no intimation that Ananias had directly uttered a falsehood, as did his wife (ver. 8); a lie in action may be as criminal as a spoken lie. They lied to the Holy Ghost, not merely because they lied to the Church, which was the body of Christ, the temple of God, and filled with the Holy Ghost, or to the apostles, who were inspired by the Holy Ghost, and whose divine power of insight they ignored, but because the offering was made, not to the apostles, nor to the Church, but to God, and the act was thus a direct falsehood addressed to him.—Abbott.

"Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." The expression is not to be weakened, as if it meant only that Ananias lied not so much unto men as unto God; but that his sin against men was nothing in comparison with his sin against God.—Gloag. The doctrine of the early Church on the subject of the Holy Ghost is plainly declared in the words of this and the preceding verse. The personality of the blessed Spirit is assumed by the words of verse 3, and from verse 4 we gather that, in the esteem of St. Peter, the Holy Ghost was God. In the first question Peter asks, "Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost?" In reference to the same offence, in verse 4 his words are, "Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." To lie to the Holy Ghost is not to lie unto men, because the Holy Ghost is not man, but to lie unto God, because the Holy Ghost is God.—Schaff. Are we not at times shocked and startled to see how near, how very near, we ourselves have been to the sin of Ananias? Nay, worse, shocked and startled to find that we have actually sinned his sin—only saved from shame because society failed to find it out; worst of all, not shocked, and not startled by the discovery! And why? Because it was our own conscience only, and not society, that made the discovery. There is our comfort—we lied to God only! One who finds comfort in this, in the fact that none but God found him out, that he lied to God only, is he not sinning the very sin of Ananias? These modern sins of our plausible Christian society—profits made, fortunes realized, reputations inflated, by means that will not bear scrutiny—all have their cankered root in the desire to seem rather than to be, to seem righteous in the world's eye rather than be righteous in God's eye. Is it not well for us thus to see them in the burning light of an apostle's indignation?—J. P. Norris.

"And Ananias hearing these words, fell down, and gave up the ghost." Concerning this signal judgment of God, let two facts be borne in mind: (1) Many miracles of mercy had already been wrought. This is the one only miracle of judgment. While in the personal ministry of Christ himself, we find none but miracles of mercy to men. (2) The one manifest purpose of every direct judgment of God was to impart needful knowledge and warning when it was most needed, and so impressively that it would be heeded. For this reason, the first Sabbath-breaker was stoned (Num. 15: 36); the first breach of a special commandment after Israel had taken possession of their inheritance, the concealed sacreligious theft of Achan, was visited with death upon himself and his family; and now, the first impious deception and falsehood, under the guise of piety and worship, in the newborn Church, was thus decisively adjudged and punished. —Butler.

"Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much?" The question asked by Peter gave her an opening for repentance. It had been in her power to save her husband by a word of warning protest; it was now in her power to clear her own conscience by confession. She misses the one opportunity as she had misused the other. The lie which they had agreed upon, comes glibly from her lips, and the irrevocable word is spoken.—Plumptre.

"Upon as many as heard." Upon as many as heard these things. The rulers of the Jews without doubt heard of these things and yet they did not institute proceedings on that account against Peter (Bengel), because Peter did not commit the deed. The result was that hypocrites were repelled (ver. 13), believers attracted (ver. 14), the fame of the Gospel extended (vers. 15, 16).

PRACTICAL.

We see here the guilt of attempting to impose on God in regard to property. There is no subject in which men are more liable to hypocrisy; none in which they are more apt to keep back a part. Christians professedly devote all that they have to God. Their property, as well as their bodies and their spirits, they have devoted to him, and they profess to desire to employ it as he shall direct and please. And yet, is it not clear that the sin of Ananias has not ceased in the Church? How many professing Christians there are who give nothing really to God; who contribute nothing for the poor and needy; who devote nothing, or next to nothing, to any purposes of benevolence; who would employ "millions" for their own gratification, and their families, "but not a cent for contribute" to God. The case of Ananias is, to all such, a case of most fearful warning. If God punished this sin in the beginning of the Christian Church, he will do it still in its progress; and in nothing have professed Christians more to fear his wrath than on this very subject.—A. Barnes.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

With what possessions should we be content, and why? Who waxed rich because their houses were full of deceit? Among what people were they found? When did an Old Testament prophet prophesy that the husband with the wife should be taken? What part did covetousness play in the reasons assigned for that prophecy? What kind of a man is better than a liar? Who is the father of lies, and what passage shows it? Where did God characterize his people as children that will not lie? What reason does an apostle urge for our not lying one to another? What false prophet made the people to trust in a lie; and what penalty did the Lord foretell and inflict upon him? —Scholar's Quarterly.

OBITUARY.

Our friends MR. AND MRS. P. P. CHAPMAN of Farmington, Ill., have lost their son LAWRENCE, who died January 20th ult., aged thirteen years. "In this life only we have hope we are of all men most miserable," said an apostle, who, surely, if there be such, was the special favorite of heaven. The very refinement and elevation which faith in Christ imparts to believers, renders them more keenly alive to the edge of affliction; and especially to the anguish of losing amiable and dutiful children. This son of our brother and sister Chapman, is described by the local press as one of those young persons we sometimes meet, whose superior excellence, like that of the atmosphere, is never fully appreciated till it is taken away; then every one not only mourns, but suffers. The whole village lamented his loss, and attended his funeral where every one seemed a mourner. No mere human author would have written "Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." The very troubles which try the righteous are like fires which refine gold; they direct the minds of others to the virtues and graces which they improve, and not only benefit this life but light the way to the next.

DIED.—At Cambridge, Ill., December 29th, 1882, Mrs. Lucy D. Baker, after a very painful illness of two weeks, aged 67 years and two months.

In early childhood she consecrated her life to Christ. In 1841 she was married to Rev. J. D. Baker, and entered with renewed consecration upon the work before her. For the sake of Christ and his church, for the salvation of those living without Christ, she was earnest and untiring in labor, self-denial, and prayer, ever encouraging and strengthening her husband in his work. And when the appointed time came she was ready; her work was done; her lamp was trimmed and burning; she was looking for the coming of the Bridegroom, that she might go in with him to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Peacefully closing her owneyes, she fell "asleep in Jesus."

Died of acute pneumonia at Union Mills, Laporte Co., Ind., BRO. ALFRED RODGERS. Another of our moral heroes is gone to rest. Many of the friends will remember him at the Seceders' Convention at Chicago in 1880, and more especially at our last annual meeting in Indiana. Bro. Rodgers made no high pretentions to educational attainments, but his sincerity was distinctly marked and his promptness in what he believed to be duty was far above the average. When he saw that he was fellowshipping and supporting a Christless religion he promptly left the Masonic order and gave a constant testimony against it in the face of a storm of opposition and threatened assassination at his home. Manfully did he face the battle and much fruit is seen in the community as the result of his faithful testimony against this giant sin. Two incidents indicate the moral courage of Alfred Rodgers. At Chicago during the convention he told me that he was led by the spirit to visit Dr. Thomas, the M. E. minister. On Sabbath he walked about five miles and found him. He told Dr. Thomas that he was leading sinners to hell by his example and influence. When he returned he related the interview to me and said he felt a peace he had not felt before.

At Carthage, Ind., last fall, without making his intentions known he left our meeting and went to the M. E. church and delivered a thrilling testimony. He said to me he never felt such freedom before. "A word fitly spoken how good it is." I have often thought of this brother and how many of us are rebuked by his unassuming sincerity and moral courage. We believe he was a sincere Christian and has gone to his heavenly rest.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Moultorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valauee, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man, by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Chris-tian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Gecslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Re-public, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

MISCELLANEOUS.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Table of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The damage to fruit and other trees in DeWitt county, Illinois, by the storm, it is estimated, will aggregate $1,000,000.

—The loss of cattle on the Colorado ranges by the recent storms will not exceed five per cent, but if the extreme cold weather continues a few days longer the percentage will be greatly increased.

—The Truckee river in California is frozen solid so that ice is chopped out anywhere with from one to a dozen trout imbedded in the crystal blocks.

—The Peoria distilleries consumed 409,964 bushels of grain last month, and produced 1,606,308. 11 proof gallons of spirits, an average of 3. 91 gallons per bushel.

—The ferryboats of the Michigan Central Road at the Straits of Mackinaw succeeded in breaking through the ice, which was twenty feet thick in some places.

—Both branches of the Kansas Legislature have adopted the joint resolution calling upon the Attorney General to bring suits against the Union and Kansas Pacific Railroads to rupture their consolidation.

—Most, the Socialist, Hartman the Nihilist, and members of the International Society of New York, have held several conferances at Philadelphia, touching the coronation of the Czar. Hartman is credited with saying that the coronation would be prevented.

—The Eagle hotel at Grand Rapids, Mich., which at the time sheltered seventy-five persons, burned early Tuesday morning, together with an adjoining brick building. The guests saved their personal effects, but the employes lost everything, many of them escaping in their night clothes.

—Governor Pattison, of Pennsylvania, has sent to the Legislature a message asking for the abolition of many State and city officers; the making of laws for the government of employers and wage-workers; the annulment of charters which have been taken out especially on purposes of barter and sale; the prohibition of railway or canal discrimination, and the enforcement of the constitution with the view of giving equal rights to all.

—Miss Alice Blaine, daughter of the ex-Secretary of State, and Colonel John G. Coppinger, U. S. A., were married by the priest of St. Matthew's Catholic Church at Washington. President Arthur, the Supreme Court Justices, Senators and Representatives, and the Diplomatic Corps being present at the ceremony which took place at Mr. Blaine's residence.

—The first section of a freight train on the Vandalia road was ditched Monday morning last near Mulberry Grove, Ill, and a few minutes later the second section rushed into the wreck, making a mountainous pile of twenty-six crushed cars.

—A Pacific Springs (Wy. T.) stage coach was caught in the terrible storm of last Friday and the travelers had to abandon the vehicle, after which two of them were frozen to death, and another will lose his hands and feet. The driver of a stage says the snow is two feet on the level, and cattle are starving.

—Two boilers burst Friday morning in the establishment of Peter Neu & Co., at Taylorville, Ill., killing the proprietor and five men, and mortally wounding two others. The works were completely wrecked and the concussion shook houses for miles around, —Twenty emigrants and twenty carloads of goods are about starting from Livingston county, Illinois, for Hand county, Dakota. About one hundred more will leave the vicinity of Pontiac, the county seat of Livingston, for the same region. The places left are being filled, largely, by German farmers.

—The verdict of the Coroner's jury in the case of the Newhall House fire, Milwaukee, pretty evenly distributes the responsibility for the disaster. They hold that some incendiary is responsible for the loss of so many lives. The night clerks and watchmen are held to be guilty in so far as they failed to make good use of time to arouse the guests; the proprietors are pronounced culpable and negligent in that they failed to provide a sufficient number of watchmen and in not providing more outside escapes in case of fire; and that the firemen are censurable in so far as they failed to do their duty because of the absence of the chief of the department and his assistant.

FOREIGN.

—Bismarck's pains returned after he had experienced some temporary relief. He does not think he will ever enter the Reichstag again.

—The Russian police have claimed to have destroyed Nihilism. The Czar walks the streets of St. Petersburg without an armed escort.

—The Russian Minister of War was recently advised that nihilistic ideas possessed the officers of the Army of the caucasus. A strict inquiry having proved the correctness of the information, the incriminated persons were arrested. Positive signs of disaffection are reported among the Oral Cossacks.

—At Longhrea county Galway, an inquest was held on the remains of a man who had starved to death. A poor law guardian testified that the case was only one of many.

—Great precautions have been taken to guard the person of Sir W. Vernon Harcourt, who is now visiting in Yorkshire. Gladstone has been threatened with murder should he return to London.

—Woodhouse, the poor law inspector at Glencolumbkill, in answering a demand for employment of the starving people who assembled at his hotel, admitted that there was distress in the county Donegal, and advocated emigration, when some one in the crowd exclaimed. "We would rather die than emigrate."

—In a shaft of the Severn, England, Tunnel works four men were killed outright and several are so seriously mangled that they are expected to die.

ONE HUNDRED ANTI-MASONIC LIBRARIES.

AND A COPY OF THE CYNOSURE WITH EACH.

The donation of a friend for that purpose enables us to offer the Cynosure for a year and one of one hundred set of our $12.00 libraries at half the price of the libraries. By this offer you can secure books to the value of $14.00 as advertised on page 15 of the Cynosure and one copy of the paper for a year for $6.00, express charges extra, on the following conditions:

1. The order, accompanied with the money, must be received before April 1, 1883.

2. The library must be used for the benefit of the public. None will be furnished for exclusively private use except to lecturers or actual pastors of churches for their own use (not to sell). It is particularly desired to put as many of these libraries as possible into public, especially college libraries; but any one who wishes one of these libraries and will invite the public to make use of the books by posting up in public places cards furnished free for that purpose, is entitled to a library and the Cynosure for one year on receipt of $6.00; provided—

3rd. That it is received before the one hundred are gone and not later than April 1st.

"THE MORGAN KILLERS."

As a band of plumed knights were parading the streets, sword in hand, the boys furnished an extempore accompaniment to the grand pageant of saloonists, ward-bummers, preachers and the "protectors of helpless widows and innocent virgins," by shouting, "There goes the Morgan killers." Of course it was a rude thing for the boys to do and rough on the preachers, but since it is true that the bloody code of murder, for revealing things prohibited, is the basis of the Masonic fraternity, every man ought to read Hon. Thurlow Weed's narrative of the fate of Morgan and learn how a peaceful citizen was murdered in cold blood and his brutal assailants shielded by the lodge,

AN OFFER.

Doubtless many who are now unacquainted with the Christian Cynosure would be glad to receive it weekly if once they knew its worth. We are grateful for the favorable notices which have appeared in quite a number of our exchanges, and shall gladly reciprocate that kindness as occasion may permit, but we feel that nothing less than a perusal of the paper itself for several consecutive issues will enable persons to form a correct estimate of its value. We therefore offer to send the Christian Cynosure for four consecutive weeks for 10 cents to the address of any new subscriber, beginning with the first issue after the money is received. This offer to continue for one month from February first. There will of course be a loss on the first numbers ordered, but we believe that if followed up there will be an ultimate gain to the cause. Will our friends take hold and give this plan a fair trial? Furnish a good list of monthly readers, and give us a chance to see how many we can hold.

THE WEED PAMPHLET OFFER.

The interest in Mr. Weed's statement of Morgan's fate is becoming more general. Corroborating proofs are accumulating and the document itself is standing the test of adverse criticism. It will well repay a careful reading. Our offer to send it FREE with yearly renewals and subscribers before Feb. 1st., has met such a favorable response that we feel justified in continuing it another month. To those desiring it for circulation, 50 cents per dozen; $3.00 per hundred.

CLUB OFFER.

The price of the Cynosure is $2.00 per year; of the American Agriculturist, the best farmers' illustrated monthly, is $1.50. We will send the two, with a fine steel engraving "In the Meadow," for $3.10.

A large number of the deeply interesting letter of the late Thurlow Weed to the Batavia Convention are still awaiting the orders of friends. Single copy, 5c; $3.00 per hundred, or $20.00 per thousand. Now is the time to distribute this very important document. Send orders to 221 West Madison street, Chicago, office of the Christian Cynosure.

☞We have arranged with dealers to furnish books, etc., in the general trade so that you need not divide you orders but send direct to headquarters.

—OR—

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen, $15.00.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

As previously announced the reform story, HOLDEN WITH CORDS is being put in book form, and is to be completed by April 1st, 1883.

Prices will be: bound in cloth $1 00 each, $9.00 per dozen. Paper covers 50cts each; $4.00 per dozen.

SCOTCH RITE MASONRY ILLUSTRATED.

is the title selected for the complete Illustrated Ritual of all the Scotch Rite Degrees The Ineffable or Scotch Rite Degrees begin with the 4th degree the first three, called Blue Lodge or Ancient Craft Masonry, being common to the Scotch, York and all other Masonic Rites. The Scotch Rite consists of 29 degrees (4th to 33d.) and the manuscript with drawings for profusely illustrating the work are all ready and will make two volumes of about 400 pages each Owing doubtless to the fact that few of these degrees have ever been exposed in their order and those very imperfectly. Scotch Rite Masonry has, in all the larger towns, for several years been recognized as the ruling rite and to become a Thirty-two degree Mason is the highest ambition of thousands of lodge devotees.

Two "Supreme Councils" Control the Scotch Rite in this Country. "The Southern Jurisdiction" which includes the District of Columbia, Iowa and several other Northern States is presided over by the Guerrilla Rebel General Albert Pike as "Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander."

The expense of getting out the first edition of these rituals will be very heavy but as soon as the cash is secured for 1,500 copies of each volume work will be commenced. Price in cloth $1 00 per vol. $9.00 per doz. In paper covers 50 cts. per vol. $4.00 per doz.

All cash orders received before publication for either of these books will be filled at 20 per cent discount, and orders may be to sent the publisher, Ezra A. Cook, No. 13 Wabash Avenue, or to W. I. Phillips, Cynosure Office, Chicago.

We are prepared to fill all orders for anti-secrecy literature and to take subscriptions for the Christian Cynosure at No. 221 West Madison street, Chicago.

CURRENT NOTES.

The politicians and Freemasons in the Indiana Legislature have undertaken a high-handed game. Perdue University at Lafayette is supported in part by State funds controlled by the legislature. A year ago the faculty, finding it necessary to follow the example of a majority of the best collegiate institutions in the country, banished the college secret fraternities. They were sued in the courts, and after long and vexatious trials were sustained by the Supreme court; as in other States the courts have invariably defended the managers of such schools in their suppression of these nurseries of Freemasonry. But the lodge, foiled in the courts, has its stronghold in the legislature, and when the appropriation for Perdue University was voted, a condition was attached for the manifest purpose of humiliating President White and his colleagues, or of compelling them to maintain an unequal fight. The appropriation of $20,000 depends upon the withdrawal of the secret society rule. If the citizens of Indiana were awake to the importance of this crisis, they would demand that President White maintain his ground and make good the deficiency in some other way. The governor may veto the legislative act, but he cannot compel a vote to appropriate. But an uprising of popular indignation may strengthen the hands of the faculty so that the battle may be carried over to another year.

This action of the Indiana Legislature suggests to what risk our institutions for higher education are exposed from the plottings of secret conclaves,—by the imposition of burdensome taxes, or tampering with charters, or cutting off some privilege, which the popular demand for institutions of higher education, when the country is new, has provided. But no less danger threatens the public school system from the control of such legislators. Jealously though we may guard it from the tricks of knavish politicians, yet if decisions of the highest courts may be brushed aside, and a privilege and right uniformly granted throughout the United States may be attacked by legislative enactment, who can say where the work will stop. Men whose ideas of religion are gained in the American lodges will not hesitate to vote Christianity and the Bible out of the common school. Because the present danger may not appear great there is the more need that these questions be provided for in time. And the best provision is the suppression of the lodge.

The Star-route conspirators in Washington and the Fenian assassins in Dublin are in equal consternation and perplexity through the testimony of members of the gang. Last Thursday, Rerdell. one of the defendants in the trial, a former secretary of ex-Senator Dorsey, and one of the two who were found guilty by the jury on the first trial, arose and withdrew his plea of not guilty, throwing himself upon the mercy of the court and signifying his willingness to tell what he knew. His examination brings out the fact that important papers have been stolen from his room, of which only Dorsey had a duplicate key, and that Brady has received large and frequent amounts under an assumed name. The government counsel expect the documentary evidenee which they now are able to produce, backed by Rerdell and another witness who had access to the books of the conspirators when they were in the heyday of success, to make out a certain case against the conspirators. Dickson, foreman of the first jury which brought in so flat and inconsistent a verdict, is still venturing his opinion that Rerdell's testimony will be disproved by the evidenee as to his personal charaeter. He may be hinting at the plans which the lodge is working to thwart the present trial as, with his aid, it did the other.

The year, begun so disastrously, grows darker with the misery and gloom of calamity and death. The floods which began in Ohio and western Pennslyvania have extended from the Alleghany ridge to the Mississippi. Continued rains in the eastern part of the district swelled the Ohio river beyond all previous record. The great flood of 1832 reached at Cincinnati the height of sixty-four feet three inches; that of 1847, sixty-three feet seven inches. At four o'clock Thursday morning last sixty-six feet four inches was marked, and then the flood began to fall an inch or more per hour. The loss of life has not been large, but of property immense, and the resulting sickness and misfortune must be beyond calculation. All the towns along the river have borne their share, without the consolation of the sympathies which go naturally toward the greater city. As we write, the situation in Cairo in this State is becoming more dangerous every moment. In Illinois and Iowa the loss has been most widely felt through the railway breaks which, for a few days, prevented the running of trains in every direction. The week must also record the most fatal disaster yet known in American mining. The accumulations of water broke through into the abandoned portions of a mine near Braidwood, Ill., and the flood stealthily crept upon the men working half a mile away; and before they were aware the narrow walls of the mine became an immense tomb. The mine holds seventy-four bodies of men whose names are recorded, but it is feared that the number lost will reach one hundred. The sudden and fearful nature of the calamity seemed to stupify the whole community about, which was largely of the mining class, and while women wailed, men left their work and attempted to drown in grog the recollection of the dreadful disaster. A too literal following the singular laws of our State in part accounts for this loss of life. The mining laws of Illinois provide that passages four feet wide and two and one-half feet high shall be provided in mines for the escape of workmen. The vein of coal was thin in the wrecked mine, and instead of a place where they could run from danger, there was room only to creep.

The Dublin courts are getting ready to mow a wide swath among the Fenians, as the Ancient Order of Hibernians fell in Pennsylvania a few years since. The fiercest oaths of self-immolation have broken to pieces under the pressure of law and the inner circle of "Invincibles," or "Society for the Exterpation of Tyrants" will find the end of its existence in prison and on the gallows. The evidenee secured by the government is too strong to permit any hope of eseape, and each new witness closes one by one every avenue of eseape. On Saturday Carey, treasurer of the Fenian brotherhood, and a Town Counselor, stepped into the witness box, to the unbounded surprise of the prisoners, whose counsel called him "an infamous witness" (Masonic for "perjured villain"), while the bolder assassins hissed him with deadly hate. He continued the evidence of the car drivers, and gave many facts respecting the organization of the assassin club in Dublin. He was present in Phœnix Park on the fatal 6th of May, and assisted in the arrangements for the murder of under-secretary Burke. He was not one of the men selected to do the work, but standing at a distance saw the men stabbed and heard the remarks of the butchers as they were driving away. One of the leaders in this "inner circle" was known as "No. 1"; no other name or title was given him. He freely supplied money to the band, and it was known that he drew on a Paris bank and that the funds came from America. This, then, may be the end to which O'Donovan Rossa and his New York Land League ring devoted the funds so freely supplied from the pockets of the Irish laborers in our midst. With such fearful crimes do men often find themselves linked when they strike hands in the secret lodge.

TRUE FREEDOM—HOW TO GAIN IT.

We want no flaunting beauseant
For liberty to fight;
We want no blaze of murderous guns
To struggle for the right.
Our Templar swords are pointed words,
The mind our battle plain;
We've won such victories before,
And so we shall again.

We have no triumphs sprung of force—
They stain her brightest cause;
'Tis not in blood that liberty
Inscribes her civil laws.
She writes them on the people's hearts,
In language clear and plain,
True thoughts have moved the world before,
And so they shall again.

We yield to none in earnest love
Of freedom's cause sublime;
We join the true "Fraternity"—
We keep the march of time:
And yet we grasp no pike or spear
Our vict'ries to obtain;
We've won without their aid before,
And so we shall again.

We want no aid of barricade
To show a front of wrong;
We have a citadel of truth,
More durable and strong.
Calm words, great thoughts, unflinching faith,
Have never striven in vain;
They've won our battle many a time,
And so they shall again.

Peace, knowledge, Christian brotherhood—
The secretist may sneer,
The bad deny—but we rely
To see their triumph near.
No widow's curse shall load our cause,
No blood of brethren slain;
We've won without such aid before.
And so we shall again.

A NEW POLICE BUREAU.

BY REV. W. W. AMES.

In a late New York Examiner, under the head of "A New Police Suggestion," in a quotation from the International Review, the writer speaks of "uneducated policemen whose first care is to ascertain the political and social affiliations of the accused," and recommends a "Bureau of Criminal Investigation," consisting of reporters, with headquarters at the great newspaper offices of of our cities.

This reminds me of a case that occurred last spring in one of the cities of Wisconsin, as related to me by two acquaintances resident there, wholly unknown to and unacquainted with each other, and without possibility of collusion. or motive to misrepresent the facts, and without solicitation in either case.

Across the lake from this city a man wished to send to the city express office a package of money containing $1,500. He told the carrier to deposit it in the office for $1,000, thus to reduce the express charge one-third. This, it is easy to see, placed the carrier under the temptation to steal $500. He placed the package in the office as directed for $1,000. It soon, however, transpired that somewhere, by some means, the whole package was lost. The detectives were set to work to trace it up, when it was discovered in the operation that the sender of the package, the carrier, the express agent, detectives, and all to the last man of them, were Freemasons, and the whole matter was dropped and the arm of justice hung utterly paralyzed and helpless.

Now if the suggested "Bureau of Criminal Investigation" recommended by the Review, to be made up of "intelligent reporters, with headquarters at the great newspaper offices, and commissioned as detectives," could be composed of men not tethered by the "mystic tie" of some secret, oath-bound organization, sworn to be "aiding and assisting a brother in distress, whether right or wrong," we might confidently expect fruit on the tree of this new suggestion, not only 30 per cent. greater than from the current police system, but 60, if not 100 per cent.

Society is rat-holed and honey-combed from top to bottom and from end to end with these secret brotherhoods, paralyzing the arm of justice, and with a Christless religious ritual teaching salvation by living up to the rules of the order; and those who remonstrate are met with the "good-man" argument—"so many good and great men of all the professions belong to them."

It is high time that from all the towers of Zion the watchmen lift up the voice of warning and urge all who have named the name of Christ, but are entangled in the unholy alliances, to come out from them and be separate and touch not the unclean thing. A united press and pulpit and God behind them would soon make an end. Star-routers, bank robbers and a host of evil doers would quickly subside when deprived of the sheltering power of the secret clans; but while Christian men and ministers bind themselves in fraternal fellowship with them in the lodge, and the pulpit and press give silent approval, the hands of the wicked will be strengthened and the young and unsuspecting will be drawn into the lodge snare. It is indeed horrible that robbers, thieves and murderers can and do use the "mystic tie" as a talisman to ward off the consequences of their crimes, and that so many others are, as many Masons confess, trusting in its ceremonies and morality for salvation, while rejecting Christ, and the Lord's watchmen refuse to sound the alarm! When inquisition is made for blood where will it be found?

THE MEASURE OF YOUR FAITH.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

Your position on speculative Freemasonry is the measure of your faith. This is the fact if you know what Masonry is. Intelligent Masons must know that Masonry antagonizes Christianity in every essential point. Knowing this and still adhering to Masonry demonstrates the infidelity of the adherent. There can be no escape from this conclusion. Does the professing Christian who adheres to Masonry, sincerely desire Christianity to "break in pieces" all antagonistic religions and powers? The supposition is self-stultifying and impossible. How much faith in Christ has a man who endorses the Masonic plan of salvation? Can an intelligent man believe, at one time, that there is only one way of being saved, and that in Christ, and that there are two ways? Can a man believe, by trying ever so hard, that one is the same as two? How much faith then in Christ, the "One Name," can a man have who concedes two ways to heaven?

Now let this principle apply to the ten thousands of professors in our churches who, though not Masons, are indifferent to the Masonic question. They disregard the fact that there is an antagonistic system in the field, pledging salvation to its adherents in and out of the church of Christ. How can a man whose soul is on fire with zeal in the one way of saving men from the wrath to come, look on and see a rival system which disputes at every essential point the one way of life? How much faith in Christ can such men have? Sincere and full faith in Christ implies intense opposition to every known anti-Christ. So felt and acted Christ in his ministry, and so all loyal souls always will act. "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up;" said Jesus, "Take these things hence." Paul's spirit was stirred in him in view of the idolatry of the Athenians. Is the Masonic idolatry less odious, less fatal to souls than the idolatry of Ephesus or Athens? This is a question of sixty centuries and through this long period God has reserved some who would not bow to Baal.

Men and women who truckle to the Baalism of this century are like the Israelites in the days of Ahab and Jezebel who did the same. Such people demonstrate not only the degree but the quality of their faith. What kind of faith is it that can compromise the Christian to the pagan religion? This is a question not so much to rabid Masons, as to the indifferent throng of easy church members who sweetly harmonize with the Masonic idolatry in the so-called Christian churches. Will not the judgment day scathe and blast this kind of faith? How can the soul be loyal to Christ who cares not which of the two antagonistic religions, Christ's or Baal's, predominates?

One fact must here be stamped on the mind, namely, that when any form of idolatry is tolerated in a church, that will become the ruling power in such church. No fact can be more fully demonstrated by by the history of idolatry than this. The reason is very plain. The one and only true way can tolerate no rival. Every true Christian must know this, and he is a spurious one, who does not see and feel this fundamental truth.

The moment a professing Christian puts his flag at half mast, by consenting to a rival system of faith, he is disloyal to the one way of life and is thoroughly demoralized and subjugated to the antagonist. Pulling down the flag half way is impossible. The moment you start to half mast your flag, it is down in the dirt and filth of idolatry, defiled and polluted with spiritual or moral adultery and that beyond recognition—only as the banner of wickedness and treachery. Some, perhaps, may say this argues the strength of the heathen and the weakness of the Christian religion. This argument is of the same age as that of apostacy, and if this argues strength to wickedness and wickedness to loyalty and truth, then Satan has the advantage of God and so have all apostates. But the truth is, God holds all moral beings accountable to him in the "great day" and leaves them to choose whom they will serve, God or Baal. Then Satan himself will be summoned before the judgment throne of Christ the conqueror. While wicked men deny, demons know and own this truth.

THE RIGHTS AND WRONGS OF LABORERS.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

One of the rights of labor is that of compensation that is just and equal, and as employers can afford and the laborer deserves. This cannot always, if ever, be determined by legislation. The Divine law is explicit, "Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal," and "As ye would that men should do unto you do ye even so to them." It is feared that both classes sadly forget these Divine precepts, and it follows that the great remedy for our labor troubles is not to be sought for so much in legislation as in a quickening of conscience through a general revival of true religion. Such a revival would add immensely to the justice, the benevolence, and the industry of the nation, and hence would add vastly to the wealth of the industrial classes. No other remedy can reach the difficulty. All the so-called benevolent societies, based on secrecy and selfishness, are mere shams and quackeries. They never change the heart.

As a practical application of these principles, arbitration has been often resorted to, and often with excellent results. Legislation might contribute much toward the settlement of the differences of employers and employed by providing for boards of arbitration for these differences, and the statesman who shall devise such a system will have contributed much to the good of his race and the settlement of a most important social and political question.

Next to arbitration, or perhaps better, is co-operation. This plan has been adopted in many instances, both in the old world and the new, with eminent success. It consists simply in each man putting in his capital, his labor, or both, according to its estimated value, and drawing from the profits in proportion to his stock. That grand scholar and noble philanthropist, Elihu Burrett, who had himself wrought out his own success at the blacksmith's anvil, did much to secure a wide adoption of this plan and, though the selfishness of capitalists and helplessness of labor has done much to prevent its adoption, yet it will doubtless succeed more and more. The whale fisheries of New England, formerly a most important business, were carried on mainly on this plan. Ships were fitted out for three years. Each laborer put in his three years' work as so much capital, which counted according to its value, as well as the cost of the ship and the wages of the master. He often received in advance such supplies as his family needed during his absence and on the return of the ship his share of the profits of the catch, deducting what had been advanced. We can scarcely imagine a business more difficult of adjustment in all its details than this, and yet the plan worked well.

The advantages of the system of co-operation are:

1. It secures a community of interest to all engaged in the business; for it makes every man a master as well as a laborer.

2. It secures greater industry, economy and honesty; for each man is working for himself.

3. It destroys the distinction between labor and capital, for it transforms labor into capital of the most valuable kind.

4. It adds materially to the profits of the laborer without materially diminishing those of the capitalist.

5. It secures in the only practicable way, that which is just and equal, and solves the labor problem in harmony with the highest interests of all. Will not some of our wise statesmen devise and set on foot this plan.

WE HAVE A LAW.

BY QUAKER BOY.

"We have a law," said the murderous Jews, "and by our law he ought to die." Divine judgments followed. Not the accusers only, but the nation suffered who had given consent to the accusations and the bloody deed. Did that suffering, great as it was, end with time?

We have a law, said the slaveholders, and by our law he ought to die. Innumerable murders were committed. The helpless slave and his sympathizing friend often fell without mercy. Finally the cup of iniquity was filled to overflowing. The history of the war is familiar. Did the judgment end with time?

We have a law, said the Mormons, and by our law he ought to die. The murders committed by this wicked, false church are innumerable. Judgments have followed from time to time. Thorns and briars have sprung up in their pathway. Readers have been familiar with their past sufferings. Where do their sufferings end?

We have a law, said the Roman Catholic hierarchy, and by our law he ought to die. Who on earth can number the murders committed by this wicked power?

> "Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones > Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold."

Judgments against the power of this beast are continually arising in time. When will they end?

We have a law, said the Freemason, and by our law he ought to die. Not only in the case of Morgan was it said, but many others, not all to be numbered on earth. The dark secret power has been silly enough to presume that those murders were concealed. All which they have done in secret shall be proclaimed upon the housetops. In the light of the eternal day all will be revealed and nothing will escape its fitting condemnation there. Judgments have visited this black power, false in its religion, false in its philanthropy, false in its promises of good and pretensions to humanity. A blast of judgment once threw down its walls like those of Jericho. They have been presumptiously rebuilt, but what will be their fate? Thorns and thistles are springing up in their pathway. Their church members, whether Quaker, Methodist or Jew are beginning to smell more and more of corruption. What if the nobles of the land have been duped by by the glimmering view of present advantage? Were not the lords of the Philistines as well as common people in the house of Dagon, the false god? What number crowded there would have prevented the fatal crash? If Morgan was murdered, says Pike, the rebel general, Freemasonry was not concerned, but only that posse of men belonging to the order who transacted the rash deed. These men, he avers, ought to have been hung. The pungent light of Thurlow Weed's last testimony coerced this much from the lips of his worshipful highness. In like manner says the Jewish Rabbi, only that posse of Jews who transacted the deed are guilty.

The commandment of the Lord enjoins, "Come out from among them, my people," "Be ye separate that ye be not partakers of their plagues." Shades of Fox and of Wesley! Are there men who profess to hold your names in reverence who have suffered themselves to be bound with cords in the lodge-rooms of secretism? bound like Samson until they know not that "the Lord has departed from them? Keep it before the people; resound it in the schools until the youths shall blush to hear that church members are in affiliation with vile lodges of secretists.

> Hate is a feeble word. It cannot fairly tell
> How much my quickened soul is stirred
> When I have read or seen or heard
> Of this dark power of hell.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Making ready the N. C. A. Building for a grand purpose —A place for brave hearts and hard work—Washington as a vantage ground for the lodge—"Garfield's minister" among the veteran Hiramites—A Temple of licentiousness—Notes about Congress—An evil leaven in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 8, 1883.

The work of preparing the building of the N. C. A. for occupancy has begun, and will be rapidly pushed forward to completion. This work is in the hands of Mr. Ford, who is one of the most tried and devoted friends of the cause in this city, and it is expected that in a month or so all things will be ready for the commencement of a determined and aggressive campaign against the armies of secretism at the capital of the nation. The readers of the Cynosure have already been favored with a description of the property, so that there is no need again to refer to it, except to say that every day brings more clearly to light the wisdom of the choice in its selection. Its location, so near to the City Hall, the courts of the District, and the offices of the District government, together with the fact that it is in the very midst of the offices of the legal fraternity, will give us an opportunity of sending forth a saving influence in a direction where it is much needed. In no place in the country has secretism so unblushingly thrust itself into the sanctuaries of law and justice, and defied them, as here; and the presence of our headquarters in the midst of such surroundings will be, at least, a constant witness and protest against the doings of the lodge, and it is hoped ultimately will root out an evil that is corrupting society at the very sources of its strength. There are other advantages of situation that might be referred to, but I will only say that when the carpenter and plasterer, who are now at work, take their departure from the building, it will be a credit to the Association and as desirable a piece of property as is owned by any society devoted to the work of reform in the East.

The friends of the cause here are greatly encouraged by the action of the National Association in purchasing this property. It is to them the signal of succor in a struggle that has been sustained against overwhelming odds. It will bring many to our aid who are now hid away discouraged, and will be the commencement of the work of raising such a beacon-light as will be seen from the utmost corners of the land. It is felt here that we work on a vantage ground such as is presented by no other city of the Union, for if we only can get the minds of those who congregate at the capital strongly leavened with the principles of anti-secretism there is no point from which it will operate more quickly throughout the whole mass of the people than this. Then, at few points is the enemy present in stronger force. The gentlemen of the lodge have not overlooked the national capital as a point of great strategic importance. They not only choose their time, but the place; and as a consequence this is a signally lodge-ridden community. They occupy every avenue of influence, plant their colors in every seat of authority, and multiply occasions for display during the sessions of Congress when an opportunity presents itself of showing the people of the country the place they hold in the legislative counsels of the nation.

The latest display of this kind was the "Fourth Annual Dinner of the Masonic Veteran Association of Washington," which was given at the Metropolitan Hotel. Gen. Albert Pike, who has ascended to the 33d heaven of Masonry, presided, and we are told by the public press that the tables were arranged to form three sides of a square, the president and first and second vice-presidents being seated at the points of the mystic triangle. The menu embraced a most enthusing array of the delicacies of the season, together with a combination of wines. Among those present were: Gen. Swaim, Elwood E. Thorne, Past Grand Master State of New York; Ed. Oppelt, Past Eminent Commander of Maryland; Hon. Geo. B. Loring, Hon. H. J. Spooner, Rev. F. D. Power, District Attorney Corkhill, District Auditor I. H. Tichenor, B. H. Warner, Harrison Dingman, James Lansburgh, K. D. Walker, Past Grand Master of West Virginia, and Col. E. C. Boudinot.

To give the gathering an odor of sanctity there were several ministers, among whom will be observed the name of F. D. Power. But the presence of "Garfield's minister" and the other "ambassadors of Christ" did not serve to enforce the principles of temperance, for we are told that the "veterans" had an "uproarious time." There were few of those present who did not prove themselves to be "veterans" in the art of gulping down intoxicating liquors. What a conservator of public morals! What an advocate of temperance! What a high-road to "piety, morality and religion" is ancient craft Masonry!

There is another display still less creditable in which the "brethren of the mystic tie" were directly concerned. The report is taken from the National Republican of a few days ago:

The long-talked of "French ball" was given in Masonic Temple last night, and a disreputable affair it was. The doors were thrown open at 8 o'clock and by 10 o'clock the hall packed. The rag-tag and bob-tail of the "division" was represented in all its glory. The demi-monde had full possession and they were out for a night of it. The women and their associates were reekless and exceedingly boisterous. The press grew suffocating as the night wore on, and toward midnight the crowd became decidedly unruly. Maskers to the number of 300 or 400 joined in a mad frolic, and the throng of spectators, numbering 800 or 1,000 more, caught the infection and aided in the wild uproar. The noise was hideous and the scene maddening. The bawds in costume, with their friends and admirers, sent up a chorus of blasphemy, ribaldry, song, and laughter. Among the spectators were hundreds of first citizens, so called, and they seemed perfectly at home. Even the police were shocked, and when the roughs got to fighting they concluded it was time to interfere, and they did.

No other place in the city could be secured for this disgraceful exhibition but the "temple." On the Bible principle, that he that biddeth an evil man God speed is partaker of his evil deeds, why should not "the brethren" be partakers of the infamy of this affair? Society justly brands the property-owner who lets his property to keepers of disreputable houses as a promoter of licentiousness, and why should not the Masonic fraternity here come under the same law of reprobation? Think of a poor benighted soul taking his first steps in "piety, morality and religion" up in the "chamber of imagery," while in another portion of the building, under the sceptre of Masonry and by its license, hell is holding high carnival, and seething such a pot of uncleanness, profanity and blasphemy as to stink the atmosphere for leagues around! What is to be thought of such an order? and will not God be avenged on such a fraternity?

Just now Congress is closely occupied with the tariff question, the Republicans striving earnestly to win the laurels with which the party is to be crowned that reduces taxation, and the Democrats laboring just as strenuously to reserve this distinction for themselves. Owing to the short time that the former have left to work it is thought that the opposition will succeed in postponing action on the matter until the meeting of the next Congress.

As was dreaded, the whisky men have succeeded in defeating Senator Windom, and it is feared that Ferry will fall also a victim to their machinations. It is truly to be regretted that such men—men bearing the divine stamp of fitness for office, men fearing God and hating coveteousness—should be seen taking their leave of the halls of Congress, especially when you mark the kind of material that is coming in. For example, here is the Denver Tribune's portrait of the new Senators from Colorado:

Senator H. A. W. Tabor, 53 years old, five feet ten, weight about 165 pounds, stoop shouldered, ambling gait, awkward with his hands, sallow complexion, black hair inclined to baldness, large head, rugged features, big black moustache which spreads at the ends, dresses in black, magnificent cuff-buttons of diamonds and onyx, large diamond ring, rather drawling in speech, stove-pipe or black felt hat, has habit of nervously pulling at moustache, temperate, no public speaker, earnest in conversation, generous and charitable, fond of the theatre, capital poker player, on the street carries hands in overcoat pockets, worth $8,000,000.

Senator Thomas M. Bowen, 47 years old, five feet ten and a half in height, spare build, thin bony hands, face thin, complexion inclined to be swarthy, hair black with streaks of gray, spare moustache, good forehead, eyes set close together, and deep sunken, invariably wears Prince Albert coat, stove-pipe hat, stand-up collar and black tie, rapid talker, fair story teller, manner rather jerky, squints when engaged in earnest conversation, favorite gesture pump-handle, walks erectly, plays good game poker, favorite expression "I give it out cold and flat," voice pitched in high key in public speaking, generous and bold, everybody calls him Tom, takes it straight, worth $2,000,000.

In other words, the estimate of the people of Colorado of a man's fitness to represent them in Congress is "magnificent cuff-buttons of diamond and onyx, large diamond pin, a habit of nervously pulling at moustache, temperate, no speaker, fond of the theatre, and a capital poker player." Shades of Webster, Wilson and Sumner, think of it! Truly this is a day of small things. "How has the gold become dim, the most fine gold changed!" JOSEPH BOWES.

ANTI-MASONIC AXIOMS.

When nature follows out the disordered fancies of men and produces a live Centaur, that can hit the mark every time, then political parties will succeed in placing an honest American head on Masonic shoulders. The United States government can no more be run by the Masonic lodge than it can be by the Mormon church.

The Centaur, though more than half horse, was not so bad as the horse-jokes played off by Freemasons. It was a natural imbecile conception of Paganism, while the monstrous conceptions of Freemasonry are deliberate frauds, committed by drunken infidels who knew better.

Some men carry their ignorance or their effrontery to the revolting degree of claiming the Saviour of mankind as a Freemason. But their is no evidence to sustain their claim except in the Episcopal creed which declares that "He descended into hell." It is impossible to use pious language in treating of the blasphemous impieties of Freemasonry.

REFORM STORY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

CHAPTER XXXVIII (CONTINUED).—UNDER THE JUNIPER TREE.

That the rough-looking stranger in blue jean trowsers, tucked into very muddy boots, who shook his hand with such awkward warmth, was just as divinely appointed to bring him help and comfort as any angelic messenger that ever appeared to patriarch or prophet in the Old Testament times, was an idea that never dawned in even the most indistinct fashion on the elder's mind.

"I'm glad ye didn't get no hurt the other night, parson," was the first greeting of the unknown.

"Thank you, my friend," replied the elder. "The Lord is truly a shield and buckler to them that fear him."

"Well, I went fifteen miles to hear that lecture; and I tell you, parson, I was just thundering mad at the way you showed us up; so I was as ready as any on 'em to bear my part when the rumpus begun. But you had a kind of look as you stood there with the rotten eggs flying about, that made me think of my old Methodist mother when dad used to curse and swear at her about her religion, and threaten all kinds of things if she didn't leave off her singing and praying. And arter all I don't know but I was more glad than sorry at your getting off so slick when that chap blew out the lights and left us groping in the dark, like the Syrian army that was sent to take the prophet Elisha. You see I stumbled right on that ar passage when I was hunting up the eighth chapter of Ezekiel. I was bound to find out if there was really anything in the Bible about Masonry; and for all it was two o'clock when I got home, I raked up the fire and went at it. And I tell you, parson, that ar chapter in Ezekiel is a stunner. It just knocked me flat to think I'd been worshipping the sun like any heathen. And now I've come out from the lodge for good and all. I don't want no more of it. The Lord has come into my heart and taken all the Masonry clean out of me. I hate it worse'n pizen, I do; and now, parson, I want a lecture in our parts as soon as you can come and give one. My name is Timothy Bundy, and I live at Bundy's Flats, just over the river. Maybe you know the place?"

The elder had heard of Bundy's Flats. He knew it was a hard locality, but at that moment though a legion of devils had beset his way he would have gone all the same. Surely God had spread a table for him in the desert, and riven the rock at his need, and his fainting, discouraged soul mounted up as on eagle's wings in exulting triumph over all the powers of earth and hell.

It is in the fiery furnace that a form appears like the Son of Man. Scorn, contempt, persecution still beset the elder's path, and he saw no reason to hope for anything else till he reached the end of his mortal journey. But a spirit of divine joy in doing and suffering for the grand eternal cause of Truth just as long as that cause needed him, now possessed his soul. He was treading the path trod by his crucified Redeemer, he of the many crowns, he whose reign of everlasting righteousness he was feebly striving to bring in. Was it not an earnest of victory that he had been allowed to convert even one soul from the worship of Baal to serve the only living and true God?

"Praise the Lord, Mr. Bundy, for bringing you out of darkness into his marvellous light," he said, as he grasped the stranger's rough hand. "I will gladly give a lecture in your place at any time you may set."

And having consented to an arrangement for Friday night of the following week, and seen his visitor off, the elder rose up from under his juniper tree and did the most sensible thing he could do, which, we are told, was the course followed by Elijah in somewhat similar circumstances—he did eat and drink.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

A FORETASTE.

Mr. Timothy Bundy was a specimen of a particular class of men once common in Ohio and the bordering States. He had been a hunter and trapper in his youth, was of herculean frame and corresponding strength; and there was a legend current in the lodge that he had proved a very troublesome member to initiate, for instead of allowing himself to be knocked down quietly and buried in due form under a pile of rubbish at the east gate of Solomon's Temple, he had taken the farce for a literal attack, and pitched his assailants right and left to the imminent danger of breaking all their bones.

Elder Stedman fulfilled his appointment and lectured at Bundy's Flats, to a small but more quiet and well-behaved audience than he had any reason to expect after his late experience at Quipaw, which was in comparison quite a centre of civilization and refinement. But truth often has the freest course in seemingly most unpromising places, and nowhere had the elder's labors been more signally blessed of the Lord than at Bundy's Flats. The two dollars given him at the close of the lecture was certainly meagre pay, but the elder was satisfied. Not so Mr. Bundy, who took him aside at parting with a rather mysterious air.

"Now, parson, I want to tell you your life ain't never safe. One month ago if I had been picked out by the lodge to cut your throat, I should have done it."

This revelation did not startle the elder. He knew too well what a terrible power the oaths of the lodge have over an ignorant and blinded conscience.

"Thank the Lord, Mr. Bundy, that he has given you a better mind," he calmly answered; "and pray that his grace may work the same blessed change in others."

"I know we orter pray and not to faint, but grace don't do its work all in a minit, you'll find. Now, parson, this ere is a fustrate revolver, brand new, and I'm going to make ye a present of it. You ain't obleeged to let it be known you kerry one. bein' a minister, and you ain't obleeged to use it—I mean on any ornary occasion; but its a good plan to have some sich thing about ye jest for a scarecrow, to scare off folks as might want to meddle with ye to your hurt some times."

The elder remembered Peter, and his answer to this warm hearted but ignorant disciple had a decided savor of mild rebuke.

"The Lord has wonderfully preserved my life hitherto from all the snares evil men have set for it, and would you have me begin to distrust him now by relying on anything else than his own mighty arm for protection? 'Cursed be the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm and departeth from the Lord.'"

Mr. Bundy stood irresolute. He was almost without physical fear himself, but all the more did he realize the dangers which beset the elder. His sudden conversion had generated a spiritual force and fervor that had as yet developed in the active rather than the passive line of direction; for like most men of his peculiar physique the animal in him having the start to begin with, was not immediately subdued by days or even weeks of this new controlling spiritual force which had arrested him like Saul of old, "breathing out threatenings and slaughter," and bent him by the power of its mighty mysterious will to confess and forsake his false worship.

"I don't know but you're in the right on it, parson," he said, finally, laying back the revolver on the shelf. "Anyhow take this," and he pressed some bills into the elder's hand. "It was what I've been saving up to pay my lodge dues with; and if you don't need it for yourself jest take it to help on the work in some place where they are poorer than they be at Bundy's Flats."

The elder took the offering with a heart of grateful joy. To him there was a peculiar preciousness in this first fruit of his labor. Gladly should it all be laid on Christ's altar; oh, how gladly!

"God bless you, brother Bundy," he said; "and fear not what man's rage can do. He hath preserved me in six troubles; yea, in seven there shall no evil touch me."

The elder rode home in a state of calm exultant happiness. There are times when to the soul of every sufferer for God's truth he gives a glimpse as it were of the final victory. And to Elder Stedman came another such experience of joy and triumph as he remembered having once before when the shot of the secret assassin rang through the still, grim woods, and but for the hand of protecting providence would have terminated his career on its very threshold. The years that stretched behind lay bathed in the sunlight of divine goodness; he remembered not one hard place in his pilgrimage, no Slough of Despond, no Hill Difficulty, no Valley of the Shadow of Death. And over the days that lay before glowed that same mellow Indian summer light. Many or few, what mattered it? Sooner or later he must fall in this strife and another take his place, as full of youthful strength and ardor as was he when he first stepped into the ranks. But he was willing, nay, joyful, to die on the field with no huzzas of victory ringing in his death-dulled ears; for only a little while, and the end would surely come for which the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain—the end of every wrong, the triumph of eternal right in the world-wide reign of the Lamb. Welcome persecution, welcome revilings, welcome the martyr's crown if so be it actually glittered for him over those turbid waters that rolled so dark and chill this side of the heavenly Canaan! Living or dying he was more than conqueror.

The elder roused himself from his reverie and spoke a cheery word to the patient steed on which his old love of animals now found its chief outlet and center. The intelligent beast responded thereto by breaking into a brisk trot probably accelerated by certain equine considerations of the snug stable and feed of oats waiting for him at his journey's end.

But the elder's lecture had not failed to stir up the baser elements at Bundy's Flats as well as Quipaw and other places. A few evenings after a little bare-footed child knocked at Mr. Bundy's door. The child was weeping bitterly and in response to that worthy man's surprised inquiries, sobbed out,

"You won't let them do anything to that good elder, will you, Mr. Bundy? He come to our house and talked and prayed with ma, and she says he seemed just like one of the angels of God, only when she said so before pa it made him swear."

"They shan't do anything to him if I know it. Come in Bub and tell me what you mean," said Mr. Bundy who recognized in the child the little son of a consumptive woman who lived about a mile away, and whose husband was both a Mason and a hard drinker.

"I heard pa and some other men talking about the elder," said the child in a frightened whisper. "I was in bed and they were talking and drinking down below. And they said such awful things of what they would do if they should catch him in the dark. And they are going to burn his house down, Mr. Bundy, I heard them say so. I kept still till I thought they were gone, and then I jumped out of bed and run over to you, I thought you could stop their doing it."

"Now look here, Bub," said Mr. Bundy, after staring for an instant at the wee mite who, with a courage beyond his years, had braved all the terrors of the darkness to avert the danger that threatened the elder. "Here's a prime turkey I shot to-day. I've been reckoning to send it to your ma. Come over to-morrow and you can have it. But now run home, sonny, and get into bed as quick as you can; and don't forget to say your prayers. I reckon the good Lord above will take care of the elder."

The child departed not a little comforted.

Mr. Bundy drew on his boots, saddled his horse and was soon galloping through the night with one hope in his heart—that the warning had not come too late and he should get the start of the incendiaries.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.

Elder Hezekiah Davis writes decidedly favoring the Council of Churches. He says: "I am interested in the calling of a 'Council of Churches' on the plan of Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of Kansas, or something of the kind." Personal conversation with some other pastors shows that such a movement would be likely to be endorsed by many.

The Connecticut State Convention is to be held at Melodeon Hall, Hartford, March 20, and 21. Several able speakers will address the meeting. Melodeon Hall is located on Main street directly opposite the office of the Grand Secretary of the Connecticut Grand Lodge.

The Masons of Providence held a grand jubilee in that city Feb. 2, and 3. The speeches were characteristic, the bombast being equal to that of its palmiest days.

The historical sketch read at the Masonic jubilee in Providence, contains the following: "Fifty years ago a social, religious and political storm raged in this State (R. I.) with a furor seldom, if ever, equalled in the history of our country. The Anti-masonic agitation of that day was a terrific tornado of family strife, civil intrigue, and ecclesiastical bigotry. The ties of kindred were severed; State legislatures enacted illegal laws and religious societies anathematized many of their most devoted and honored members. All this was done that Freemasonry might be forever stamped and banished from the home, the State and the church. Lodge rooms were closed, while death rapidly reduced the roll of membership and for a time it appeared to the outer world that our ancient institution was doomed to utter extinction. In fact there was already heard on the rostrum and in the pulpit, from our enemies many a triumphal shout of victory won."

The following letter comes to us from a gentleman in Maine whose name is for the present withheld: "I have thought of writing you several times regarding the great reform work which you represent in New England. I have been a careful reader of the Cynosure for a little over a year. A copy came to my box at that time by mistake, which belonged to one of our highest Masons in the county. I was surprised, first, to find that one of the first of the order should be a subscriber for an Anti-masonic paper; and second, that the sentiments were in perfect accord with those I had entertained for over two years. I feel like saying today that never again will I aid in the miserable farce of leading a fellow-man, hood-winked and half naked, to personate the supposed Hiram Abiff in the hall of any Masonic lodge."

CONNECTICUT AND THE STATE CONVENTION.

WORCESTER, Mass., Feb. 12, 1883.

A good Providence has brought me safely through my slight illness, leaving only small traces of disease, enough to guard me against needless exposure. Yesterday I resumed most of Sabbath duties, and had a pleasant day so far as my own feelings were concerned.

The date for the Connecticut convention has been fixed for March 20 and 21, at Melodeon Hall, Hartford. After consultation this time and place are considered most favorable. Nothing is wanting of opportunity to have a strong convention. Within a few hours' ride of Hartford there are friends enough to make a large meeting and give our Connecticut work an impetus such as it has not previously had. We do not intend to announce any speakers who will not cheerfully consent to bear a part, but we have reason to expect a good attendance of able speakers and laymen.

If I knew what words to use I would frame a strong appeal to every friend of our cause to make this a grand rallying time. Let no man practice a false economy and stay at home to save expense. We have arranged to hold the convention two evenings and a day. Let us prepare to come at the beginning and stay to the end. It is not probable that we can provide free entertainment for all who come, but we will make arrangements for as reasonable entertainment as possible. The expense will not be great and we can well afford to deal with a liberal hand.

During my recent visit to Connecticut it rejoiced me to meet many old friends. At Thompsonville Rev. C. S. McCracken and wife entertained me hospitably and made me wish there might be equally warm friends in every place. Thompsonville is a town of about 4,000 inhabitants, containing one of the largest carpet factories in the world, employing nearly 2,000 hands, or nearly one-half the entire population of men, women and children.

Brother and Sister Collins of Windsor are greatly afflicted in the severe sickness of their only son, whose disease does not yield to treatment, but is slowly accomplishing its fatal work. They are deserving of our sympathy and prayers.

A young lawyer, a graduate of Yale College and law school, gave me an inside view of college secret society life, which ought to be given to every patron of the college who has entrusted his son to the care of that institution. He was ignorant of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, and was eager to hear on the subject. As the secrets opened up to his view he was much impressed with the similarity of these orders to the college fraternities of which he was a member.

In describing the caste which prevails in the college he gave me an incident of his own observation as an illustration. While he was in college there were two brothers also attending, one a Sophomore and the other a Freshman. The spirit of caste between the classes was so strong that these brothers were forced to abandon all brotherly intercourse, not even recognizing each other on the streets! This state of things, he said, is unquestionably attributable to the secret fraternities which arouse and foster that spirit.

The last three months of the year the Senior class societies spend almost wholly in a drunken carouse. About 10 o'clock every night they all "turn out" and repair to the lodge room, where wine, champagne and cigars are provided in abundance. Those of the class who are not wholly abandoned in character go home at 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning, but the hard cases continue their debauch till morning. This, he represented, is a common and constant practice among them.

Such a picture of college life is alarmingly horrible. The Faculty have waged a warfare upon these societies within a few years, with a degree of success. The Freshmen and Sophomore societies have been destroyed and the classes forbidden to organize any secret societies, while the Junior and Senior class societies have been reduced to two for each class.

I obtained the names of some members of the Faculty who have been active in their opposition to secret societies and was much gratified to know that Prof. Dana, the learned geologist, was among those whom this gentleman had repeatedly heard speak to the students on the subject.

Near Putnam, Conn., there lives an old lady now nearly ninety years old—Mrs. Clark—whose memory reaches back to the Morgan days, and even earlier, and from whom I learned a fact of no little interest. She had seven brothers who joined the Masons, all but one of whom openly renounced the institution, that one dying without opportunity.

Mrs. Clark remembers to have attended in her younger days a Masonic funeral which made no small stir at the time. On the morning of the funeral the fraternity appeared in gala dress on horse-back, displaying with much pomp their little white aprons. At the funeral they had the place of honor in the church, crowding the mourners into the rear of the church. The whole ceremony she describes as revolting in the extreme. Truly Masonry has not changed.

Brother O. C. Bailey arrived from Chicago Saturday to assist in our work here. He spoke at the Union chapel last evening and is to assist in other meetings this week. Mr. Spaulding is in Rhode Island. E. D. BAILEY.

REFORM NEWS.

THE SECRETARY'S NOTES.

GALESBURG, Feb. 12, 1883.

I have just attended the funeral services of the late Prof. C. Bateman, only son of Pres. Bateman, of this city. The services were held in the Presbyterian church. The local ministers were in attendance and participated in the exercises. The audience room was filled, a large proportion of those present being young people and, I was told, students. The deceased made a profession of religion at fifteen years of age and died at 27 in the full prime of manhood.

He graduated at Amherst College in 1876, spent considerable time in foreign universities; notably those of Berlin, Heidelberg and Paris.

He mapped out for himself a new and entirely original course of study, which was adopted by Columbia College, N.Y., and named "The Chair of Administrative Law and Government," which chair he occupied at the time of his decease. The clergyman who conducted the services spoke of the great assiduity, originality, integrity and devout piety of Mr. Bateman and made an earnest appeal, especially to the young men to imitate his example.

Two gentlemen near me on the cars were discussing the liquor question. One remarked, "Theoretically I am a teetotaler but practically I am not, I take an occasional glass when I think it will do me good." The theoretical teetotlar closed the conversation with an invitation to take a cigar which was promptly but courteously declined by the practical abstainer. It occured to me that this was a fair sample of the way things go in reform. The theoretical temperance men, like this man, are in favor of high license and the stringent enforcement of law, but take a glass occasionally when they feel like it, and the temperance cause suffers more from the influence of one such respectable theoretical temperance man, than from a hundred "sots." When the pinch comes he goes and votes with the "beer-suckers" at the polls. And its about the same with theoretical Anti-masons, who fellowship the unfruitful works of darkness, and without protest sit down at the communion with Freemasons and Oddfellows.

As a rule such men have a spinal affection and cripple when it comes to a "back-hug" with the "Beast or his image."

A PRINCE ROYAL.

If "swell" feathers, a nobby uniform, badges, gaudy sash and a saber constitute nobility we have a Royal Prince on board our train to-day. Appearances are sometimes delusive and the fellow may be a cobbler, a butcher or vender of snide jewelry for ought I know when at home; but from the imperial air with which he paces up and down the aisle, it is evident that he is out for an impression, at least such was my first thought. On further reflection it occured to me that he might be going on the mournful mission of assisting in the last sad rites of laying away the body of some "brother" who had made his exit from the lodge on earth through the door of delirium tremens and gone to the "Grand lodge above." I reflected, but of course being only a "profane" I did not venture to interrogate a creature of such noble bearing.

To avoid confusion in the public mind, I respectfully suggest to the "Grand East" that an order be forthwith issued requiring each royal knight to wear conspicuously on his person a placard inscribed: "Christened at the altar of our order with five solemn libations, the fifth being of pure wine, drunk from a dead man's skull," and that all pretenders wear the motto, "Knight apes," equally conspicuous. J. P. STODDARD.

—Bro. Hinman sends a brief but cheering word from the Chambersburg, Pa. convention, which met last week. The meeting was "a fine success;" "full of men and women;" "the large hall crowded;" and "Bro. Starry did his work well."

NORTH-EAST PENNSYLVANIA CAMPAIGNING.

CLIFFORD.

Here on the evenings of the 1st and 2nd inst., we met brothers Hinman and Starry. With brother Barnetson in the chair, by mutual agreement the meeting was opened about 7 P. M. Notwithstanding the exceeding badness of getting around and the many cases of sickness in the community, we had quite an audience.

The first degree in Masonry was given and explained by brother Starry, assisted by brother Hinman. The Hiramites were duly represented there by three Masons, we believe, though one of the three, we were informed, denied the fact that he was one. One of these, the most outrageous of the three, having too much of the Masonic platform in him, lost his jewel entirely and was drawn toward the door to be put out, but pledging to behave he was left in to the close of the meeting. He did not keep his pledge. He said Starry was revealing Masonry and the meeting should be broken up, etc. Hoping he may yet become more sober and discreet, we withhold his name till further orders. A scheme for a bolder and more effective demonstration was on foot for the subsequent evening, but none was made and in the presence of a fine audience Hiram was killed and raised in the most approved style to the intense amusement and convincing of the people. The Mason with the too wide a plank in the platform the night before, clinched the whole. We thank the "Captain" most sincerely. On Saturday eveuing, the 3d, brother Starry gave a very interesting sketch of his experience with grand effect. This ought to go with the degrees in all places.

Various items of business were acted upon, and resolutions passed at a business meeting on the 2nd inst. These for the sake of brevity we omit, hoping that brother Hinman will notice them. Four noble soldiers from Bradford county, Pa., greeted us: Elders Barnetson, Phelps, Burlington, and a young soldier with meaning in his face, whose name I cannot recall. These came fifty miles to be at these meetings, forbiddiug as was the weather and the going. Such men God uses, and blesses, too. We were sorry to part at this point with brother Hinman who went with our Bradford county brethren to work till time calls him to Chambersburg, Pa. Brother J. W. Powers, true as steel, also came from Harford and attended the first meeting.

Our programme took in Carbondale, Lackawanna Co. for the 5th and 6th inst., but the court house, which had been engaged, was not in condition to be used (so said the trustees) and it being too late to get another hall when informed of the facts, we left that place out. A maneuver, we presume. After some consultation we concluded to go next to on the 7th and 8th. We used the 5th and 6th, to work up this meeting, very diligently. Bro. Saunders took Elder S. E. Miller's team and carried us around from point to point, got posters and circulated them among the people.

On the 7th we could not be present at Waverly on account of illness of near friends. Heard a good report of that meeting, on the 8th inst., when I came onto the ground. Nothing specially new turned up on the evening of the 8th. We had fair order and no demonstrations from the Hiramites. Our admission fee was 15 cents to all under 14 years. Waverly has many overgrown boys, ranging, in appearance, from sixteen to fifty years old who got in without paying.

The work was well done here and received no challenges. We found a cordial home at brother S. A. Reynolds and at Deacon Stephen Parker's. Our meetings were in the Free Methodist church. Many thanks to these brethren, good and true. We wish we could mention all the true soldiers of this conflict.

FACTORYVILLE.

Here special meetings were in progress in both the M.E. and the Baptist churches, and much religious interest was reported. On the evening of the 9th the Entered Apprentice degree was worked before a fair audience. The lodge, including candidate, was, I was told, made up of students from the Key Stone Academy. On the corner stone of this building is the key-note of Masonry, "Year of Light," etc., put there by the sun-worship of the Christian (?) church. Three Baptist Associations united in calling the Masons to this sublime duty (?) of "cornucopia Satanic!"

Nothing of special note took place on the evening of the 9th. The Entered Apprentice degree was well given. On the evening of the 10th we were met by a large audience, counting the fact that there was a revival meeting in progress at the Baptist church, conducted by a popular revivalist. The interest must have been unusual, as the meetings were not usually held on Saturday night. Comments are unnecessary. Could some anti-secret reformer go through the whole land and start the church bells to ringing in the dead and dormant churches, and get the sleepy Hirams out to prayer meetings and start the rusty machinery going, some of the rust might be rubbed off by friction.

On the last night here, we were met by some opposition, which recoiled grandly. In appearance Hiramites had been busy through the intervening time to create, if possible, a defeat. Two of the young men (?) who had volunteered to make up the lodge, had imbibed the "fulminating" and the "strong powder," or had "charged and fired," in Masonic language (See Masonic Glossary A. A. Scotch Rite Masonry, p. 582) till they had become insubordinate and unruly, These fellows had to be lectured in the ante-room and threatened with exposure before we could proceed. We went through, however, with some embarrassment. At the close some stale questions by a shamed Mason were put to brother Starry, with a return of repartee which squelched poor Solomon.

The insubordinates had to ventilate some bad odor which savored of the "fulminating powders." All this was endured as the "stinking savor" of the sublime craft. After all this brother Starry and I rode six miles in a snow storm to Abington Station to get the night train to Scranton. An estimable young man, son of brother George Cobb, brought us here with a good span and returned in the storm. Found the depot locked up, the hotel dark, we went to a private house, where we found excellent quarters and very cordial reception and stopped over Lord's day with brother Jabez Hall, who was in early life initiated into the sublime truths of Masonry. He thinks of it as we do.

We took the 9 A. M. train to Scranton and after going through the vast iron and steel works in that city went to refreshments. After dining we settled up and brother Starry started for Chambersburg, Pa., about 2 P. M. Feb. 12th. This brother is a champion at degree work and will bear acquaintance anywhere. We saw him sorely tried, and he came out "more than conqueror." If you want the degrees worked and explained you need look no further for your man. N. C.

REPORT OF IOWA STATE LECTURER.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—After my last report, my next work was in Greenwood. The people rejoiced at the truth, and I spoke twice in the Wesleyan Methodist church. From Greenwood I went to Quasqueton, and spoke four times in the Baptist church. The congregations were large, and the people seemed to hunger and thirst for the truth; many took me by the hand and asked God's blessing to rest upon me. Twenty-one dollars and ten cents was handed me to help on the work. At this place I was shut out of the M. E. church last fall, after an appointment had been announced for me to preach. I had lectured twice in their church, and their preacher made up his mind that they had had all the light that they needed for the present.

From here wife and I went to Wayne, Henry Co., to spend the holidays, and held a meeting in the Congregational church. Many precious souls were saved, and the work of the Lord was wonderfully revived. At the close of the meetings they gave me a collection of $68.22. Previous to this they gave Mrs. R. $19.50. May God bless the dear people of Wayne and send them a man after God's own heart to preach a pure gospel to them. We shall often think of them and pray God to bless them.

Our next work was at Richland; tarried over night with Levi Johnston. Appointment was made for me to speak in Centennial school-house. The wind blew and the snow flew, yet there was a fair congregation. At the close the people expressed a desire for another lecture. The next day I was introduced to Prof. Stalker, of the State University of Ames, Iowa; was glad to learn that the reported infidelity of this school is unfounded. The professor gave me a very interesting history of his travels in Europe, showing me many relics that he had brought from Rome and other parts of the world. In the evening I lectured in the Friend's church near Richland; had a fair congregatiou, though it was as cold as Masonic charity, the thermometer standing twenty-four below zero. After the lecture Prof. S. carried me to his brother's, five miles distant. The next evening I lectured again in Centennial school-house. The house was crowded to its ut-

CORRESPONDENCE.

SCHOOL COMMITTEES.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I saw a newspaper notice the other day, of a case where a school committee man was so evidently unfit for his place that folks interested in education tried to get him to resign, which he was unwilling to do. His dress, manners, and education seemed to show that his appointment was eminently unfit and improper to be made. But still, he could not have been more unfit for the place than a Freemason would be. I beg permission through your paper to call the attention of its subscribers to the question, whether their school committees are not under the control of the Masonic lodge. Masonry, like smoke, has an insinuating way of penetrating, filling, stifling, and blinding every proper interest wherever it exists. Like Jesuitry is seeks to control every human interest; and freemen cannot be too much on their guard against it. Let us look into our church committees, and school committees. MORE LIGHT.

AN EXPLANATION.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Feb. 6, 1883.

In the Cynosure of January 25th is a mild complaint from H. H. Hinman that Free Methodist pastors, among others, "excused themselves from active participation" with Bro. Hinman in his anti-secrecy labors. As I have seen in the Cynosure similar complaints before, a word of explanation may not be out of place.

1. The Free Methodist church owes its origin, in part, to the persecutions inflicted upon those who were earnestly striving to promote Bible holiness, by those who made their connection with secret societies a bond of union and a source of strength. The adherents of the lodge carried its tactics into the church and succeeded in expelling a number of preachers and many godly members.

2. Hence Free Methodists, from the start, openly and actively opposed the lodge. They made no connection with secret societies a condition of membership. So far as I know, the present war against the lodge, now being pushed with such vigor, was begun by them.

3. The first action taken towards organizing a Christian Association against secret societies was taken by Free Methodist preachers.

4. When lecturers were appointed, and first went around, our churches were freely opened to them and our preachers heartily co-operated with them.

5. It was soon found that some of these lecturers were imprudent and needlessly exasperating in their attacks upon Freemasonry. They stirred up animosities which the preacher was left to meet alone.

6. Some of these lecturers, welcomed to our pulpits and our homes, used their influence privately, and on one occasion as I have been informed, publicly, against us. One of our leading members informed me that a prominent lecturer whom he had taken home with him, sat up till after midnight trying to persuade him that the forming of the Free Methodist church was a mistake and that the money expended on what he called our "one-horse schools" could be more wisely appropriated.

These statements being true, can it be wondered at that Free Methodist preachers, led by the instinct of self-preservation, without consultation, without advice, should prefer to carry on the warfare against secret societies in their own way and with such assistance as they may select? They do not wish to be found in the condition of the ancient Britons who called in the aid of the Saxons to repel the Scots and Picts, but after their enemies were conquered were themselves dispossessed of their homes, by their friends who had come to their assistance.

B. T. ROBERTS.

KNIGHTS AND LADIES OF HONOR.

DICKSON, TENN., Feb. 6, 1883.

I have before me a circular entitled, Knights and Ladies of Honor. It claims to be a mutual benefit society, an improvement on the theory and practice of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship. Men and women admitted on terms of equality. It professes to be pre-eminently social. The cost of a charter for a subordinate lodge, including the cost of organization, paraphernalia and supplies is $100. It is a secret order. Its members undergo a strict medical examination, and must be between the ages of 18 and 55. When a member dies there is paid to the family $1000, $2000 or $3000, and it claims to be the special friend of the poor. Assessments are made from time to time when deaths occur, according to the age of members and the amount desired to be left to friends. The idea is held out, deceptively we think, that by paying a little a large amount will be received. This is according to the spirit of the times. Inducements are continually held out by which people are led to believe that by expending small sums, large gains will be received. Such are lotteries, marriage associations, dealing in "futures," etc. This idea seems to have taken possession of this order. The expense of the local and supreme lodge is given as $2.75 per annum. The smallest sum that can be paid to secure a benefit is sixty cents. A member may die after paying the first assessment. But if a person is in membership thirty-five years, he only pays $315, to secure a benefit to his heirs of $1000. This statement is gravely made in the circular, without explanation, and members are supposed to accept its truthfulness and be governed thereby. By adding thirty cents to $315, and dividing by two we obtain the average amount paid by each member less than $158. This is gravely said to yield to each member $1000. Is not this a marvel of cheapness! Small outlays with large incomes, truly. Scarce the one-sixth of the sum received paid out. The other five sixths comes from—where?

As professed Christians enter these societies, and are supposed to be honest and upright, where does the $842 unaccounted for come from? There are no invested funds on which to depend for revenue. The only way I can conceive is in number of members who drop out of the order and thus loose all that has been paid. This will be clear gain to the society. Some no doubt become offended, others dissatisfied, and still others, a large number too, will find it burdensome to keep up the annual expenses. The poor man should remember that every dollar paid out is out of his control, and no benefit to him as long as he lives. A failure to meet assessments results in the loss of previous payments and shuts the door against the reception of benefits. Assessments may be more than double what they have been represented. The question occurs, Is it right to receive $1,000 or more, out of funds largely contributed by others, many of them poor and in need of all the money foolishly spent for the present necessities of themselves and their families. Will God approve or bless plans to leave property to others obtained on such a basis. Without secrecy, I expect to provide for myself and family as I may be able, and when death comes, those behind will be left in the hands of God.

ROBERT MC.MURDY ANALYSED.

READING RIDGE, Conn., Feb. 5, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—If the "Dr. McMurdy" mentioned in your issue of the 1st inst. is the "Rev. Robert McMurdy D. D., L. L. D., I have heard of him before, and would like to publish a few words by way of wiping away of the disgrace of his presence and teachings from the church he has belied.

In 1876 the Freemasons laid the corner stone of a church edifice in Illinois, Dr. McM. was present and delivered an address to the fraternity, which was published in the local paper. The following reply to that publication was sent to him soon afterwards:

"I beg leave to say a few words concerning your address at the laying of the corner stone of Trinity church, Cambridge, on the 20th of June last. Masonic orators follow the example of the savage Indians, fighting only under cover, or I might reply to your arguments publicly. But you yourself know that it would be useless to ask a Masonic editor to publish any criticisms of the lodge or its teachers. But notwithstanding the fact that Masonic advocates enjoy almost entire immunity from criticism, you ought to have borne in mind that a Mason is taught, in harmony with his obligations, to 'keep the world in darkness respecting Masonry'; and that, as there are but two ways of doing this, you were either deceiving your hearers by telling them what was false, or violating your oath by revealing what was true. If you deceived anybody, it must have been those without the lodge, who thought a minister of Jesus Christ could not be a false teacher. Whatever may have been your position, you certainly have not kept silence, as every honest man ought to do, when bound by oath not to tell the whole truth; for to tell only a part, is substantially to misrepresent. No man has a right to make assertions publicly, which he is not ready publicly to maintain and defend by fair argument. If Masonry makes men moral cowards, it must be manifestly bad.

"The essence of Freemasonry is in its obligations; for the 'obligation makes the Mason,' as truly as the oath or (sacrament) of baptism makes the Christian. Now when you assert that 'Masonry leads men to Christ,' you are morally bound to show that the Masonic obligations are essentially Christian, which you cannot do, for you admit that Jews, Mussulmans and Christians may be equally good Masons; or 'in good standing' in the lodge. Freemasonry, therefore, by your own admission, is essentially unchristian; and, as the religion of Jesus Christ is eminently exclusive, assuming to be the only true religion, Masonry is essentially anti-Christian. It no more leads men into the church or Christianity than it leads them into Judaism or Mohammedanism, and what you admit, the ritual of the lodge also proves, namely, that the lodge is a Christless (and therefore a God-less) institution;—for 'Jesus Christ is Lord of all.'

"The worship offered in the lodges, at Masonic funerals, and at the laying of corner-stones of churches, is not the worship of God the holy Trinity. The churchman who joins in it renders himself liable to discipline. The worship of the Freemasons involves a denial of Jesus Christ, who testifies, 'No man cometh to the Father but by me.' To offer prayer to God otherwise than in the name of Jesus, is to deny him as the only Mediator and Advocate.

"Having shown you as refuting your own arguments, and thus 'falling by your own sword,' I might now close; but I would like to ask how you expect to convince thinking men that Masonry leads to the church and to Christ, when it is as plain as the sun in the heavens that its teachers cannot even begin their instructions until their pupils are twenty-one years of age? As a general rule, men are Christians, Mohammedans, Jews or infidels, before they 'come of age.' Character is formed in childhood and youth. Do you mean to say the ethics of the church of which you are a minister are false, and that the Christian character is not, ordinarily, formed by a course of training in childhood, based upon the initiatory obligation of baptism? Have 'Nearly all our bishops and leading clergy' (to use your own words) no religious faith till, in manhood, the lodge took them and 'illuminated' them by Masonic 'regeneration'? Or, would you assume that they were all false pretenders, destitute of vital godliness? And what of all those 'bishops and eminent clergymen' who are not Freemasons? In your zeal for the 'Mystic Brotherhood,' your imagination has evidently led you astray.

"The great argument of Masons everywhere and always, for the purity of the lodge and its religion and morality, is that many good men, especially Christian ministers are among its votaries. Nearly all the bishops and the leading clergy, at a very early age, were Arians. Is Arianism therefore the truth of God? The argument is pithy and comprehensive, viz: 'Many good Christians are Freemasons; therefore Freemasonry leads men to Christ.' . . . . Many wicked and corrupt men are Freemasons; therefore Freemasonry leads men to the devil! The conclusion logically follows from the premises.

"I have read several sermons and addresses by clerical Freemasons, and found them all self-contradictory; as all must be which attempt to reconcile Masonry with Christianity. But you go somewhat farther in mis-quoting Holy Scripture, than most of your brothers (unless the types misrepresent you), for you quote St. Paul as saying, 'Masonry . . . . is a schoolmaster to lead us to Christ.' And in speaking of the 'miracle of the Pentecost,' you attribute Freemasonry to God the Holy Spirit! [His words were, "Masonry in its lodge rooms is a perpetual miracle of the Pentecost."]

"If there are no typographical errors in the report of your address, I have no more hope of your conversion to the truth than I have faith in the purity of a church which allows in its ministers the putting forth of such errors, and the indulging in such heathenish worship as that of the lodge, go unrebuked!

"In your sermon you inveigh against schism, and present the church as the appointed healer of divisions; but in your address to the Freemasons, you yourself draw a schismatical line right through the church Catholic;—placing the Freemasons on the right side, and all other Christians on the left; classing them with 'the world;' saying, 'let the world deride and scoff.' I confess myself one of those who 'deride, and scoff' at the high claims of the Freemasons. In Masonic language, therefore, I am of 'the world.'

"You have taught the people of Cambridge that the church is incomplete without the lodge. Whenever Christians confess that the church of Christ is defective, and not fully competent, when rightly used, to do the work of bringing men to Christ and training them for Heaven, they have certainly begun to do the work of Satan in the pulling down of the kingdom of Christ."

MULTUM IN PARVO.

Bro. E. J. Clemens of Clayville, N. Y., knows what is to be said to cheer the workers on the field in the office:

I am very much encouraged as I read the reports of the several laborers in the field, as Bro. Bailey at Worcester, and Bros. Hinman, Starry, Stoddard and others. I see the work is gaining ground and that is because God is in it! I have worn the cable-tow, the hood-wink, and have been through all the foolish nonsense of the three degrees; but it was very distasteful to me and I never entered the lodge after I took my third degree. I cannot do much for the work now, but wish to be set down as a life subscriber to the Cynosure and I will help others as I am able from time to time.

He pays for two subscriptions beside his own. Bro. G. H. Filian reads with interest the copies of the Cynosure sent him during his sojourn in America. Our prayers shall follow him to his home field in Armenia whither he hopes soon to return:

I assure you that your paper is very interesting. I like to have it always and to have others read it also. As I am travelling so much now I fear it will trouble you to send it to me. After I return to my own country I hope to write some interesting letters for you.

M. P. Haven of Hillsdale, Mich., has with many others marked with joy the advancement of the reform by substantial progress and has a good thought on the reasons for it:

These successes date back to the day of prayer observed in September to pray for the reform; and this brings me to what I have of late wished to have brought before the minds of readers of the Cynosure, and that is the need of more prayer--not only to pray in faith but to have faith in prayer as the direct means God has appointed to carry on his work on earth. There needs be a new and deeper consecration to God on the part of the reform workers, a more perfect readiness for the altar on the plow and a true letting go of all else and just leaning on God alone for help. May this spirit of consecration be sought and found by us all. Another idea in Mr. Bailey's article was that those churches favoring this reform would go to the wall if this reform did not sueceed. If they are only human organizations let them go. It is the truth—true prineiple that ought to stand, and if they, these churches, are based on the truth will they fail? Some one said to Lincoln, during the dark days of the rebellion, "I think we shall at last win the day, for I think God is on our side." Mr. Lincoln's reply was, "Whether God is on our side or not don't trouble me; but the trouble with me is whether we are on God's side." Now in this reform are we all right, emptied of self, consecrated to God wholly? If so 'tis well, if not, failure is ours, and it ought to be.

Ostrich-farming is a considerable business in Africa as "goose farming" is with some of the German dames settled in this country. "Kitchen-gardener" remarks concerning the product of this business:

It is said that a full-grown ostrich with all its feathers on is worth about five hundred dollars. Without its feathers it is not worth anything. A good many Knights Templar may be said to be in the same case. Without their ostrieh plumes some of them would be worth even less than nothing. But still, the managers of the lodge probably make more money out of a set of Knights Templar than capitalists in South Africa do out of ostrich-farming. The Knights with krinkled ostrieh plumes over their brows are very much sought after by saloon keepers as ornaments of society. Some ministers of the gospel even find uses for them to keep up a spectacular interest (all others having failed) in their religious worship.

AN OPEN LETTER

TO THE EDITORS OF THE "HOLINESS" JOURNALS IN THE UNITED STATES.

When John wrote to the seven churches of Asia he commeded nearly all of them and censured all but two. I think, dear brethren, that there is much in your course to commend, and in some of you, something to criticise. Surely there is great need of a revival of Christian holiness. The Bride that Christ loved and gave himself for, that he might present her unto himself a holy church, has laid aside her fine linen, clean and white. She has fallen asleep. The world has said, "Bow down that we may go over," and she has laid her "body as the ground and as the street to them that went over."

It was time that you cried in her ears, "Awake! awake! put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem." And I thank God and you that so much earnest and positive truth has been spoken. Your discussion of abstract principles has been earnest and admirable, but such discussion can never save the church from its bondage to the world. Satan believes in holiness in the abstract, and is willing to have all his children make this a part of their confession of faith. What the church needs is to be taught holiness in particulars, for "he that is unjust in that which is least, is unjust also in much."

It is just here, I think, that many of you have failed. You have, in your preaching, failed to apply the doctrine of holiness to prevalent and popular sins. Take an example. Freemasonry is manifestly wicked. It unequally yokes believers and unbelievers. It swears men to conceal from the world what it affirms to be a beautiful system of piety, morality and science, and it teaches that men may worship God aeceptably who do not acknowledge his Son. These, with many other reasons, prove it to be inconsistent with holiness of heart and life. But multitudes, those who profess to be members of the body of Christ, are Masons. Some who profess holiness are such; and this malign and unholy influence runs through every department of society.

A few faithful souls have lifted up their voice in earnest protest. We know not what is to be the result, except as the Master has said, "Every tree that my Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." We know, too, there is safety in living with Christ.

But, brethren, some of you have "seen the battle afar off, but ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge, for the house of Israel." You have not lifted up your voice like a trumpet to show Israel his transgressions and the house of Jacob their sins. You are watchmen, but you saw the sword coming and blew not the trumpet, and the sword has come and destroyed multitudes of souls. I am aware that you plead many excuses. Some of you have said that many good men are connected with these orders, and we would not offend any of the Lord's little ones. It is precisely for this reason that you ought to have spoken. Your first and highest duty was to show the Lord's people their transgressions. even though they seek the Lord early and delight to know his ways. Others say we are ignorant of this subject and have not time to give it the attention necessary to a proper discussion. But you could at least define your position, and you forget that God has said, "If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death. If thou sayest, Behold! we know it not. Doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it?" You, surely, might know if you would. There are some of you that have taken the unholy covenants of the lodge and still acknowledge their binding force. You fear to disclose what you swore to always conceal. This is the worst possible excuse. "Hear ye the word of the Lord, because ye have said, we have made a covenant with death and with hell we are at agreement, the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come nigh us, for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves." Surely a covenant to conceal wickedness and be at peace with iniquity is a covenant with death; and surely the hail of God's wrath will sweep away your refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow your hiding place. You have no right to be silent in reference to any prevalent sin. The fact that you once swore to support it is the strongest possible reason why you should speak out; for he that covereth his sins shall not prosper.

Dear brethren, I beseech you "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Remember that the curse was on Meroz, not because she joined the enemies of God, but because she "went not up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Follow, I beseech you, the example of Paul, who renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, "not walking in craftiness nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by the manifestation of the truth, commending himself to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

NOTES.

"Filled with indignation." The word used to express their feeling might better be rendered jealousy. What the historian is describing is an outbreak of party feeling. The whole influence of the Sadducean party is called forth by their antagonism to the doctrine of the resurrection and their envy of the growth of the new movement. —Cambridge Bible. The reasons for their anger were: (1) The Sadducees denied both spirit and resurrection; and that these were Sadducees is stated in explanation of their special heat against the apostles, the central truth of whose preaching was the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. They were severe and vindictive in their judgments, while the administration of the Pharisees was of a more conservative and humane character.—Abbott.

"The angel of the Lord." The words spoken by him place their deliverance outside the circle of earthquakes, or any natural phenomenon. It was complete; they need apprehend no obstacle or restraint; they were to teach, not in any obscure corner, but in the temple.—Cook. The frequency of angelic interference in the early days of the church is remarkable. In this book of the Acts the word angel occurs twenty times.—Wordsworth. Six distinct works of angels are related (chaps. 5:19; 8:26; 10:3; 12:7, 23; 27:23).—Schaff. Thus Christ overrules the designs of the Sadducees, who denied the existence of angels, and makes the Sadducees themselves to be the means of showing to the world that his angels are ministering spirits, encamping about his church.—Wordsworth.

"Go, ... speak in the temple." There was to be no attempt made to conceal their escape. They were to go back to the same place where their most frequent teachings had been given before, and they were to continue the same teaching. They are not directed to appeal to the multitude for sympathy, nor to try and excite any feeling against those who had arrested them.—Cambridge Bible. There is no respect of persons here, no pandering to rank and power. The true enfranchisement of the common people lies in the Gospel of Christ. Would that the struggling, bleeding nations could see it! If the Son make them free, they shall be free indeed.—Arnot. Recoveries from sickness, releases out of trouble, are granted us, not that we may enjoy the comforts of our life, but that God may be honored with the services of our life.—Henry.

"But the high priest came." The ordinary session chamber for the Sanhedrim was on the south side of the temple, at some considerable distance from Solomon's Porch, where the apostles no doubt were speaking to the people.—Schaff.

"They doubted of them." The original is stronger: per plexed, at their wits' end. This is the first symptom of anything like awe, or apprehension of the supernatural. —Cook. They were at a loss about what was said, and did not know what step to take next. It is worthy of notice that when the apostles are brought before them in the end, the magistrates avoid all questions about how they had been released. They clearly wished to have no more testimony to the supernatural powers which had been so often manifested in connection with Jesus and his followers.—Cambridge Bible.

"For they feared the people." One of the many indications in the New Testament that Christ and his truth were attractive to the common people, and that the opposition was instigated and persecution inaugurated by interested rulers. Men are not by nature wholly averse to the truth; they are attracted by it, and are opposed to it only as it opposes their self-interest or their pride.—Abbott. And perhaps the "signs" most wonderful and powerful with the people were the signs of their Christlike spirit,—their utterly unselfish lives and ministry,—the avowed purpose of their preaching as well as the manifest ultimate object of their miracles, to save the lost soul! In palpable contrast to these "signs and wonders" of Christlike spirit and living, there had ever been presented before their eyes the selfish greed and rapacity, the open hypocrisy, and especially the utter lack of sympathy or eare for others, which charaeterized the priests and rulers of that day above any other time even in Jewish history. Multitudes, therefore, of the common people heard these true-hearted apostles, also, gladly!—Glentworth Butler.

"In this name." Observe that the priests do not speak the name of Jesus (no doubt uttering with fierce contempt the words, "this name," "your doctrine," "this man's blood"—Schaff.) Was this a superstitious dread, an unconscious feeling that it might be the Messiah whom they had put to death? or merely the reluctance of murderers to speak directly of their victim? or simply a sign of their contempt? Contrast Peter's glorying in the name of Jesus Christ (vers. 30, 31).—Abbott.

"We ought to obey God rather than men." Freedom of conscience—the subjection of a human spirit to God, and its emancipation therefore from all inferior control—is deposited here in the ground as a living seed. Thence it has sprung and spread; thence it will spring and spread until all superstition and tyranny shall be swept away.—Arnot.

"The God of our fathers raised up Jesus." Next Peter reasserts the offensive doctrine of the resurrection of Jesus, carefully naming him whom they would not name. Still speaking as himself a Jew and to them as Jews, he declares that their God had "raised up Jesus," and unqualifiedly to their faces reaffirms the charge that they had slain him by crucifixion.—Butler. What sublime boldness! It seems as if their relations were somehow shifted. The apostles are on trial before the Supreme Court of the Jews. But suddenly the position of the parties is reversed; the apostles are the judges and accusers, and the members of the court sit cowering and overwhelmed in the place of the guilty under their charges and statements.—Monday Club Sermons.

"To give repentance." The object of the exaltation. The death, resurrection, ascension and ever-living intercession are all part of one atoning work, having all the one object,—the redemption of men from sin. To give repentance is not merely to give an opportunity to exercise it, i. e., to afford pardon to the repentant, but to impart the disposition to repentance. Both repentance and faith are represented in the New Testament as gifts of God that all may be from him (John 1:16; 16:7, 8; Acts 3:16; Rom. 2:4; Eph. 2:8).—Abbott.

"And so is also the Holy Ghost." The Holy Ghost was a witness to the truth of redemption, both by the special gifts conferred upon the apostles and early disciples.—gifts of tongues, miracles, etc. (chap. 2:1–7; 10:45; 19:6; Mark 16:20); and by the internal witness afforded to the believer in his own experience (Rom. 8:16; Gal. 4:6; 1 John 3:24). Both kinds of testimony are included here; and on the three kinds of evidence here referred to, Christianity rests: (1) historical and human, the testimony of credible witnesses to the life, character, miracles, death and resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth; (2) divine and external, the evidence afforded by moral and spiritual changes in individuals and the community, accounted for only by the presence of God's spirit; (3) divine and internal, the inward realization of the Spirit of God in the heart of the believer. Observe the extent of the promise here, agreeing with the language of chap. 2:39; 3:25, etc. —Abbott.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

How many instances can you find, in the New Testament, of an apostle being imprisoned by the Jewish council? How many times, at the hands of other rulers? Of what apostle is the martyrdom mentioned in the New Testament? Of what apostle, the banishment? What apostle escaped the lion's mouth at his first defense before the Roman emperor? Can you find out who this "lion" was? What Old Testament prophet was delivered by an angel when imprisoned with the lions? On what occasion did the council let Christ alone because they feared the people?—Scholars Quarterly.

There is nothing in the voice of Masonry with its triangles, circles, compasses, aprons, squares, etc., which is anything like the voice of the True Shepherd. He who mistakes one for the other cannot be much of a Christian.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1883.

OUR FIRST WASHINGTON LETTER is commended to the careful attention of the readers of this number. Last week Gen. Phelps gave an account of the chartering, in April, 1864, of the "Masonic Hall Association," which owns and runs the building where the revel described by Mr. Bowes was held. Every voter in the United States was represeuted in the chartering of that temple of revelry, idolatry and lust. The people of the United States are responsible for what is done in that temple, as we were responsible for the slave trade when Frauklin and Armfield's slave-prison was licensed by Congress at four huudred dollars a year in the same city. Read and re-read Mr. Bowe's description of this other American institution.

HOBBIES! HOBBIES!

A "hobby" is a little horse which a man is fond of riding; hence any favorite theme or object. A clergyman in New York had preached three years in a pulpit and spoke but once on secret societies. The Masons made an outcry, and his good deacon complained that his pastor was a hobbyist. No man ever opposed a popular evil but he was accused of "hobbyism." In abolition times, while the slave-holders in Congress and the press generally were ridiculing, brow-beating and sneering at the Abolitiouists, a minister who once in a year spoke against slavery was "riding a hobby," and this senseless and insulting charge is made by men who neither pray for reform, iu secret or in public, or speak one word which disturbs the existing evil, till it would be more unpopular to be silent than to speak, while the men whom they stupidly sneer at and assail are generally as much in favor of one sound reform as another, meekly bear their part in life's conflict and scorn to profit by the self-denial of their brethren, and live, like butcher's dogs in the shambles, on meat which others catch and kill and dress.

A brother whose whole life had beeu devoted to Christ for revivals, for the Sabbath, for Abolitionism, and for temperance, was called a "hobbyist." "Brethren," was his reply, "I believe in my ministry I have had about fifty or a hundred "hobbies," and the smallest horse of them all was big enough for either of you to ride."

IOWA PROHIBITION.

The convention called to meet at Des Moines on the 7th of February brought out representatives from seventy-three counties in spite of storm and cold. The politicians officered the convention and packed the committees. The majority report recommeuded that nothing be done till 1886, when the people could again vote on a prohititory amendment, to be followed by legislation in 1888. A minority report demanded action forthwith by calling an extra session of the legislature, submitting the amendment again to popular vote, and prohibitory legislation without waiting to repass the amendment, which has failed through the fraud or stupidity of clerks and courts.

After able and earnest speeches from men, a lady in the gallery, Mrs. Aldrich, asked to be heard. Her clear voice filled the house, and her eloquence electrified it. The audience sent up cheer after cheer, aud the miuority report was carried by 401 to 243. In the National Prohibition Convention at Chicago, the Iowa delegation, led by J. B. Grinnell, stood aloof from the convention, putting the Republican party above prohibition. The same gentleman in the Triennial Cougregational Convention went strong for educating young Freemasons for Congregational pulpits. Conscientious prohibitionists will fiud, if they have not fouud already, that secret lodge-men are the marplots of the temperance and every other moral reform. While the Good Templar lodges are recognized by it, prohibition stands on feet "part iron and part of clay."

ISN'T IT AMAZING?

Prof. Claudio Jannet utters the clear statement that "Freemasonry throughout Europe has obtained the singular and distinguished privilege of perfect exemption from examination." Everything else with which the people have to do, or which has to do with the people, is scrutinized, studied, tested and tried, but this singular power, which yet till the earth is filled and the skies are darkened with it. How perfectly it lies hid in Kansas to-day! And yet one would think a secret lodge system, including the most astute, selfish and aspiring men in the whole population, and whose secret lodge-rooms are as universal and more numerous than blacksmith-shops, would be suspected as the cause of every violent, unexpected popular change and reverse, such as we now see iu Iowa and Kansas. But in fact everything else is scrutinized first, and when writers come to the lodge system they put their fingers on their lips and their pens behiud their ears. Are there any other dens and holes of secrecy but the lodge-rooms? Suppose the brewers and distillers wished to send money through Kansas, even to the back counties, and beyond, where no counties are yet organized, where would the brewers' and distillers' agents meet but in the inner sanctuary of the lodge-rooms, closed even to their own members? Where would they find agents, drilled and sworn to secrecy, like the perpetual triumvirate which governs each local lodge? Charles Francis Adams, in his powerful preface to his father's volume of "Letters," says: "A more perfect ageut for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church or state could scarcely have been conceived." It is the only such "agent," organized and spread throughout Iowa and Kansas, and yet you may scarch even the Signal, the best and bravest of all the prohibition papers, in vain for a single allusion to the lodge as possibly having anything to do with the "Braddock defeats" of temperance in those two States. Is'nt it amazing? Are women turned cowards? They who stood and faced the savage yells of the mob of Christ's crucifiers, and dared to give funeral honors to his corpse! St. John has not been inside of a Masonic lodge for fourteen years. How can he and men like him know what schemes are concocted and what consultations are held there under their brandy-drinking "Grand Commander" Pike?

"Spreads undivided, operates unspent,"

SYSTEMATIC TRAINING IN THE LODGE SYSTEM.

The Freemasons learned a lesson in the struggle of the Morgan era. They found when the test hour came that the most stringent oaths failed to bind men to "conceal murder and treason." In lesser crimes they might be trusted, but where the "honor" of the fraternity was most in danger oaths were found inadequate unless the conscience was corrupted by habitual evasion and deceit. The voluntary surrender of 1,500 lodge charters and the secession of 50,000 members alarmed the unrepentent few who remained. It was a stubborn fact, frought with the direst consequences to the future of their cherished schemes. They knew the frequent occurrence of such "stampedes" among their members and the discussions sure to follow would insure the speedy dissolution of the whole order. Means must be devised adequate to stifle the murdered "perjurers" cry and cover his blood, as well as all other crimes "uot accepted" in the third degree, or they could never rebuild the walls and set up the gates of the citadel in strength sufficient to withstand the cyclone of public indignation.

To compass their end they inaugurated a regular system, beginning with the boy when easily impressed and passing him through a course of training until by easy stages he reaches the "iron cage," and enters to return no more. Conscience, wife, mother and sister are excluded, and amid gloom and ghostly surroundings he is told of the fate of the man found "peeping," confronted with skull bones, bloody daggers, traiued in the use of the sword. He becomes familiar with implements of death and skilled in their usc.

By this device the child acquires the habit of concealing his actions from his fellows and often from his parents, and as he grows in knowledge he increases in cunning until he becomes adroit in concealment aud unscrupulous often in the means of doing it. The habit acquired in childhood "grows with his growth and strengthens with his strength," till at length his better nature is so vitiated that he really believes that to keep secrets is the cardinal virtue, aud to disclose them, however senseless and wicked, is infamous perjury, and acting from this impression he is ready to inflict any penalty upon those who divulge even the bloody deeds of the secret cabals. A generation has grown up under the influence of this system and we are reaping the harvest in our courts aud in the perversion of justice wherever the ripened fruits appear.

Parents who allow their children to enter the minor secret lodges, under whatever plausible pretext, should not be surprised to find them deceitful and treacherous to all but their comrades. They are put under the tuition of experts in deception, who have devised a system by which to mold their minds for a purpose, and if in the juvenile and intermediate grades they prove adepts in copying the example of their teachers they will be advanced and intrusted with the secrets of those who do not except murder and treason from the catalogue of crimes which they swear in the most solemn forms to conceal and never reveal. It is a sad sight to witness a company of bright, intelligent boys, who should be taught to act and speak with the utmost frankness, packed into one of these juvenile cliques, and there given a sacred "pass word" and drilled in a silly routine of ceremonies, all to promote temperance or some good cause, professedly, but really to train them to "ever conceal and never reveal" secrets, and those who stand the test and develop into experts in cunning craft will be passed to the higher grades, where the law of concealment covers every crime in the callender. Beware of the minor secret orders.

—Bro. Roberts, founder of the Free Methodist denomination seems to us needlessly sensitive in his letter elsewhere. Bro. Hinman, whom he quotes, is incapable of taking unfair and undue advantages of any one. Our lecturers and agents with general uniformity say that whenever they, in their travels, find a Free Methodist family they find a welcome and a home.

—The monthly meeting of the Chicago Christian Association was held on Tuesday evening of last week at the N. C. A. office. The meeting was made interesting by the reports of Bro. Wm. Fenton, late of Minnesota and of the Band of Hope in charge of Mrs. Cook. The latter numbers 47 and in its instructions unites lessons on temperance and opposition to the secret orders.

—Bro. Fenton has been for several weeks laboring with great self-denial, dilligence and success in this city in a private way. He is visiting the colleges, seminaries, public offices and other institutions of public resort. At the five medical schools he was received cordially and his assortment of tracts and pamphlets were in great demand. In serious and disheartening contrast was the greeting at the theological seminaries, where he was almost avoided, as if he bore about a contagion. This wariness was all the more noticeable, since the professors of some of our medical colleges are the leaders in the higher degrees of Freemasonry, and it is supposed, especially by the humble Christians whose gifts have built and endowed the seminaries, that they are a kind of arcanum of Christian truth were those who are engaged in labor for the salvation of men are peculiarly welcome. The fact is, however, that these institutions are, asa rule, shamefully subservient to a man-fearing spirit, and avoid unpopularity as they would the small-pox.

—A friend asks why Thurlow Weed was called the "American Warwick." The reason is found in the following item of history: "Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick, born in 1428, was a man of great abilities and wealth, which with a high personal character and extended and influential family connections made him the favorite of the people and the mightiest English noble of the time. He was the most prominent figure in the Wars of the Roses and his power and valor elevated the house of York to the throne in the person of Edward IV. Afterward Edward having estranged himself, Warwick united his interests with Margaret of Anjou, wife of the deposed King Henry VI. and restored that monarch in 1470. But the next year he was with his brother, Duke of Clarence, defeated and slain in battle with Edward. Because of his great influence in England Warwick was called "the King-maker." The title was applied to Thurlow Weed because of his wonderful success in securing the election of candidates whom he favored.

—The New York Tribune once described a Chinese funeral under the heading, "Two Rcligions at one Funeral." The dead Chinaman was a member of a mission school and had accepted Christ instead of the superstitions and idolatry of his native land. Several Christian gentlemen made appropriate remarks during the services, but at the grave some of the countrymen of the dead took advantage of the conclusion of the Christian ceremony to introduce something like the following:

"When a mound of earth han been piled up Quong Tong suddenly opened a package he was carrying under his arm, the contents of which appeared on first sight to be Japanese fans and razor strops. He and two of his companions then threw themselves upon their knees and a curious ceremony began. An ordinary white candle and several brown colored rods of frankincense enveloped in red paper were lit, and when they were fairly burning were stuck into the earth at the foot of the grave. Then several small red wax candles with wooden holders were held to the flame and also stuck into the sod. Soon the odor of incense was noticeable, and the men began murmuring monosyllables among themselves. It was understood that they proposed to drive away the evil spirit. Finally, the remainder of the package—consisting of about a hundred large and small polygons of paper of curious characters, was set on fire at the foot of the grave. When the men had burnt all there was to burn, they rose and entered into a lively conversation with their companions."

The Tribune makes this performance an occasion of sneering at the character of converted Chinamen; but we can point the great journal to a more striking lesson. The frequent funeral performances of the lodge are as senseless and as pagan, as these ridicnled rites of the Chinese. Let them be viewed from whatever side, in their origin, their symbolism, their apparent meaning, their pretended efficacy, or their religious character, the rites of the Confucian, all things considered, will not snffer in the comparison. Now let the New York Tribune and all other editors call things by their right names and when, after a Christian prayer and sermon the lodge mnmmery is introduced, let it be placarded everywhere as "Two Religions at one Funeral," and, moreover, let the Christian character of the men who mutter through the lodge rites be called in question and then we shall begin to have some other things to say on this matter.

ELDER A. WAIT.

During the forenoon of Friday, Feb. 16th, Rev. Archibald Wait died at the residence of his son, W. W. Wait, 124 Ashland Ave., Chicago, in the 86th year of his age.

Elder Wait was born in Adamsville, Washington Co., N. Y., May 9th, 1797. His father's name was Benjamin Wait, son of the Rev. Wm. Wait, a Baptist minister, orginally from Rhode Island. His mother's name was Anu Waldo. His educational advantages in early life were extremely limited—only the meager sources of knowledge afforded by the common district schools of those early times. He was eminently a self-made man.

In Dec., 1817, he nnited with the Baptist church at Throopsville, N. Y. Shortly after the conviction fastened itself upon his mind that he should enter the ministry. Feeling unable and unprepared to preach, he fought against the conviction, until, as he stated it, he found his health impaired and giving away nnder his distress of mind, and not until then did he surrender and purpose, if it was God's will, he would henceforth preach Christ and him crucified for the salvation of a lost world. He was ordained for the ministry in July, 1822, in the town of Augusta, Canada West. After four years of pastoral labor he returned to his native town, and shortly after became pastor of the Baptist church at Hebron, Washington Co., N. Y. Three years after removed to Rupert, Vt., and during a pastorate of four years in that place, he states that they enjoyed an almost uninterrupted season of revival work. As the result of special or "protracted" revival meetings there in the year 1831, he baptized about one hundred and thirty converts.

From this time forward for a period of ten years or more, he labored as an evangelist, holding series of religious meetings all over that region of country, and in all of them God's Spirit was poured out in large measnre, and many believed and were baptized.

At Hartford N. Y. he baptized 118 converts, at Hebron 100 and estimates that in the years from 1831 to 1843, during the period in which he has engaged as an evangelist, there were hopefully converted and added to the different churches where he labored about 1500 persons.

He closed his last regular pastorate at Hinesburgh, Vt. in 1858, in which year he came to Chicago.

During all the years in which he was thus actively laboring for the Master, he was also, from their inception, an earnest champion of the anti-slavery cause, and that of temperance, and thongh all that mementous period of our country's history, from 1830 to 1860 he made his influence felt for the great cause of human rights, and dnring all the long conflict was fully abrest of the great movement that finally led to the overthrow of the slaveholding power. At the beginning of the agitation of this question, his own and one other vote, constituted the strength of the anti-slavery party of his voting district for several years. Ofteu has the writer heard him express himself as not expecting to live to see the day when the gigantic evil of slavery in the United States would be overthrown, but that he had an abiding faith it would surely go down—and with sad forebodings that it would have to go down with the shedding of blood.

In the later years of his life he has been led to join in the opposition to secret societies, it being his earnest conviction, as expressed in the language of his cotemporary and co-worker, the late Dr. Colver, that Masonry and all oath-bound secret orders were "moral evils, political evils and impositions upon the world."

Who can doubt that now, as of old, God raises up men to engage in conflicts with the powers of evil, and endows them with peculiar gifts and traits of character required for the special times and work to which they are called.

And so we believe of the brave old man who now, wearied and worn with the toils and buffettings of a long life, has been called to his rest—gathered as a shock of corn fully ripe—aud a voice is heard from heaven again, saying, "Write, Blessed are the dead who die iu the Lord, from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

A large audience gathered on Sabbath afternoon at the house of W. W. Wait, son of the late Elder A. Wait, filling every available foot of space. The services, conducted by Elder W. Lawreuce, paster of the Second Baptist church began promptly at 1 o'clock. The speaker was very happy in his illustratious, aud faithful in giving the record of Father Wait's life and labors. He spoke of his decided opposition to slavery, and "all oath-bound secret societies" as proof of his uncompromisiug integrity to his convictions, and eommended his example as worthy of imitation. The remains were accompanied to Gracewood cemetery by numerous friends, and with brief and appropriate remarks and a prayer they were committed to their final resting place to await that call which shall assemble the "Blessed dead who die in the Lord."

most capacity. After the lecture many expressed their digust toward all secret societies, and gave me many words of encouragement.

My next work was in Richland village in the Cambellite church. Prof. S. was called to the chair. He gave a short but very interesting speech, after which he introduced me to the audience, and I spoke for an hour and a half on the "Effect of secret societies on the church and courts." One Mason lost his jewel and cried, "You are a liar." I proved by the Monitor that I was not a liar, but had told the truth and proved it. I remarked that Masons were in the habit not only of calling Antimasons liars, but would sometimes dispute each other, as I had a letter in my possession from T. S. Parvin, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Iowa, saying that Rob Morris, in his enthusiasm for Masonry, is led away from the strict line of truth. A Mason sprang to his feet saying he wonld give five dollars to see that letter. I called him forward and put the letter in Prof. Stalker's hands, and he was permitted to read it, after which he turned and made his way back to his seat without paying his five dollars. Many shouted, "Where is that five dollars?" Others said, "I wonld work by the day to get the money to pay it." The Mason's name was Israel, and it was evident that he felt as if he was a member of one of the lost tribes.

I lectured next evening in same place. It was very cold, yet the congregation was large, some coming for five miles, and regretted that the lecture shonld close, and promised in the near future to return and work the degrees. I returned to the home of Brother Aaron Stalker. He put ten dollars in my hand, saying it went free as any ten dollars he had ever paid. Prof. Stalker gave me five dollars. I received in all $22.40. The next day Prof. S. took me back to Bro. Johnston's throngh the snow drifts. Here I bid farewell to Prof. S., feeling thankful that there is one man in onr State University who is not afraid to investigate secret societies.

Early Monday morning Bro. Johnston carried me to Pleasant Plains, where I took the train for Fairfield. Thomas Charles met me at the station and conducted me to the home of Bro. Geo. Heaton, a seceded Mason. Here I was made more than welcome; found a very genial companion in Bro. Heaton. In the evening I spoke in the hall, which was well filled. Found a very interesting revival in progress in the Presbyterian church, aud it was thonght best by the brethren to have the lectures put over so the students from the college could attend. The lectures were deferred. I received $6.35 at Fairfield. Dr. W. P. Norris and Dr. J. N. Norris were present with a large delegation from Birmingham. After the lecture I rode to Birmingham; found Dr. J. N. Norris in quite poor health, yet strong in the faith that our reform was making swift progress in Iowa. Here I spent a very pleasant week, visiting old friends, preaching and lecturing on reform. I made my home with Dr. Norris while in Birmingham, and the rich counsel of him and his dear family gave me new courage. Dr. W. P. was very busy making professional visits, and I almost wished his Antimasonic principles might hurt his profession long enough for me to visit him, but if a Mason or jack thinks he is in danger of being removed to the grand lodge, these are the doctors sent for to ask the grim master for a stay of proceedings. O that we could see professional men trusting God and speaking their sentiments everywhere! I found Esq. Wilson in poor health, yet anxious that the work of reform may progress. May God restore him to health is my prayer. Bro. Calhoon and his excellent wife, with a score of others, are working hard for the reform. Birmingham has a local anti-secret association. Their monthly meetings are very interesting. Nothing was said about money in the meetings, but $25.00 was paid me for my work.

From Birmingham I went to Washington, county-seat of Washington county, Feb. 1st aud 2nd. I found a home with R. P. McConaughy. At 4 P. M. I met the committee of arrangements in Dr. Crawford's parlor, which consisted of Rev. Boyd of the First U. P. church, Rev. Wylie of the Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. Tate of the U. P. church, Rev. Fisher of Seeceder church, Dr. Crawford, Dr. McLaughlin, Dr. McClelland, Geo. Brokaw, Alex. Knox, and R. P. McConaughy. In the evening we met in Music Hall. Rev. Boyd was called to the chair. Rev. Fisher led in devotional exercises, after which the chairman stated the object of the meeting, and I spoke for an hour and thirty minutes, to all appearance with good effect. At the close the chairman announced a meeting for 2 P. M. the next day. Next day the wind was blowing and snow was falling, and everything looked forbidding, bnt we met in Music Hall. The congregation was larger than we had anticipated. Rev. Wylie conducted devotional exercises, after which I spoke for an hour and forty five minutes. After the lecture Dr. McClelland invited me to his home, and Rev. Boyd and wife, and several others whose names are not familiar, were also his guests. The prospects of our success in this reform were discnssed. The verdict was, I think, that truth would triumph.

In the evening the hall was well filled. Rev. Boyd conducted devotional exercises, after which I spoke for one hour and forty-five minutes. The lectures seemed to be well received. I tarried over night with Bro. Brokaw, expecting to go to Wayne the next day, but the storm had blocked the railroad, and I turned homeward to rest a few days, after which I intend to fill some of the many calls for work.

Dr. Brown, of Columbus City, was to follow me on Sabbath with a sermon in the First U. P. church at Washington, snbject: "Why does the U. P. church refuse to receive members of secret societies into the church." Nothing was said in public about money, yet $31.00 was paid me to help on the work. I expect in the near future to return to Washington and work the degrees. I have been called on to work the degrees but three times since our State meeting. I am receiving calls almost every week from other States. I would say to the friends of reform, I cannot respond to your calls. I am pledged to confine my work to Iowa. Praise God and take courage, brethren; the work is prospering in your State.

FROM WHITLEY COUNTY, INDIANA.

COLUMBIA CITY, Ind., Feb. 14 1883.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS:—I feel it my duty to let you know that Bro. S. L. Cook has delivered in our schoolhouse two lectures, in the evenings on the 9, and 10. He ably explained and laid open to us the wickedness of the lodge system, or the principle of Freemasonry. If only all the people would nse their good common sense the light of the gospel would be sufficient to convince them. Bnt where a knowledge of divine truth is lacking there seems a failnre of sound judgement and the wicked institutions readily ensnare such men. If the doctrine of Christ is prayerfully studied and obeyed, there is no danger of falling into the trap of these wicked institutions, because the Lord Jesus is our gnardian. While this is true, we expect our ministers of Christ to be foremost, faultless, especially our anti-lecturers. Every such brother in the Lord should cleanse himself from all filthiness of the flesh, for it gives occasion to fault-finders and an excuse to them that do not want to give a support to the cause of Christ; perhaps otherwise they might be convinced of their duty.

Great carelessness npon the subject of secrecy has been manifested in our vicinity, and it has been a burden on my mind to see so many souls snatched away from Christ and entangled with the lodges of Satanic power. But brethren, who are directed by the Lord Jesus Christ only, and subject to God's own appointed way, lead souls to Christ in whom is joy and peace and life everlasting. Great is their reward in heaven. Who would not, if a true child of God, suffer for it a little season?

How is it? is the man of sin yet revealed? and shall we look soon for the brightness of the coming of the Lord to destroy the man of sin? O Lord cleanse and purify thy churches from the polluted man of sin and let the righteousness of Christ prevail.

Yours in the love of Christ,

JOHN SHUH.

ARE YOU COMING TO CHICAGO?—If you have business in the city or if you have occasion to pass through, it will repay you to call at headquarters, see what is being done, and get a supply of tracts, look over our list of publications; order such as you need and give us a word of admonition or encouragement as you may think appropriate. Quite a number of friends from the country and some from the city have dropped in to gladden us by their presence. We appreciate such calls and hope they will in future be more frequent. LONGING FOR GOD.

PSALM 42: 1.

I thirst for a sense of Thy presence with me,
I long for assurance of mercy and love.
O Father, from sin I am fain to be free—
I would serve Thee with joy like thy children above.

So often I wander, so often am cold,
So seldom attain unto resting in thee!
Yet low at thy footstool I bend and am bold,
O Father in Heaven be gracious to me.

No peace would I crave but the peace that doth flow
Like a river full-tided, and straight from Thy throne:
No comfort, no rapture, no blessing would know,
Except the rich grace Thou dost give to thine own.

O Father, the earth-springs grow dry by the way,
I am parched as I walk in the desert's fierce glare;
I would drink from the fountain; I find it to-day
At the Mercy-Seat gushing—O give it me there.

Give strength for the conflict, give courage and zeal,
Give token, my King, that Thou takest my love,
And help me, through change and through trouble to feel
That change never touches my Father above.

I thirst for a sense of Thy presence to-day—
Thy presence unclouded, Thy nearness to me.
O Father be with me through all the long way,
Till at last I am sent for to go home to Thee.—Selected.

GRACE FOR SERVICE.

If ever we needed to come to the throne of grace, we need it now. Was there ever such a time of backsliding, of infidelity, of lawlessness? God promised by Jeremiah that if his people would call on him he would show them great and mighty things which they knew not. Newcastle would look with contempt on a millionaire who lived on one shilling a day. God has an unlimited supply of grace at our command.

I was out last spring, on the plains of Arizona, and found a man laboring among the Indians. He had been making money at Chicago, but the Spirit came on him; he gave up his business, and went and lived amongst these wild men. He soon got control over them by the gospel, and they reverenced him. Their chief would go on the flat roof of his dwelling and shout to the people, "Come and get strength!" That was his way of calling them to meeting. Strength! how we need it! Come and get it. Many a man goes spiritually poor when he might be rich beyond measure. One of Washington's old soldiers was begging in the street. Some one observed a little bag round his neck, and it was found to contain a certificate insuring him a pension of eight dollars a month—enough to keep him comfortable in those days. Many Christians are like that, requesting the prayers of others when they have the riches of heaven at their own command.

In China, if a man becomes a Christian, he is not obliged to pay taxes to the heathen gods. When the collector comes, and he claims exemption, he is told to preach to prove his Christianity. If he can't preach he has to pay. How many english proffessing Christians could prove their Christianity by preaching? Wesley's motto was, "All at it; always at it."

I am told that if God were to cut off all the supplies of food and raiment in the world, there would not be enough to last us more than two months. He is blessing us day by day, and if he stopped our spiritual supplies our souls would die in less than two months.

God does not promise all we want, but all we need. My boy wanted a gun, but he needed grace to keep his temper more than a gun. There is nothing we need to equip us for God's service that he will not give us liberally without upbraiding. He is able to make all grace abound toward us, that we, having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work.

In the old slave days the masters would not let their slaves be taught to read, for they knew that if they learned what liberty was they would not be able to keep them. Satan knows if we read the bible he will not be able to keep us in his slavery.

Grace does not always take away our trials, but it enables us to bear them. Whatever Paul's thorn in the flesh was—sore eyes, contempitible speech, or anything else—he gave up asking to have it taken away, and rather gloried in his infinities, that the power of Christ might rest upon him. If I could see John Bunyan on the hill tops of heaven, I should hear him praising God for Bedford Gaol. John would be thanking Him for Patmos, where he saw his visions of things to come; Paul for his prison at Rome, where he wrote his Epistles, which have been feeding souls for eighten hundred years.

If you have not grace enough to raise you above the cares and perplexities of this life, how can you help others? Some are like rays of the sun, doing good all the time, enough for themselves, and something over for others.

We should be making progress. Rowland Hill used to say that some Christians were like children on rocking-horses; the motion was pleasant, but they made no progress. But if we do not go forward, we must go backward—there is no standing still. "The path of the just is as the shining light shining more and more unto the perfect day."

Two people in Scotland used in the meetings to get into a place where they could see the faces of the congregation. When they saw any who seemed touched by the preaching, they marked them, and got to the door before the rest, so that they could lead the anxious ones to the inquiry room. Those two workers did more than all the rest of the congregation put together.

Most of us are in the meridian of life and in good health. God will never be more willing to save Newcastle than he is now. If you only sit in your pews you will do no good. Let us take hold all together. Take your bibles when you go to the circus, and show anxious souls the way of life and peace. I thank God I came to Newcastle eight years ago, and I thank him I have come again. A man has told me here that his aunt had prayed for him, and begged him to go and hear the gospel. At first he refused, but he went, and was saved; and for eight years has been a worker, seeking other souls. Every day, one, two, half a dozen, come to thank me for having been the means of their salvation. Is anything to be compared with work for God? Think of the society of saints up there! Let us seek his glory in the salvation of our fellowmen.—D. L. Moody.

DID PRIESTS INVENT THE BIBLE?

If the Bible is a deception and a delusion it can best be exposed by fair argument and honest investigation. Of what earthly use is it for a sceptic to say that the Bible was invented by a pack of priests, when, if we open its pages we find that under the law of Moses no priest was allowed to hold landed property in the land of Israel with the exception of a house and garden spot? Talk about priests making such a law as that! Why, if the priests had made the law they would have been sure to have their full share of the land, and quite likely a double portion. In fact wherever priests bear rule they contrive to absorb the land. And what with penances, and confessions, and purgatory, and damnation, it has repeatedly been found that nothing but a revolution could give back to the people the lands of which the priests had despoiled them; and it has been found needful in some cases to pass laws making all bequests of lands to priests illegal, and even to make all bequests to charities null and void if made within a brief period of the death of the giver. And yet there was a law which selected the priestly tribe of Levi from all the rest and forbade them to possess lands and left them dependent for their support on the gardens and such tithes and offerings as the people voluntarily brought; for the priests had no earthly means of enforcing the collection of a penny of their revenue. And infidels say that priests made such a law as that to impose upon the people. As well believe the bully's story, that the man with whom he had been fighting bit off his own nose! And yet infidels are capable of believing almost anything but the Bible.—From "Friendly Hints to Candid Enquirers."

POWER OF PRAYER.

H. O. Pratt was formerly a lawyer with an extensive practice in Ohio, a popular political orator, and for two terms a member of Congress from Iowa. He told a Methodist ministers' convention the other day that until just before his conversion he was not at all in sympathy with the teachings of the Bible, and tried hard to make himself a confirmed skeptic. Nothing occurred in his experience while in Congress to direct his mind particularly to religion, and he was not inside of a church during a whole winter in Washington; but that was the very time when the subject of his personal salvation came into his mind, and he could not drive it away. He would often leave his seat in the House of Representatives, he said, and walk the streets to gain relief, but all to no purpose. On his return home he learned that there had been considerable religious interest in town, and that his wife and another Christian woman had unitedly prayed daily for several weeks for his conversion. His experience in Washington was no longer a mystery to him, and from that moment he believed in the efficacy of prayer. He abandoned law, turned his back upon his political prospects, and entered the ministry. —Church and Home.

LITTLE THINGS.

Little labors rightly done
Little battles bravely won,
Little masteries achieved,
Little wants with care relieved,
Little words in love expressed,
Little wrongs at once confessed,
Little favors kindly done,
Little toils thou didst not shun,
Little graces meekly worn,
Little lights with patience borne—
These shall crown the pillowed head,
Holy light upon thee shed;
These are treasures that shall rise
Far beyond the smiling skies.—Selected.

LIFE AMONG THE INDIANS IN FROSTLAND.

One evening, not long ago, I went to hear a missionary who has been living in British America among the Indians, speak about his work. I was so much interested in what he said that I wanted all the boys and girls who read this paper to have the same pleasure that I had.

British America cannot be a very sociable place to live in. This missionary said that the houses in his parish were often five hundred miles apart. It was hard work for him to make his calls. How do you suppose he did it? In winter he had to walk! A long journey and not a very pleasant one, when the thermometer was fifty degrees below zero, as it not unfrequently is so far north of us. Two Indians always went with the missionary on his journeys. The clothes, provisions, and all such things are done up in bundles and tied on a long sled. They have to be tied to the sled firmly, for it often tips over in going through drifts of snow, and a sorry time the travelers would have if they should lose their blankets or food. One Indian walks first, to lead the way. He is followed by the dogs, drawing the sled. Then comes the other Indian ready to set the sled straight when it is overturned, and last of all comes the missionary himself. All three wear immense snow shoes; and funny-looking objects they must be, wrapped well in fur from head to foot, with these strange, flat things fastened to their feet.

If it snows, and the wind is blowing, it is difficult to go far. One thing never happens to the missionary on these journeys—he never loses his way. The Indians always know where they are, and go direct to their destination. We can hardly understand how they know the way over the great snow-plains, where everything would look alike to us. But what do they all do at night? The faithful Indians manage to reach some place where there are fir trees growing. Here they stop and dig a square hole, several feet deep, in the snow. Branches of evergreen make them a bed and a fire, too, and down in this hole they sleep, if they can keep warm enough to do so. This is how the missionary makes his visits in winter; in summer it is much pleasanter. Then the rivers are open and he can take his journey in a birch bark canoe. All day he goes floating down the river, and at night camps on the shore. After the frightful cold and hardships of the winter these summer journeys seem delightful to the much enduring missionary. This good man only receives letters from his home in England three times a year. All the four months between his mails he has not the least idea of what is happening at home or in other parts of the world. When he starts out on his trips, and is gone, sometimes four months and sometimes longer, his family know nothing about him until he comes back again. Supplies of clothes, groceries, etc., are only received once a year, if they are not delayed. In one case of a delay not for three years did they reach those who were suffering for want of them.

On one occasion the missionary needed a coat, but the annual supply did not come. What should he do? In this emergency his wife came to his rescue. She had a thick black shawl with a red border. Off came the border, and, presto! her husband had a nice warm coat.

This is the kind of wives the missionaries have. Brave women they are to endure so patiently the privations incident upon so isolated a life.

"But," as the missionary said—and it was touching to see such a brave and unselfish spirit of self-sacrifice—"if the trials were ten times as many and as hard to bear, who am I that I should not gladly endure them all, in the blessed hope of showing those darkened souls the great love of Jesus?"

Further north than the land of the Indians live a people as much in the darkness of heathenism as they. These are the Esquimaux. They heard of the white man among the Indians, and wanted to see and learn from him. So one summer this brave missionary started north in a canoe to the land of the Esquimaux. It was a long way to travel, for he had to go beyond the Arctic Circle. Very glad and grateful he must have been when he was at his journey's end; for he was the first man to bring the news of salvation through Christ to the polar regions.

There are many strange things to be seen in this far northern land. One of them is the sun. It is red, instead of yellow, and moves round in a ring, never going below the horizon except for a small part of the year. I don't know how it would seem to have no night at all. Rather awkward if, as this good man said he did, we should go to sleep, and, waking, not know whether it was night or day. How do you suppose the Esquimaux received the missionary who had come so long a way to see them? They were eager to hear all he had to tell them, and wanted him to stay with them always. They made him promise to come back again the following year. In return he made them promise faithfully to keep the Lord's day holy. The chief learned the Ten Commandments by heart, so as to be able to teach them to the others when their dear teacher was gone.

With the next summer came the missionary again. He had kept his promise to the Esquimaux, aud wanted to know if they had doue what they had promised.

"Yes," said the chief, "we have kept every Lord's day but one, and then we had had no food for three days. Ou that morning some deer came in sight. We hesitated whether we should kill them or starve. At last we thought we would shoot one arrow, and if a deer fell we would think the Great Spirit could not be very angry with us; but if the arrow killed nothing, then we would starve rather than break our promise to you."

Fortunately for them the first arrow did kill a deer. Think how anxious those poor people must have been to do right when they had almost made up their minds to starve lest they should do wrong.

The missionary showed us a stick which he carried in his pocket. He said that one day he saw this stick hanging round the neck of an old Esquimau. He asked what it was.

"Oh," said the man, "I live far away from the rest of the tribe, and I was afraid I should forget Sunday, so every day I used to cut a notch ou this stick."

You can imagine how touched and pleased the missionary was to hear of such faithfulness. He brought the stick away with him to remember the old Esquimau who did not forget Suuday.

The chief wanted "the white teacher" to bore a hole in his nose, and insisted upon bestowing his own nose ring upon him. The gift of the ring was accepted with pleasure, but the former part of the invitation was declined with thanks.

You will be glad to know that when another missionary came to British America our friend sent him up to these Esquimaux beyond the Arctic Circle, so that now they always have some one to teach them.

Now, I am actually going to end with a moral, but as it is a short one, I hope none of the childreu will skip it, and it might even do some old folks good.

There are many people around us who do not know the love of Christ, and if, by an unselfish spirit and a readiness to do for others, you let people see that you love Jesus, and that he is helpiug you, you will be excellent little home missionaries, which is one of the best things boys and girls can possibly be.—Churchman.

THRILLING DESCRIPTION OF A MINNESOTA STORM.

About 1 o'clock, while we were in a dry goods store, the merchant, who had stepped out for a moment, said to us: "I don't like to drive away my customers, but a blizzard is coming from the west, aud it is coming fast. The telegraph announces that it has reached Morris. That is forty miles froui here, but it is coming at the rate of forty miles an hour, so you have got no time to spare if you are going home to-day."

He rolled up our purchases as he spoke, and appeared in a hurry to get rid of us. When we got outside the store, the first thing that attracted my attention was the fact that of all of the teams in the street when we arrived, not one excepting mine remained. Everybody had scudded for home. Even then I did not hurry. The sun was still shining brightly, with not the suggestion of a storm apparent auywhere. Before we had got a mile from town, I had forgotten all about the storm, and the horses were jogging at their will.

We were still two miles from home when suddenly the sun was obscured, aud the air grew cold aud still in a moment. A darkness of smoke swept over everything. Then I gave the horses the whip in earnest, lashiug them into a run. Away off to the west there appeared to be a leaden wall sweeping towards us. There was a hum in the air. A light breeze sprang up, growing stronger, and in one moment became a gale. The wall came down with a railroad speed, the roar of its approach every moment became louder. From the top of a roll in the prairie we could see our house, and it came pretty near being our last glimpse of it.

No words will ever convey an intelligent idea of the blizzard; of the frightful roar with which it rolls down upou you, the howling and hissing of the wind. If you try to speak, the wiud dashes the syllables from your lips so quickly that you do not hear your own words. In thirty seconds from the time the first suow-flake fell, I could not see my own horses. The atmosphere appeared to be all snow, aud every flake of it apapeared to be in a hurry to get somewhere before the rest should get there. I use the word "flake," but that is wrong. No flake could be distinguished. The whole atmosphere was filled with one big flake that hemmed us in on all sides. Although Mabel's head wasn't a foot from mine, I could not see her features; I could only distinguish her form. I tried to peer downward beside the sleigh and see the track, but I might as well have tried to see the earth beneath a snowbank. I could feel a motion of the sleigh, and knew the horses were still moving. The cold was intense. I tried to ask my wife if she was suffering, but I could not hear my own words.

During the two or three minutes that intervened between the time I saw the storm approaching and the moment it struck us, the horses had run at the top of their speed, so that we were not much over a mile from home. It did not seem possible for the horses to keep the track. No one could live an hour in that storm. The only hope lay in the horses being able to keep the track that was being buried deeper and deeper every instant. It isn't pleasant to sit still and freeze to death. In ten minutes I was chilled through, and felt that I was freezing. The horses were still moving, aud although I could not see them I lashed them with the whip. It seemed hours since the storm had shut us in, and I was just becoming convinced that the horses had got out of the path, and that we were lost on the prairie, when there eame a sudden lull of the fierce wind. The air was full of whirling snow, but I could see objects about me, and it didn't take loug for me to ascertain that we were in the barn, and were safe. I had left the barn doors open in the morning, and the horses had found their way back, I think by instinct, but my neighbors declare it was sheer accident, and say that it wouldn't happen again in a thousand years.

Althongh we had reached the barn, we were not in the house yet. From the barn to the house it is twenty yards, but as far as seeing it was concerned, the house might as well have been the moon. The little woman helped me unharness the horses and put them in their stalls. Then I told her to remain where she was, and made a break for the house. It is difficult for any one to believe that in a blinding storm he cannot go twenty yards in a line sufficiently straight to fiud a house, but try it some time!

Do you see that pump? I stumbled over it. It is twenty feet to the right of the path from the barn to the house. If it hadn't been for that pump I would never again have found house or barn. I knew that the handle of the pump poiuted directly towards the house, and it was uot over ten yards away. I raised the handle and felt for the bearings. I let go the pump handle and plunged towards the house. When I tell you that I ran "smack" against it you will understand that seeing was out of the question. After I got into the house I took a ball of twine and tied one end to the door knob, and succeeded in getting back to the barn, and, by followiug the string, reached the house again. For three days and nights thereafter, neither of us even opened the outer door. When the storm ceased we could not see the barn, for the snow had piled in betweeu the house aud barn so deep that it covered the windows on that side of the house. On the east side of the house, however, there was very little snow. The shovel happened to be in the house, and the little woman and I succeeded in tunneling through to the barn, but we had to carry every shovel of snow taken out of the tunnel through the house and throw it on the east side.—Detroit Free Press.

STEPS.

The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord. Ps. 37:13.

None of his steps shall slide. Ps. 37:31.

Thou numberest my steps. Job 14:16.

He counts all my steps. Job 31:4.

The Lord directeth his steps. Prov. 16:9.

It is not in man to direct his steps. Jer. 10:23.

My steps had well nigh slipped. Thou hast holden by my right hand. Ps. 73:2, 23,

Hold up my goings in Thy path, that my footsteps slip not. Ps. 17:5.

He has left us an example that we should follow his steps. 2 Peter 2:21.—Notes for Bible Study.

The boys of Kingston, New York, all know a certaiu old horse named "Ned," and whenever one of them sees him he is sure to be greeted with "Good-morning!" or "How are you?" Ned is possessed of a great deal of sense, and he has learned many curious tricks. His daily work consists in drawing a cake wagon about the streets. He can understand his master's call when the latter is a quarter of a mile away. Once his owner shouted to him from the other end of the street, and Ned started in a trot. Then the man begau to run, and Ned chased him from street to street, carefully turning the corners, until the man was out of breath. Dnring the chase Ned heard a box of cakes fall out, and he stopped until a by-stander had placed the box iu the wagon again. He nods his head as soon as he hears a boy say, "How are you?" but if the boy calls him "a rascal," he throws back his ears and begins to snap the air with his teeth.

TEMPERANCE.

Cougress will be asked to pass a law giving the people of the District of Columbia local option to license or prohibit the sale of liquor. There are at present seven hundred drinking places in the district.

Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the Woman's National Christiau Temperance Union, has set out on her longest tour as a temperance speaker aud organizer. She left Washington, December 28th, with a route laid dowu for every Southern State, every Western territory, and the Pacific coast.

Daniel Webster understood the nature and tendency of smoking. It is said of him: "Cigars being offered him, he declined, saying that he never smoked; and, after asking the extender of the courtesy if such was his habit, and being answered in the negative, he said: "That's right. I would not advise any young man to spit away his existence."

This is a significant fact: The Beer Brewers' Congress which last year appropriated $75,000 for the anti-temperance work in Kansas, has this year appropriated only $500; Iowa gets $5,000; Michigan, $2,000; Indiana, $3,000. Total, $10,500. This is $64,500 less than was given to one State last year.

The Massachusetts Legislature recently passed a law to suppress and punish adulteration of food and drugs, which went into effect in August. Its inforcement is intrusted to the State Boards of Lunacy, Health, and Charity. All unwholesome vegetables or meat are also interdicted under the new law, which calls an annual appropriation of $3,000 to defray the expenses incurred by its proper enforcement.

A Philadelphia street railway has put a ban on smoking on its cars. It has found there are thirty passengers who do not smoke to one who does, and beside, that to nearly all the thirty the smoke is disagreeable. It has, therefore, wisely decided that there is no good reason why thirty people should be compelled to take into their lungs the smoke out of the filthy mouth of the one smoker, and has therefore prohibited it, even on the rear platforms of its cars.

A rich Swedish philanthropist recently employed two eminent French physicians to test certain theories with regard to the action of alcohol upon animal tissue. Fifteen pigs were treated daily with different kinds of liquor; each pig, however, being confined to one particular tipple. When they had been killed their vital organs were found to be marked with small white spots resembliug ulcers. When the flesh was sent to market it was seized by the police as unfit for human food. It is safe to say that every human being who daily uses alcoholic stimulants becomes diseased in liver, kidneys, stomach or brain. Liquor drinking is the curse of the age; and the aim of all legislative bodies should be to discourage it, and if possible, to stop it altogether.—Demorest Monthly.

THE PIONEER SALOON.

The first harbinger of civilization in all the vast interior betweeu eastern Dakota and the settled country on the Pacific coast is the saloon. It does not follow population; it takes the lead. If there is any reason to suppose that settlers will go into any distant and isolated section a year hence, you will find the whisky seller already on the grouud with his tent or his "shack," patiently waiting for customers. In mining camps, on bare and desolate cattle ranges, at river fords, where a few horsemen or a mule team may cross now and then, and on lonely forest trails traversed only by prospectors and Indians, the man of decanters and bottles has established himself. Usually his only stock in trade is a barrel of whisky and a few pounds of sugar, but if he be convenient to wagon transportation he will have bottled beer. The consumption of beer in the camps of the railway builders is enormous. At Bismarck I saw an entire freight train of thirty cars laden with bottled beer from a Chicago brewery, bound for the town nearest the end of the track. The chief engineer of the construction force said that an average of one bottle for every tie laid was consumed, and that the tie and the beer cost the same—fifty cents. Thus the workmeu pay as much for their driuk as the company for one of the important elements of railway construction —E. V. Smalley in the Century for February.

THE CANT ABOUT "LIBERTY."

Hon. B. Gratz Brown, in a recent able letter on the movement for constitutional Prohibition, refers to the liquor dealers' talk about "personal liberty" as follows:

"After all, what does this cant about invasion of individual liberty, the passage of sumptuary laws, and the destruction of large amounts of vested capital signify when run into its hole?

"These liquor dealers and liquor manufacturers are only anxious about the dollars their traffic brings in, not the ethics it involves, and it is the merest sham for them to set up as sponsors of our political freedom. They do not understand the first principles of our Democratic control. Government here means protection by the many against the injury and outrage of the few, or it means nothing; and if these dealers represent a flagrant evil they must expect suppression, and cannot invoke imagined rights of their victims to uphold manifest wrongs in their vocation.

"Again, only stupidity can confound the suppression of a traffic leading up to vice and down to degradation with sumptuary laws meant to restrain the cost of living among certain classes of society. They are to be distinguished both in the end had in view and the applicatious contemplated. One is the behest of a popular government applied to all its people in order to promote the public welfare; the other is the offspring of paternal government having special iuterests to subserve, and by consequence subordinating certain classes of the ruled to the caprice or direction of the rulers. No one ever speaks of the laws forbidding gambling or lotteries or regulating markets or prescribing sanitary restrictions as beiug sumptuary in character. It would be conspicuously absurb to do so. And the proposed measures of repression against this abuse rest on the same basis precisely. In truth, if Prohibition is to be condemned and denied a place in the constitution because it is sumptuary in character, then the same reasoning demands a blotting out from the statute books of all the laws now in existence relating to the sale of liquor, for they prohibit it outright, make it an offense per se, and only allow it under regulation, on petition of a majority of the people of the town, township, or city block. If Prohibition be sumptuary, then the law puts it in the power of every locality to enforce sumptuary legislatiou, and those who oppose it on this ground, to be consistent or honest, must also demand a repeal of local option, and advocate the enactment of laws granting free traffic in liquor without reference to the will of the community."

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—A number of people representing eight States of the Union, among them being a few Senators and Representatives, have issued a call for a national delegate conference, to be held in Chicago, July 4, 1883, for the purpose of organizing a new political party. The call is headed "Anti-monopoly Party," and appeals to all who are opposed to all kinds of monopolies. The headquarters of the anti-monopoly party are at the Briggs House, this city, where all communications should be addressed.

MONOPOLY ROBBERS.

The editorial department of the February Century opens with a bold attack on the moral and legal foundation upon which the Vanderbilts and Goulds have built their colossal fortunes. The introduction of an anti-monopoly plank into a national political platform was, we believe, original with the American party. There is a probability that opposition to the methods by which the wealth of the nation is collected into the hands of the few will become a prominent political issue. The Century article appears herewith:

THIEVES—AND ROBBERS.

He who takes by stealth what belongs to another is a thief; he who takes by violence what belongs to another is a robber. The robber is properly supposed to disappear, with other predatory animals, before the progress of civilization; but this is a superficial judgment. The force that unlawfully deprives men of their property passes through many transformations, but no force is more persistent. Men are plundered nowadays in America far more frequently and flagrantly than in England in the days of Robin Hood; there are men among us beside whose robberies those of the brigands of Italy and Greece and the Bedouins of the desert are mere pleasantries. Of all the triumphs of invention none are more wonderful than those by which the hard-earned gains of millions are forcibly conveyed to the vaults of the robber princes. No business is more highly organized, more strenuously persued, more successfully managed than the business of robbery. Yet, under all this elaboration of method, it is robbery, nothing worse nor better.

The peculiarity of the modern method of robbery is the employment, by the robbers, of the State as their enforced agent and accomplice. Sometimes, but not often, they organize their clients and retainers into armed bands and seize the coveted booty, combining to have the State confirm possession. But the force on which they prefer to rely is the quiet and resistless force of the laws and the courts. By artfully contrived legal schemes they constrain courts to do their bidding. The judges may be unwilling instruments, yet they are bound to sanction, impartially, the working of legal processes. But what shall we say when weak or corrupt judges hasten to legalize schemes by which great corporations are wrecked or rehabilitated as suits the purposes of the conspirators?

Of the gigantic fortunes now held in this country, not a few have been gotten by legal robbery. Twenty years ago our millionaires could be counted almost on the fingers of four hands. To-day their enumeration would carry us into thousands. Since the new system of robbery was perfected, about twenty men have amassed fortunes, which, taken together, exceed the debt of the nation. Twenty years ago many of these men were poor. Some of the new millionaires have grown rich honestly, but some of them have led a raid upon the production and the accumulated wealth of the country. So Napoleonic in its boldness and success has been the method of the master robbers, that rich men of better instincts have been dazzled by it, and have adopted it openly and independently, or have lent indirect co-operation and social credit to the robber chiefs and have shared in the plunder. Men of honorable reputations, who have been crowned with public honors, have countenanced these crimes as affording the surest way of adding to their unsatisfying fortunes of ten, twenty, or even thirty millions. It is by no means our purpose to throw discredit upon the pursuit of wealth. Honest production and the honest gains of wealth that is employed in the service of society are the bulwarks of civilization. But we do say that examples of private greed are sapping the sources of public honor; examples of gigantic and countenanced robbery are undermining the foundations of public morality and corrupting the national character.

Our legislators have failed to see, or, for private and corrupt reasons, have winked at the fact, that the laws which were made to fit old-fashioned ideas of honor and morality, instead of protecting the public, are the strength and the protection of dishonest men. The old code of commercial honor is lost sight of in the complex transactions of stock-jobbers, who remain out of sight while their work is being done by conscienceless factors; by lawyers skilled in discovering loop-holes in the law and in juggling with the law; by lobbies with money at the doors of legislatures; by paper shares and paper promises to pay; by cipher messages and spies, and by abusing the facilities of stock exchanges.

It is well that our legislatures are making at least the show of inquiring into the methods by which the public is robbed in the interest of stockholders, and they, in turn, are robbed by corporate managers; by which wholesale robbery is cloaked with legal forms of "consolidation," "re-organization," "receiverships," and "watered stocks;" by which men may safely conspire to pervert the natural course of production and trade, and rob the public by the artifice of "corners;" by which a man is allowed to control rival or double systems of railways, and with impunity array one against the other, as suits his varying purpose thereby despoiling the public with the ease of a gambler playing with marked cards.

What have the people to say about these practices? They do not appear as yet, to have anything to say. The robber princes are held in high esteem. They go about to the colleges, some of them, and Doctors of Law and Doctors of Divinity grovel at their feet; if any Mordecai has refused to bow down before them, his name has not been reported. Men whose riches have been increased by spoiling their neighbors are held up as shining examples for the imitation of our youth. So long as teachers of morality silently indorse such iniquities, it is not to be expected that the people will cry out against them. But the day is sure to come when plain men will clearly see that no man can get with clean hands, in an ordinary, life-time a hundred million dollars; that such an enormous pile so suddenly collected, must be loot, not profit. That will be a day of reckoning, indeed, for the robbers and for the judges and the legislators and the public teachers who have been their accomplices.

Meantime these facts are to be kept in mind,—that we have among us a class of men who, in their rapacity, are bent on enriching themselves by forcibly seizing the property of their neighbors: and that they have learned how to use for this purpose the organized force of the State. Some means must be found of putting a stop to them. Unless this be done speedily, the respect for law on which social order rests will not long survive.

A GREAT POLITICAL QUESTION.

Dr. Prime, editor of the conservative old New York Observer, speaks with emphasis respecting intemperance and its relation to the ballot:

The most serious, important and momentous question of the day is involved in the matter of temperance or intemperance in the use of intoxicating drinks. There is no party issue so nearly vital to the welfare of this country. The tariff, the currency, everything dwindles, when compared with the gigantic proportions of the increasing evil that comes from this one pestilent source. I do not pretend to propose a solution of the problem, "what to do about it." Where there is a public sentiment that will sustain laws to put the traffic on the same footing with vices and sources of vice, by all means let us make laws to help in saving the people. And we may labor and pray to bring the people up to that highwater mark of virtue where such laws will be made and sustained. But push the subject aside as we may, treat it as a vulgar, dull and dreary question to be attended to only by professional reformers, who are often regarded as great bores, the subject will not be put down. It is on us and around us, and we must deliver the country from the cause of it. "Billy McGlory and Company" have their clutches on the poor, the vicious, the lawless, on thousands of voters, on millions of people. There is much fighting and bloodshed in the shops of Billy McGlory and Company, and our fight out of the saloons, and in the pulpit and press, in the market place, and at the poles, must be with Billy McGlory and Company, till we put them down.—N. Y. Observer.

There is nothing in the voice of Masonry with its triangles, circles, compasses, aprons, squares, etc., which is anything like the voice of the True Shepherd. He who mistakes one for the other cannot be much of a Christian.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. J. W. Swaney, the pastor of the Oil City, Pa., U. P. church, who died recently, left all his money to Foreign Missions, one half to be used by his mother during her life, and then to go to the Missionary cause; the other half, about $1,000, will go immediately to this cause of which he was an ardent friend.

—During the twenty years' pastorate of the Rev. Howard Crosby at the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church New York, 2,000 persons have united with the church on confession of faith, and many more by letters from other churches.

—The Burmans are beginning to show increased interest in Christianity. Though the Baptist missionaries in Burmah began their labors among them, they only number about 15,00 converts, while there are 81,899 church members among the Karens.

—A London paper, speaking of the appointment of Dr. Matheny, a missionary of the United States Reformed Presbyterian Church, at Latakiyeh, in Syria, to establish a mission in or near Tarsus, in Cilicia, says: "How strange that the gospel should be sent back to the city of St. Paul's birth by the inhabitants of a land of whose existence he had never dreamed."

—The colored Baptists of South Carolina have 550 churches, 350 ordained ministers, twenty associations, and a State Convention. They support a mission in Africa, and help support an educational institution. They indignantly deny the assertion, made at the recent convention of white Baptists in that State, that "instead of 90,000 colored Baptists there were 90,000 pagan Baptists."

—Oscar F. Brown, a banker and broker well known in Wall street, was ordained a minister recently in the First Reformed Episcopal Church at Madison avenue and Fifty-fifth street, New York. Mr. Brown started the Zion Chapel two years ago on Fifty-second street, near Tenth avenue. There are now ninety communicants and 350 scholars in the Sunday-school. He devoted a great deal of his time to the work and interested a number of Wall street men in it, and he finally decided to devote the rest of his life to the ministry. He went through a regular course of study.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey concluded a series of meetings in Dublin at about the middle of last month. The services were held in the hall of the Christian Union building, which holds nearly 4,000 persons. The hall was crowded, and overflow meetings were necessary. These peculiarities were observed: Among the most efficient assistants were the converts of the visit of the Evangelists a few years ago; a number of young Romanists were present and very attentive; the clergy of all Protestant denominations united in promoting the success of the meetings; the leading Roman Catholic organ, which derided the preaching of Mr. Moody during his visit a few years ago, a paper owned and edited by Papists, now gave almost a full report of each day's services, which will go into thousands of Romish families. The engagements of the Evangelists are for Birmingham, Belfast, Liecester, and Nottingham in February; Manchester and Leeds in March; Liverpool from March 31 to April 14. There being no hall large enough for the number expected to attend, the committee at Leeds is putting up a temporary wooden building for the meetings.

Mr. Moody had his picture taken recently, had a dozen copies made, then bought the negative and carried it off with him. He wished to gratify only his family and nearest friends. He is not willing that the photograph shall be for sale. This is said to be an admirable portrait of the man. It is the first taken in twenty-five years.

COUNTERFEIT PASSING FOR GENUINE.

Daniel Defoe is quoted as the author of the proverb: "God no sooner builds a church than the devil puts up a chapel." About the middle of December notice was given in our Sabbath school for all interested in having a children's festival to meet on Wednesday following. I was subsequently informed that it was to be the wedding reception of Mr. and Mrs. D. The bridal pair were dolls. There was to be a general sale of dolls; admission ten cents; refreshments for sale. On being invited to dress a doll, I declined and remonstrated, quoting the Saviour's words, "My house shall be called a house of prayer," and other like arguments. Two of the zealous workers informed me that the vestry was not the house of God. It was built to hold prayer-meetings, church sociables, entertainments, etc., in. I argued as best I could that it was God's house and that it was sinful to use it as a house of merchandise, and when they would prove to me from the Bible that doll sales was the right way to raise money I would help and not before. Since reading the above quotation which I had preserved in a scrap book, I have come to about the same opinions of those ladies, that is, the vestry is not God's house, and I question whether the church is God's house either. A few Christians and many sinners unite and build an elegant house to worship in. To meet the expenses the pews are sold at auction to the highest bidder, thus making it merchandise, and keeping out the poorer classes from hearing the Gospel (peradventure the hired minister preaches it). This house is too good for the use of the children's school and they are shoved into the vestry to sit on hard seats and walk on bare floors. Most parents think their children cannot understand the sermon (and probably they are right), so they go home after the school and seldom if ever see the inside of the nice church. It is too good for use save an hour and a half each Sabbath by those who are well able to hire a seat. Thus it seems to me the devil owns and controls the church as well as the chapel.

Defoe's lines are:

"Wherever God erects a house of prayer,
The devil is sure to build a chapel there:
And 'twill be found, upon examination,
The latter has the largest congregation."

Our prayer-meeting has about twenty, the sociable a hundred or more. At our annual meeting in January the majority on the new board of officers chosen are secretists. I feel safe in saying that the devil has control of all the church property at present. F. M. M.

WILLIAM E. DODGE.

The death of this eminent Christian merchant will be felt by all the churches. His funeral was attended on Monday the 5th inst, by nearly every prominent citizen of New York, including W. H. Vanderbilt, Jay Gould, General Grant, and Peter Cooper, by a great many leading clergymen, and by associates of the deceased in religious and philanthropic work. Addresses were made by the Rev. Dr. Hitchcock, the Rev. Dr. Mark Hopkins, and the Rev. Dr. Cuyler. The Intelligencer in a brief sketch of his life says:

Mr. Dodge was converted when twelve years old, and from that time regarded himself as a steward of God. Few men have been as faithful in their stewardship. His business was prosperous, and he gave with eminent liberality. His gifts have often reached $100,000 a year, and sometimes $250,000. All the world shared in his liberality. His interest in Foreign Missions was almost life-long, and his gifts to Missions to the heathen large and constant. A large part of his benevolence was unknown outside of a small circle. He might have been one of the most wealthy men in the world. He leaves only about five millions. He was Vice-President of the American Board and of the American Tract Society, for twenty-five years a manager of the American Bible Society, President of the National Temperance Society, a member of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, a trustee of Union Theological Seminary, and an active member of a score of philanthropic societies. Since 1818 he had been a member of one or another Presbyterian church in this city. Actively as he was engaged in business, Mr. Dodge gave earnest and invaluable service to the Church and to these Christian and charitable organizations, performed an incessant round of social duties, and was everywhere a genial, out-spoken, decided Christian. His activity as we look back upon it seems amazing, his unvarying urbanity and courteous sympathy no less wonderful. His life is a model. Almost to the last his mind was keen, sprightly, energetic, and at over three score and ten years he seemed younger than other men at sixty. This city has lost one of its best citizens in the highest and completest sense, and the Church of Christ is deprived of the presence of a member and leader of inexpressible value."

"A great many have convictions," says the Witness, "without courage to carry them out or to advocate them. Many lay aside their Christianity for the sake of gain; many who make a fair show, worship the dollar instead of the Creator; but Mr. Dodge was not one of these. He invested his great wealth to promote good objects, such as railroads, and he was a director or president of many companies besides his own special business. But whenever any of the railway companies in which he was interested began to run trains on the Sabbath, he, as he had forewarned them, withdrew from them at once, expressly on that account. He was deeply interested in missions, home and foreign, and a most liberal donor to these and other good works."

PRISON WORK.

The Cynosure readers will remember some notice a year ago of the effort of a one-armed brother of Onarga, Ill., Rev. W. D. A. Mathews, to supply the penitentiaries of the West and South with free reading matter of standard character. His work has become so extended that we learn through a correspondent of the New York Witness that he now "hopes to furnish a home to discharged, but worthy, prisoners, where they may be trained, and tried, and finally, if found true men, helped to a new class in life. In connection with this work, and on the same property, will be built an orphanage, where the children of prisoners can be cared for and instructed during the confinement of their parents. There will also be a home for disabled sailors and others who cannot keep sober without some restraint beyond their own will power.

"The property, upon which it is proposed to found these sister charities, I have personally examined, and find the situation perfect and the extent ample for all needs, and the surroundings such that the control of those enjoying its advantages will be by such natural walls that there will be the least possible friction in the management. This property, worth not less than $25,000, is offered for a little less than $20,000 for a very short time. The $10,000 now raised will secure extended possession of this property, and furnish the buildings at present needed for the "National Industrial Home" and the rooms for assorting and handling the reading-matter. The management of this charity request interested people in every city and village to take measures for collecting funds. The sum named above is needed at once. During the next eighteen months $25,000 additional will be needed.

"For a charity so unique, National in its aims, situated so centrally, near Rock Island, Ill., with unequaled facilities for transportation North, South, East, and West, created for the use of a present constituency of not less than forty penal institutions, State, military, and city, no active lover of the unfortunates ought to find it difficult to secure from one to five hundred dollars among his own friends. All funds should be sent to the Hon. T. J. Robinson, President National Bank, Rock Island, Illinois."

In an editorial on the funeral of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the London Times expresses the opinion that all one can reasonably hope for is to cultivate a large spiritual unity—that the sects have accentuated their differences so clearly and developed their enterprises and institutions to such an extent that only a dreamer can cherish the hope of formal unity: "Formal unity in religion," it says, "is now as inconceivable as a political union to embrace all mankind. Any effort made to reunite 'Popish recusants,' as they used to be called, Nonconformists, Presbyterians, and Dissenters would be labor lost. On the other hand, there is as much moral unity as ever, perhaps more than ever. Christians agree to differ. They work on the foundations of agreement, and while doing so they lay aside their differences. They gladly recognize in one another that which they believe to be common to all true Christians." From this view we utterly dissent. The sectarian structure of the church is the growth of less than three centuries. Only an ignorant misconception of its erroneousness and its resultant evils, or a pessimistic despair of the final triumph of righteousness and goodness could give birth to such a prophecy. Let the spiritual unity of believers be cherished and promoted. It will one day be perceived that the spiritual unity is the sufficient basis for that organic unity which is indispensable to the full triumph of Christianity among any people or over the world.—Christian Statesman.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

The Cynosure is happy to announce herewith a grand list of contributors and correspondents for 1883. To read their letters, study their arguments, compare their experiences, and drink with them at the fountain of truth, even Jesus Christ, will be the noble privilege of the readers of the Cynosure. The following is only a partial list. Arrangements are being made for the enlargement of the circle until it shall include every section of our country:

A WORD TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We have said but little about changes already made in your paper, and we do not intend to speak of others contemplated in advance; we prefer to submit them to your inspection, and if you are pleased we shall be encouraged, and if you are displeased we shall hope to hear before it is too late to repent and try again. If you think we have done reasonably well, and have faith in the future sufficient to warrant a little extra exertion on your part, we ask you to call the attention of your neighbors to what is being done. If after making an effort you fail to secure a subscription for six months or a year, and can secure a trial subscriber we will send four consecutive numbers for 10cts., to begin with the number immediately following the receipt of the money. Please put us in communication with persons who in your judgment ought to read the Cynosure, and let us see how many we can hold. We are willing to test this plan and we make this offer to continue for one month from February first. Give name, postoffice and State very plainly.

An additional 5 cents secures the Weed pamphlet with a wood cut and brief description of the Morgan monument. Please look out for "Business," on the last page.

—Mr. Beecher seems to be going about the country not exactly like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, but seeking for hearers whose faith in the grand old truths of the Gospel he may shake or corrupt. He was most injudiciously called to lecture for a Baptist church in Boston in order that, by the sale of tickets, it might raise funds for its Sabbath-school. To the horror of these orthodox Christians he chose the opportunity to attack the evangelical doctrines held by them, and they regretted, when too late, having admitted such an enemy within their camp. It is worthy of note that, when Mr. Beecher lectured in a somewhat similar strain in Indianapolis, the Rev. Dr. Pierson, who now ministers to the church there of which Mr. Beecher many years ago was pastor, spoke as follows concerning his lecture: "He lamented the fact that Christ's people were carried away by the slosh of the learned gentleman's dissertations, and added: 'I felt ashamed to have such grand doctrines as the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures and such awful truths as the final punishment of the ungodly travestied and held up to ridicule.' Here," says the dispatch, "the audience broke out in unrestrainable applause. Dr. Pierson afterward privately reasserted his strong opinions, and was warmly congratulated by many of the prominent ministers for his bold stand."—N. Y. Witness.

—To the young convert we would say, Don't forget secret prayer, walk in the light, keep yourselves unspotted from the world—go on to perfection.—Gospel Banner.

FARM NOTES.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR HORSES.

Never allow any one to tease or tickle your horse in the stable. The animal only feels the torment, and does not understand the joke. Vicious habits are thus easily brought on.

Never beat the horse when in the stable. Nothing so soon makes him permanently vicious.

Let the horse's litter be dry and clean underneath, as well as on top. Standing on hot, fermenting manure makes the hoofs soft, and brings on lameness. Change the litter partially in some parts, and entirely in others, every morning; and brush out and clean the stall thoroughly. To procure a good coat on your horse naturally, use plenty of rubbing and brushing. Plenty of "elbow grease" opens the pores, softens the skin, and promotes the animal's general health. Never clean a horse in his stable. The dust fouls the crib and makes him loathe his food. Use the curry-comb lightly. When not used rightly it is a source of great pain. Let the heels be well brushed out every night. Dirt, if allowed to cake in, causes grease and sore heels. Whenever a horse is washed, never leave him till he is rubbed quite dry. He will probably get a chill if neglected.

When a horse comes off a journey, the first thing is to walk him about till he is cool, if he is brought in hot, as this prevents his taking cold. The next thing is to groom him quite dry, first with a wisp of straw, and then with a brush. This removes dust, dirt and sweat, and allows time for the stomach to recover itself, and the appetite to return. Also let his legs be well rubbed by the hand, as nothing so soon removes a strain. It also detects thorns or splinters, soothes the animal, and enables him to feed comfortably.

Let the horse have some exercise every day. Otherwise, he will be liable to fever or bad feet. Let your horse stand loose, if possible without being tied up to the manger. Pain and weariness from a confined position induce bad habits, and cause swollen feet and other disorders.

Look often at the animal's feet and legs. Disease or wounds in those parts, if at all neglected, soon become dangerous. Every night look and see if there is a stone between the hoof and the shoe. Standing on it all night, the horse will be lame the next morning. If the horse remains in the stable his feet must be "stopped." Heat and dryness cause cracked hoofs and lameness. The feet should not be "stopped" oftener than twice a week. It will make the hoof soft and bring on corns.

Do not urge the animal to drink water which he refuses; it is probably hard and unwholesome. Never allow drugs to be administered to your horse without your knowledge; they are not needed to keep the animal in good health, and may do the greatest and most sudden mischief.—Valentine & Co's. "Stable Hints."

KICKING COWS.

We see many remedies for curing a cow of kicking while being milked. The best remedy is prevention. This can only be applied by handling the heifer while young, teaching her by gentleness and kindness that man is her friend, and does not wish to harm her; but, as this is not always possible, it is well to know how to prevent kicking after a cow has reached mature years.

Take a piece of rope half an inch in diameter—an old one is better than a new one, as it is not stiff and is easily tied; make a loop in one end of this that will not slip; pass this rope over the loin of the cow in front of her two hip bones; pass the rope around her in front of the bag, and put the other end through the loop, draw it up moderately tight, and tie it; then sit down and milk her, regardless of her movements. This rope prevents her raising her foot high enough to kick, and she will soon give it up as an unprofitable job.

The first time the rope is ever put upon the cow time should be given to her to become accustomed to it, and find that however much she jumps or tries to kick she cannot free herself from it. This simple remedy is worth many dollars to anyone who has cows.—Live Stock Journal.

The agricultural condition of the Eastern States has undergone a radical change in recent years. Instead of raising grain, stock, etc., as they once did, New England and other Eastern farmers now produce vegetables, fruits, poultry, dairy products, etc. This change has resulted in greater variety and increased value of products. It has been attended with a vast saving of labor. The art of agriculture has made a great advance in these States, and the condition of the farmer has been materially improved. These changes have been chiefly due to two causes, namely, the vast agricultural development of the Western and North-western States and the great extension of transportation facilities between this part of the country and the East.

A few years ago, a Mr. Hezekiah Bradford of New York bought a tract of over four hundred acres of mining land in Juniata Co., Penn., about one hundred and forty-four miles from Philadelphia. Examination proved it worthless for mining. The question was, "What shall I do with it?" A few common farm buildings and only a small tract of farm land did not promise much. Most of the land was very steep and stony, covered with forest. Notwithstanding all the natural obstacles, to-day it blossoms like the rose. 15,500 peach trees, 10,000 quince trees, and 9,000 Siberian crab-apple trees testify to the clear head and great energy of the owner.

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen, $15.00.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

ONE HUNDRED ANTI-MASONIC LIBRARIES.

AND A COPY OF THE CYNOSURE WITH EACH.

The donation of a friend for that purpose enables us to offer the Cynosure for a year and one of one hundred set of our $12.00 libraries at half the price of the libraries. By this offer you can secure books to the value of $14.00 as advertised on page 15 of the Cynosure and one copy of the paper for a year for $6.00, express charges extra, on the following conditions:

1. The order, accompanied with the money, must be received before April 1, 1883.

2. The library must be used for the benefit of the public. None will be furnished for exclusively private use except to lecturers or actual pastors of churches for their own use (not to sell). It is particularly desired to put as many of these libraries as possible into public, especially college libraries; but any one who wishes one of these libraries and will invite the public to make use of the books by posting up in public places cards furnished free for that purpose, is entitled to a library and the Cynosure for one year on receipt of $6.00; provided—

3rd. That it is received before the one hundred are gone and not later than April 1st.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of CAPT. WM. MORGAN. This confession of Henry L Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 De-GREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Chris-TIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry 15 cents each; per dozen. $1 25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockmau. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Re-PUBLIC, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Maehiuists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The Senate passed the Japanese Indemnity bill, which provides for the payment of the principal, without interest. The bill now goes to the President for his signature.

—Secretary Folger is confined to his bed with an illness which his friends fear may be quite severe. He has not been well since he came to Washington, yet he labors constantly so many hours each day when he is able to sit up that he is under a constant strain which results periodically in a complete collapse of strength.

—The Arkansas legislature passed an act prohibiting for two years the sale of intoxicants wilhin three miles of a church or school, according to the wishes of the adult majority of both sexes.

—The senate of Maine passed a constitutiona prohibitory amendment, three voting against.

—In the Star-route trial Rerdell withdrew his plea of not guilty, announced he had decided to abandon any further defense in the case and throw himself on the mercy of the court, and said he was willing to testify to all his knowledge of any facts with reference to any of the defendants, either against or for them, himself included.

—The Pacific express was in collision near Dundas, Ontario, Feb. 15, with the east-bound express on the Great Western division of the Grand Trunk railway. A heavy fog prevailed at the time of the collision. The trains crashed into each other, demolishing the engines, tenders, and as far as the smoking-car of the Pacific. Engineer Mason of the latter and two passengers were killed, and seven passengers were wounded.

—The snow is said to be sixteen feet on a level at Watertown, N. Y.

—The Boston Board of Aldermen has passed an order that the gas in the streets shall be superceded by eleetric lights.

—The lease and other papers transferring the Mutual Union wires to the Western Union Co. were signed last Tuesday, and the latter company assumed control of the property.

—Near Sumner, Cal., Tuesday, a waterspout covered the railroad track with mud, causing the derailing of a freight train, two engines and six cars being wrecked and a number of cattle killed.

—Twenty miles south of Moberly, Mo., Wednesday morning, the Kansas City express train for St. Louis was derailed and John Lester, the engineer, was scalded to death, and the fireman, John Murphy, was quartered.

—Two gold pieces from the New Orleans mint were assayed at Philadelphia and found to be slightly below the standard. The matter will be reported to the President if a second assay proves the correctness of the first trial.

—Quite a panic has been occasioned among the sporting fraternity of Baltimore by the rearrest by order of Judge Phelps of all the gamblers recently indicted by the grand jnry, and requiring them to give bail in the sum of $4,000 each.

—The new five-cent piece just issued from the Treasury department is being electro-plated and passes for a $5 gold piece.

—A fearful calamity occurred on Friday at the Diamond coal-mine, near Braidwood, Ill. About 3 o'clock afternoon a large body of earth, loosened by the frost and saturated with water, unable to withstand the pressure caved in upon the workmen in the mine. The body of earth falling is reported to be about ninety feet square. There were 300 men employed and 74 are known to nave perished.

FOREIGN.

—The British Parliament opened on the 16th.

—Richard Wagner, the great composer, died on the 13th from disease of the heart. He had another violent attack of the disease, when he had a doctor summoned, who found his ease was hopeless. He died in the arms of his wife and surrounded by his children.

—Bishop Logue, of Donegal, Ireland, writes the distress is heart-rending, and that hungry thousands will no longer be able to suppress the cry of distress.

—The French senate adopted M. Waddington's proposal, that princes who attempt to further their pretensions be banished after trial in special assizes, or by the Senate sitting as a high court.

All the members of the French Cabinet have resigned in consequence of the action of the Senate on the expulsion bill.

—The expectation of Paris seems to be that De Freycinet will from a cabinet representing the dominent sentiment of the ministers of 1879 and 1881. Leon Say, named as Minister of Finance, held the same office in the De Freycinet Cabinet of 1881, and Constans, put forward as Minister of the Interior, and Admiral Cloue as Minister of Marine, held the same office in the Ferry Cabinet of 1880.

THE FLOODS.

—The floods at Cincinnati began to recede Thursday morning after reaching the unprecedented height of 66 feet 4 inches above low water mark. The chief disasters causing loss of life were an explosion of sewer gas, which wrecked a house, killing three persons and wounding many others; and the giving way of a 100-foot embankment on which stood the Cincinnati, Southern railroad depot. The loss of life at this place is unknown; but it is feared that a dozen men and boys went down in the crash.

—At Fern Bank, below Cincinnati, a floating house was stopped, and in one of the rooms was found a baby sleeping peacefully in its crib.

—Nowhere does the falling water give greater joy than at Lawrenceburg, Ind., where it is estimated that two hundred houses have been overturned or washed away. Three thousand people were driven from home, with nothing but the clothes they wear. The loss will reach $500,000.

—The Mississippi at Memphis at noon Feb. 16 marked within two feet seven inches of the danger line, and four feet nine inches of the extreme highest point reached last spring. It is rising at the rate of ten inches a day, and will surely go over the banks below in many places where the levees broke last year and have not been repaired.

—The lower house of the Indiana legislature passed a bill appropriating $100,000 for the flood sufferers, and the Senate will undoubtedly coneur in the measure. An appropriation of $40,000 has already been made. All the great cities are moving earnestly for relief.

BUSINESS.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

A very few persons in writing have mentioned the omission of weekly acknowledgments of receipts in our paper. No one has complained.

The receipt of the Weed Pamphlet by all who renew or subscribe during the months of January and February while not a legal receipt is a notice that the money has been received, this, with change of date on the tag, we have thought in most instances sufficient. Where there was anything special seeming to require it, we have sent receipts. By this method valuable space is saved and such subscriber furnished a notice that is itself a document of permanent interest and will aid in enlisting others and inducing them to subscribe if judiciously used. Our supply of this kind of notices is not exhausted and are awaiting your orders.

TEN CENTS.

Friends are heartily endorsing the 10-cent "Trial-subscriber" plan of introducing their paper into the homes of their neighbors. This is as it should be, and now is the time to push on the work. This plan divides the expense of giving a great many persons an opportunity of becoming acquainted with our Association and its organ, and is better in many respects than the free sample copy plan. It should be pushed while the season lasts, and those desiring specimens for their own information should send orders.

HELP YOURSELF AND THE CAUSE.

Much less inconvenience and confusion has occurred in the transfer of correspondence than was anticipated. It speaks well for the intelligence of our patrons that a letter intended for the N. C. A. or Cynosure is very seldom misdirected A glance at the book orders sent during the last few days, suggested that a word of commendation was due to those who have so readily fallen into line. You have our thanks, and we are still at your service to send anything published in the line of our reform and also any book on sale in this market. When you send for "Freemasonry Illustrated," "Odd-fellowship Revised," etc., put in your orders for Bibles, histories, biographies, volumes of sermons, books for your children or any standard works you may want. They will receive prompt attention at No. 221 West Madison street, and every penny of profit go to the credit of the work we have in hand as your agents and fellow-helpers.

TO OLD SUBSCRIBERS.

We want to keep all our old readers while adding many new ones to our list. We shall do our best to merit your confidence, and hope to receive your co-operation and continued patronage. Give us a fair trial before you "cut our acquaintance." We come to you with a clean dress, a pleasant face, and words of truth and soberness, modestly asking a weekly welcome at your fireside. We shall aim to make your home brighter, your burdens lighter, and your hearts better, by our coming; so be sure it's the right thing to do before you say, "Discontinue my paper."

ILLUSTRATED SUPPLEMENTS to the Christian Cynosure are occasionally ordered. The snpply is exhausted, but "Freemasonry at a Glance" can be supplied which is very convenient for reference and in form more convenient to carry in the pocket.

☞Our friends will aid in meeting the expenses of keeping up their Publishing House, by sending orders for books either anti-secret or the publications of the secret orders. Direct to W. I. Phillips, 221 West Madison St., Chicago.

☞We have arranged with dealers to furnish books, etc., in the general trade so that you need not divide you orders but send direct to headquarters.

Orders for books in the general trade are beginning to come in for which we are obliged. If you are going to order any thing published or sold in the trade of this city, please give us an opportunity to serve you and we will do our best to make it satisfactory and to you interest to order all books, tracts etc., from Head-quarters at 221 W. Madison St.

THE BATAVIA CONVENTION.

REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS, ADDRESSES, ETC., READY FOR ORDERS. PRICE 25 CENTS.

PRESIDENT FINNEY.—The reminiscences of this "Prince and great man in Israel," in the present number, will be read with profound interest. They are worthy of their subject, and that is sufficient praise. There are tens of thousands who knew and heard him, both in this country and in Europe, who would hail this number of the Cynosure with delight, and who would have it at any reasonable cost and pains, if they knew of its existence. Can our readers do any thing to gratify them by spreading the knowledge of it, by correspondence, sending copies, and by personal application to those who are within their reach?

We would respectfully suggest that a majority of the people of Oberlin need this copy of the Cynosure. Oberlin is becoming—rather, has become, lodge-ridden. So long ago as 1872 old citizens were lamenting the fact that the municipal officers were all, with one or two exceptions, members of secret orders. In the next generation, when lodge-idolatry is suppressed; the people will erect a monument to his memory in Oberlin, where now his name is seldom mentioned. And we never look on his inimitable "Autobiography," without lamenting the total suppression of the record of far the most interesting and important of his reform labors. Let us call for or issue a new edition which shall give a true history of this great man.

DEA. WILLARD SEARS, of Boston, who was a warm friend and liberal supporter of Mr. Finney and of Oberlin, as it was in its early days, said once in speaking of Mr. Finney: When he was preachiug in Boston, and a powerful revival was in progress, several of the leading members of the church were in counsel, when some one asked Mr. Finney's opinion about secret socicties, particularly Freemasonry. Mr. Finney rose and exclaimed with emphasis, "THEY ARE ALL FROM THE DEVIL," and abruptly left the room.

HE KNEW MEN.—The shadows of unsoundness in the faith were just beginning to creep over the great light of the Brooklyn pulpit. Suspicions of domestic infidelity were continuously whispered among brother clergymen in a confidential way. I was at Oberlin and in conversation with Mr. Finney the matter came up. Standing by his side with my right hand resting on the back of a chair in which he sat, I said, "Well, Mr. Finney, what is your opinion of Mr. Beecher, anyhow?" Instantly turning his face squarely to mine, and with a look that made me feel that he was searching the very depths of my soul, he exclaimed with emphasis: "He's an ass! He's an ass!" Mr. Finney then saw clearly what it took the average minister of the American pulpit years to discover. But the time has come when the once halting and incredulous (who even now may have their refined and cultured tastes shocked by Mr. Finney's forcible words) are forced to adopt the same opinion of the man who boldly endorses the doctrine of Robert G. Ingersoll, that "the Christian's God is his devil." Let all such imitate Mr. Finney's fidelity by expressing their convictions in such terms as may be agreeable to their taste. But let the truth be spoken. J. P. S.

PRESIDENT FINNEY.

BY THE EDITOR.

The grave of Moses is hidden; his name and teachings cover the globe. So let it be with President Finney. He resembled Moses in the power of his physique. "His eye was not dim nor his natural strength abated," till years after the time when most men shrink from the toils of life. His most stupendous labor, his assault on the Image of the Beast, was made when he was nearing his eightieth year, and when brave men stood silent and timid men quailed before it; nay, still cringe and falter and truckle before that power whose serpent-tongue traduces every man of reputation who dares to resist it; whose arguments are lies; whose dagger-points are at every honest statesman's breast; and whose minions were mean enough to write him letters threatening to cut off by secret assassination, the few short years of the meek and mighty octogenarian, before whose courage they cowered, and whose fearless testimony they dreaded.

I saw this great Christian chieftain soon after he, with his associate pastor, Prof. Morgan, summoned the lodge to trial on that memorable Sabbath in the crowded First Church of Oberlin. He seemed neither old nor young; though he had then seen near eighty winters and summers. Erect, tall, finely proportioned; his hair, always light, concealing his gray locks, if he had them; his large gray eyes emitting flames when kindled by emotion; you felt awed as by the presence of an angel, yet drawn to him as by the loving nature of a child.

He told me his religious conversion, as related in his autobiography, and never shall I forget what is not in the biography, his experience in the lodge. These were exactly, or very nearly, his words:

"As soon as I was converted to Christ, my moral nature loathed it; and I went direct to the lodge and demanded my discharge. The members plead off, and got up some sort of a meeting at which they insisted I should attend and pray, because I could pray and they couldn't. But I said, 'No, brethren, I cannot remain a member with you. You must certainly excuse me.' But I said nothing concerning the revelation of their secrets or about my leaviug the lodge till after Morgan's exposure, which occurred in a few years. I was then asked if Morgan's exposure was true; aud, as I must then be guilty of a perpetual lie by denying, or break my lodge oath by confessing that it was a true revelation, I chose the latter. I had not then learned as I have since, that the lodge was utterly destructive of both state and church."

Mr. Finney had known the extremes of popular hatred followed by general popularity. At one time nearly every Congregational pulpit from Oberlin to Boston was closed against him, and yet afterward no religious teacher was so beloved and revered in that city as he. And now, with a full consciousness of the bitterness of popular religious hate, he was uttering and publishing his terrible denunciations of the lodge, and that without a tremor or a cringe, and without regard to the course others might take. It was the height of the moral sublime.

"Faithful found among the faithless;—
Among innumerable false, unmoved,
Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified,
His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal:
Nor number, nor example with him wrought,
To swerve from truth or change his constant mind."

CHARLES G. FINNEY—A SKETCH OF HIS LIFE.

BY REV. GEORGE CLARK.

Rev. Charles G. Finney was born in Warren, Litchfield county, Connecticut, August 29, 1792. Two years later his parents removed to Oneida county, N. Y., where he resided, enjoying the privileges of common schools summer and winter, till he was sixteen—when they removed to Jefferson county. Here he remained till about twenty and then returned to Connecticut to pursue his studies. A self-supporting student, he studied and taught as best he could, hoping to enter Yale College. But his preceptor, a graduate of Yale, advised him not to go, telling him that he could master the entire course of Yale in two years and thus save two years' time and his money besides. Hoping to complete his studies under this teacher, he gave up his plan of graduating at Yale. Thus nearly six years of teaching and study passed. In the mean time, overpersuaded by his Masouic uncle, he had joined the lodge. He uow returned to Jefferson county and entered a law office as a student in the town of Adams. Here he studied and practiced law, taught music, led the Presbyterian choir, attended weekly church prayer-meetings when he could, and soon became leader of the young people. A despiser and merciless critic of all shams in religion, he criticised their formal confessions in prayer, repeated every week, and became the dread of both church and pastor.

During a revival in 1821, like Saul of Tarsus, he saw his sins; and after a short season of most pungent conviction, like him he renounced them forever, and received a remarkable baptism of the Holy Spirit. Henceforth, "for him to live was Christ." He was at this time secretary of the lodge in Adams, and a "bright Mason." But he was now "completely converted from Freemasonry to Christ—from all fellowship with its wicked oaths, principles and proceedings," as "unfruitful works of darkness," forbidden by Christ and abhorred by the Holy Spirit. He gave up his law business, having, as he fully believed, received a call from Christ to the work of an evangelist, scarcely less significant than that to Paul; and which subsequent success verified beyond all doubt.

He was now 29, in person of commanding presence, tall, erect, of fair complexion, piercing eyes, that seemed to look one through and through as if "discerning the thoughts and intents of the heart," and anon, melting with tenderness, or swimming in tears, and a voice that easily filled the largest halls. Intellectually he was fitted for his work, which was the promotion of Pentecostal revivals by the Holy Spirit through the truth. Error stood between souls and Christ and must be exposed. Refuges of lies were fortified by theories and traditions, and must be swept away. He was of commou clay, but Christ endowed him, and so took all the glory. He gave him an evenly balanced intellect of a high order, an emotional nature of the finest mould, intuitional and logical powers seldom surpassed—with a strong will, and a full equipment of moral powers.

In 1824 he was licensed and soon after ordained as an evangelist by the Presbytery under whose care he had pursued his studies for the ministry, and commenced preaching in Jefferson county. Wonderful revivals of most searching, solemn power followed his labors wherever he preached, and spread throughout this country and through his printed lectures into England and Scotland, which he twice visited on invitation to labor.

In the spring of 1835, worn with labor, he was called to Oberlin Theological Seminary, and thenceforward spent his summers teaching theology, and, as his health would permit, his winters in laboring for revivals, and serving as President of the College also from 1851 to 1866. For thirty-eight years he was the true and wise pastor of the First Church of Oberlin, which continued in a revival state through all that period, numbers uniting with the church at every communion. No exact estimate of the numbers brought to Christ through his labors can be given, but they are thought to be many tens of thousands. He said, "I am nothing and can do nothing only as the Spirit of God works through me."

He was a true reformer, and, for the same reason that he was a Christian. He opposed all sin because it was sin, whatever its form or strength. He worked with minorities who were working for God, because God and his legions were working with them. He had the courage of conviction that dares to do right. He had no fear of man where Christ led the way. He had seen a "little one" become a thousand through unseen allies that thronged to its aid. He knew that every divine reform begins with a small minority—that it never becomes popular till it conquers and becomes the majority. He knew that this world was given to Christ and he would rule it in the interest of righteousness and that whoever could not be reformed he would "cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched."

He took sides with God for moral reform and against slavery, intemperance, secret oath-bound societies, especially the unlawful oaths, principles and proceedings of Freemasonry. He had been deceived and drawn into the lodge under false pretences; but at his conversion had renounced its religion of deism, its pagan worship and its salvation without Christ. And when two Masons adhering to their wicked and horrible oaths applied for admission to his church, he sustained the objections of some members, and ruled that they were entitled to time to prove the truth of their objections. A committee was appointed, and during the discussions that followed he preached three times on the subject, and the church voted that the "system" of Freemasonry was "utterly wrong," and they could not enter into covenant with any who adhered to it. The substance of those sermons he published in a book soon after. This was among his last writings.

But these brief sketches are already too long and the rest must be omitted. Those who would enjoy "a feast of fat things" should read his autobiography."

Two weeks before his 83d birthday, as the Sabbath sun was setting, he stepped out with his beloved wife to hear and join the song of the evening service at his great church near by—and in the "morning watch" the "angel of the covenant" came and he "entered within the veil" to join the everlasting song.

BRIEF REMINISCENCES OF PRESIDENT FINNEY.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

To no one man am I more indebted for blessings that shall abide with me for ever, than to Pres. Finney. I saw and heard him first in 1830 during his first great revival work in Rochester, New York. O that awful sermon from Rom. 6: 23, "The wages of sin is death." It thundered in my ears, and I could repeat nearly the whole of the sermon, for years. This newly vamped "second probation" nonsense was swept away by his fiery logic like flax in the flame.

In after years I sat as a pupil at his feet. At first I could not endure those terribly searching eyes, but as I became more intimate with him, it was a luxury to sit and look into the depths of his great soul, now gushing with joy, and now sorrowing, in tears and groans. Sometimes so overwhelmed would he be with emotion, that he would fall upon his knees crying out, "O I cannot preach," and then he would call upon some one to pray while he wept aloud.

I shall grieve to the end of life that I did not take notes of his prayers. Such prayers I shall never hear again. It was a hard heart that did not melt when he prayed. Frequently his prayers were more like intimate conversation with God. He had a method of minutely describing events or characters or conditions of things like no other person to whose prayers I have listened. How many times I have exerted all my strength to restrain myself from crying aloud, while he bore us, on his wondrous intercessions, to the very throne in the heavens.

In the midst of a protracted drought, when the heavens above were brass and the earth beneath our feet was parched and powdered, the man of God entered the pulpit of a Sabbath morning and prayed for rain. Oh how he did plead, and reason and beg and argue with God? And ere the service closed the bottles of heaven were opened to the delight and joy of thousands. He stopped in the midst of the descending torrent and said: "Let us praise God for this rain." Many could not sing for weeping.

His audience betimes were moved like the shaking of the cedars of Lebanon. His descriptive powers excelled any person's to whom I ever listened. I was once sitting by a lady with a babe in her arms. While Mr. Finney was describing the scene in which Solomon showed his wisdom, by commanding the living child to be divided with the sword; so graphic was his portrayal that the lady with a terrified look clasped her babe to her bosom.

A lady of his church having to endure the trial of the amputation of a limb, sent for Mr. Finney. He seating himself by her side, so fascinated her thoughts with heavenly themes, that the surgeon's instruments performed their work without evoking a groan while he talked to her.

While he had the tenderest of hearts his sternness was awful. I have known him to pour the vials of wrath on the head of persons in certain states of mind, and then turn away and weep and groan over the terrible wounds he had inflicted.

Never did a theological instructor lay such stress on the duty of his pupils being filled with the Holy Ghost. "You had better enter the pulpit naked" he would say, "than to be bereft of the Spirit." How mightily he prayed for the enduement of the Spirit on his students, before they went forth on their mission, none but those who heard him can know. I travelled that part of New York where were his early revivals, and every where he was spoken of with the profoundest reverence. All over the country are places blessed by his labors that are not mentioned in his memoir. It may be said of him as of the Saviour, "If all were written the world itself could not contain the books."

Like all reformers his life was an unsuspended battle with wickedness in high places and low. He was raised up for a special mission.

AN ODD-FELLOW'S PRAYER.

BY REV. WM. JOHNSTON.

Some weeks since I sent some account of an Odd-fellow's testimony in favor of his order, and now allow me to speak of an Odd-fellow's prayer. I did not hear the prayer myself, but had the report of it from a Presbyterian elder who is entirely trustworthy. He attended an Odd-fellow festival—not as a critic, but as an ordinary spectator may often be found at such places, who has no very decided convictions on the subject of secret orders.

The banquet was graced with the presence of a Methodist minister, who was called on to lead in prayer at the opening of the festivities. Our Presbyterian elder at different times had heard that minister lead in prayer amid different surroundings, and therefore his prayer as an Odd-fellow was the more noticeable. The prayer was so Christless in its character, so utterly ignored the one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus, that he could not but mark the contrast. The result was that the elder came away with more decided convictions than he ever had before, and is not likely to seek initiation. To some this may appear a small matter; but to the man who loves and honors his Saviour it must appear a great matter. It is not prayer in Christ's name, and can only be an abomination in the sight of God. It is true the mere use of the form of words "in Christ's name," or "for Christ's sake," will not in itself make a prayer acceptable to God; but it seems to me shocking impiety to omit any such form of words at the bidding of an order that ostracises the name of Jesus, and attempts to unite the friends and enemies of Jesus in a covenant of friendship, by requiring them in each other's company to ignore all that is peculiar in their religious views. Is this anything less than denying Christ before men.

There is a question here worthy the serious consideration of the Christian, viz., Who is it that is required to make the sacrifice? Odd-fellows as well as Masons require their members to lay aside their prejudices at the door of the lodge—that is, all that is peculiar in their religious views. The Christian in our country meets with the infidel, the atheist, the irreligious, and in meeting with these it must be on a common religious plane. He must lay aside Christ and his atonement and even pray as if there was no Mediator between God and man. But what does the infidel and the atheist lay aside? Nothing, absolutely nothing. He is the same unwashed infidel or atheist in the lodge that he is anywhere else. But it is said—he is required to acknowledge a God. True it is so written in the book, yet I have too much respect for my God to pay religious honors to his god. Several times during the last few months I have come in contact with skeptics who talked glibly about God, and asserted that they believed in a God just as firmly as any one. But I have learned to press home upon them this question, Do you believe in a personal God who made you, and to whom you must at last give in your accouut? And on pressing this inquiry, I have invariably found that they did not believe in a personal God.

There is not then an iota of principle sacrificed by the man whose God is evolution, or law, or the awful unknown, or any other substitute for the great Jehovah. He can form any conception he pleases and call it God. But at the door of the lodge, or even at the entrance of the banquet hall of Odd-fellows and Masons, the Christian is required to lay aside those great principles which are the very heart's blood of his religion. Is there an earnest, intelligent Christian that can endure such a sacrifice as this?

But the light is breaking, and the works of darkness are hasting to their fall.

Dear Cynosure, toil on and pray on in Christ's name. One prayer in Christ's name is worth ten thousand or ten million in the name of love, friendship and fidelity, or any other catchwords that men would make passwords to heaven. Take fresh courage from the fact that the Christless prayers of Masons and Odd-fellows are opening the eyes of men to see their anti-Christian character, and thus swelling the tide of opposition.

College Springs, Iowa.

UNEQUALLY YOKED.

A church that supports a meeting in partnership with the world is unequally yoked. Proof; the Unitarian schism that wrested from the Congregational body one third part of their meeting houses, and the low state of piety that invariably follows such a partnership. A union of church and world is but the image the union of church and state. The king that pays the priest owns him, and the world that feeds the minister will rule him.

The Christian who goes into a business partnership with an ungodly man will ere long be obliged to abandon his religion or retire from the firm.

The maxims of the business world are wrong and hence the Christian will have the short end of the yoke.

That unthinking multitude of professed Christians who are swarming into secret lodges controlled by irreligious men are unequally yoked in the most emphatic sense. The satanic principle of sworn or pledged secrecy so contrary to the Bible (Lev. 5:4) and reason is cunningly devised to render impossible gospel repentance and confession of sin.

The Christian who marries an irreligious person is unequally yoked in a life of misery. How can two persons honestly promise to walk together when it is their fixed purpose to walk in contrary directions as to the most important concerns of life?

How many backslidings would be saved if men would heed the wise teaching of the inspired apostle. Bunyan's pilgrim put his fingers in his ears and ran from the City of Destruction. Not so the careless professor of to-day. He sees no harm in spending a pleasant hour at Vanity Fair. How many professed Christians have more regard for the customs of society and their worldly interests than for the plain precepts of the Bible. There was a time when among professed Christians a "thus saith the Lord" was supposed to end all debate and guide all true believers. Now, alas! the faithful preacher has by no means won his case before the Christian public when he shows beyond all controversy that he presents Bible truth. Says the time-serving church: I know I should not be Says the time-serving church: I know I should not be in bondage to the world, but I cannot otherwise raise $1,000 per year to pay the preacher. Says the Christian business partner: I know my conscience will suffer, but it is a good chance to better my temporal prospects. Says the Mason or Odd-fellow: I know the lodge slights the Lord Jesus Christ, and so does many other things which I cannot approve, but it helps me in my business. And so of the rest. Temporal interests stand first. Eternal interests take their chance afterwards. Hence the dearth of spiritual power in the church and the decline of piety in the hearts of many.

NO RELEASE.

"Could you, if you desired to, get out of Odd-fellowship?" asked an inquirer of an Odd-fellow. "I do not know, I never thought of the question," was the reply. The gentleman confessed that he was "not posted" in the rules. Had he recalled the language of the first obligation he could have answered correctly. Towards the close of the initiatory obligation this promise is made: "Should I be expelled or voluntarily leave the order, I will consider this promise as binding out of it as in it."

This language covers all the promises sworn to in the preceding part of the oath, so that there is no release from the obligation after it is once taken. This pledge not only refers to the promise of secrecy, but to the promise to warn a brother Odd-fellow of approaching danger; strictly speaking it not only binds him not to oppose the order, but requires him forever to uphold it.

This interpretation accords with known facts. Fifty-four per cent. of the members are said to withdraw every seven years. During the past seven years several hundred thousand members have voluntarily withdrawn from the order to return no more. Yet all of that vast army are compelled to keep silence about their convictions against the order and when necessity requires they can be forced into the attitude of defence, as for example when they are compelled to aid in suppressing all public discussion.

This is a feature of all secret orders. It is the Satanic device for covering their tracks. Were this requirement of continued obligation removed these orders would speedily succumb, hence every effort is made to make it appear criminal to cast off these wicked obligations. If those who withdraw could speak out their convictions, it would soon stop the tide of initiations and the orders would speedily fall. —N. E. American.

WHO ARE RATIONAL?

BY GEORGE H. WILLIAMS.

Reason is that power by which man perceives, among other things, the relations of things to each other; as, for example, great or small; important or unimportant; which require the first and most earnest attention and which may be left to after care.

Suppose Jehovah should say to a man, Man! you may have all the world, all its honors, riches, pleasures; all its everything that can be enjoyed; you may have all this for one second of time. But if you take this, all the rest of one hundred years of life that I will give you on the earth shall be in poverty, misery, contempt. Or, instead of this, I will give one hundred years of comfortable life on the earth; you shall be neither rich nor poor. How quickly every one would say that the man who on such an offer should take all the world was a very great fool. Why? Because he chose a possession so very brief, and took for so long thereafter misery, contempt and poverty, instead of having for all this long period a comfortable life.

There are, according to the commonly estimated length of the year, 3,155,692,860 seconds in one hundred years. Ten figures will express all these, and these figures may be plainly—legibly—printed in a line half an inch long. Add three ciphers and it will express all the seconds in 100,000 years; add three more ciphers and it will express all the seconds in 100,000,000 years; and still the printed line is not one inch long. Extend this line to millions of miles in length and it could not approach an expression of the duration of eternity. All the seconds in 100 years can be easily and briefly expressed. Ten figures will do that. How many hundreds of years in eternity?

You may call the attention of many men to these Bible truths which they accept; that Jehovah offers an eternity of great happiness to all men, on conditions that all may fulfil if they will. That if they reject these conditions they must inevitably suffer eternal punishment. That this life is short at the longest, and very uncertain; that death is certain and may come very soon, and at the farthest cannot be far off. You may call their attention to all these things, which they accept as truth, and perhaps they will be no more moved than if they were dead. If one urges these truths upon their immediate attention with an energy far—far less than the case demands they will perhaps call him a fanatic, or insane, or a fool. Are they rational?

At best reason and conscience are asleep. Who can awaken them? Only Jehovah. Shall it be just before, or after death? No preaching of a possible future probation will awaken them. They are "under the law." The thunders of Sinai may awaken them in this life. Then they may be ready to welcome "the gospel's joyful sound." If they truly accept, welcome it, they are saved. (Acts 2:41.)

REFORM STORY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "LITTLE PEOPLE," "A SUNNY LIFE," ETC.

CHAPTER XXXIX. (CONTINUED.) —A FORETASTE.

He never stopped to question, as one ignorant of the nature of secret organizations would be very likely to, the credibility of the child's warning; whether it were not possible that one of such tender years might have mistaken the real tenor of the talk he had overheard. A man who according to his own confession to the elder had been so thoroughly enslaved in conscience by his Masonic obligations that he would have taken human life at the command of his superiors and thought he was only doing his duty was not very likely to doubt the existence of men in the lodge who would have no scruple about commiting arson at a similar bidding.

"But the men who do such things are the scum of the community as a rule," objects one of those would-be defenders of the lodge, whose name is legion, and whose sole knowledge of the Masonic system is based on whatever fact or fiction any Mason in the plenitude of his wisdom may kindly vouchsafe to impart.

Were the men who murdered Morgan the scum of Western New York? Were the Ku-Klux Klans with their midnight reign of desolation and terror the scum of the South? And, granted this assertion to be a fact, why does not the lodge skim off a little of the aforesaid "scum" by denouncing the acts and expelling the offenders? But instead, it elevated Morgans' murderers to higher honors, and fraternized with the secret orders of the South their hands still crimson with the blood of hapless negroes and unoffending Union men.

What is the language of facts like these?

It is true that in the present case a drinking profane fellow who had as little regard for the rules of Lindley or Murray as he had for the ten commandments, had been talked and fuddled into the idea that no one else could so scientifically "roast out the elder, and teach him to mind his own business," of whose particular object and scope it will be remembered that the lodge had remarkably clear ideas. But did this poor catspaw for secret iniquity, who though worthless and degraded was no fool, undertake such a business without knowing that he was backed up by the oaths of the whole fraternity, ministers, judges, and officers of the law not excepted, to keep his crime forever a secret. Then where should the responsibility be laid? I leave it to the honest, candid reader who has followed me in my story thus far, to say.

It was a night partly clear, partly cloudly, with a few stars peeping out, and a brisk wind blowing. The elder lived about a mile the other side of the river from Bundy's Flats.

Mr. Bundy urged his horse through the stream, and just as he emerged on the opposite shore a tongue of flame shot up, reddening the night heavens. It was in the direction the elder lived, and with a smothered exclamation he put spurs to his steed and dashed forward towards the scene of the conflagration.

The barn had caught first. The elder awakened by the glare flashing across his eyes, and not conscious as yet that the same insiduous foe was beginning to wreathe in serpentine rings the framework of the house itself, roused his sleeping wife and rushed out intent on rescuing if possible the faithful horse that had borne him so many long miles in his Master's service. But it was too late. The fire had made too great a headway, and the elder himself in his vain attempt to rescue the poor animal ventured too far; for as he turned to retreat driven back by the smoke and flames he was struck by a timber from the burning building and felled to the ground.

Rough but kindly hands instantly dragged him to a place of safety, and dashed cold water over his face and hands. Mr. Bundys' prompt appearance on the scene had saved the elders' life, but none of his worldy possessions beyond a few valuables hastily snatched from the burning house, which in ten minutes was one sheet of hissing, crackling flame, and in ten more a smouldering ruin.

The elders' injuries proved serious. For days and weeks it seemed to himself and to others as if his work on earth was done. But he rallied slowly. His manner of living, temperate as an anchorites, was in his favor, and when Spring again returned he was lecturing and preaching with all his old time zeal and not a whit profited by his woeful experience.

Nobody doubted that Masonic vengeance had fired his buildings. At the same time Mark received that need of sympathy so freely given to persecuted reformers in the anti-slavery times: "It is too bad, such a good man as Elder Stedman is,—but why can't he let Masonry alone?"

CHAPTER XL.

THE VICTORY OVER THE BEAST.

A very old, and in his day, unpopular reformer has thus summed up his personal experience: "Perseeuted but not forsaken, cast down but not destroyed, chastened but not killed;" thus epitomizing for all future ages the experience of those elect souls who stand out from among their fellow men with a prophet's commission of rebuke and warning, and with too often a prophet's fate of being misunderstood and rejected by the generation to whom they are sent. To Mark Stedman the Apostle's paradox seemed no strange thing. Ever since that hour of bitter discouragement and unlooked for lifting up, he had never lost the conseiousness of a victorious divine power working in him and through him, turning sorrow into joy and defeat into triumph, and making his pathway always radiant with the light that streams from the Paradise of God. But there was one more cup of trial for him to drink. He had seen it looming dimly in the distance ever since his talk with Elder Chadband—the same cup which has been pressed to the lips of many a devoted servant of God. The church he loved, in whose service he had grown gray, was about to cast him out, and for no other reason than because he loved her too well and served her too faithfully to tolerate the secret iniquity she cherished in her bosom.

"The fact is," said Mark, when Rachel and I, having heard some hint of this new trouble, rode over to see him, "it has long been a preeoncerted thing between Elder Chadband and some other members of the conference to oust me from it if they possibly can. And now they think the time is ripe. The charges are frivolous and unfounded, but they will expel me whether the evidence sustains them or not. I have no reason to expect anything else."

"Oh, Mark!" exclaimed Rachel indignantly; "when you have been such a faithful shepherd of souls, a preacher after Wesley's own heart, instant in season and out of season; never thinking of gain or ease like others —now to turn round and kick you out of the ministry. It is shameful, abominable!"

"I think I shall have to talk to you as I do to good brother Bundy," answered Mark, smiling on his excited sister. "Ever since his wonderful conversion from Masonry to Christ he has stood out against the threats and persecution of the lodge as bold as a lion. I shall never forget how he came to my help once in the sorest soul strait I ever knew, like one sent of God; or how nobly he has stood by me ever since. But I must confess there are times when I find the old Adam in him very troublesome; and the late action of the conference has stirred him up to such a degree that I could hardly talk him into anything like calmness. He is a genuine son of thunder. If he had his way he would call down fire from heaven on all the lodges in the land and burn them up like the cities of the plain. But he is a great, grand, large hearted disciple nevertheless."

"It is hard," said the elder's wife, who had been silent hitherto; "very hard that Mark should be turned out of the ministry in his old age for the crime of being too faithful to souls. And I must say that at first I felt a good deal like sister Rachel. I couldn't be reeoneiled. But now I feel differently. They who would live godly in this life must suffer persecution. It is not the church which is doing all this to Mark; it is that terrible spirit of anti-Christ which has taken possession of the church. God give us strength to 'withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand.'"

So spoke the elder's wife, who had not forgotten her girlhood's terrible experience with this same spirit of the lodge. It had persecuted her father to his death in like manner as it was now persecuting her husband. But this plain-faced, quiet-looking woman had as truly the martyr's seed within her as any of those worthy women of old times, who receive such glowing mention in the Epistle to the Hebrews.

There was a moment's silence, and then the conversation turned to family matters, for only the week before the last of our home-birds had flown in a mist of white muslin and orange blossoms. Anson Lovejoy, though a staid, elderly man, had not found his superior years any bar to winning Grace. And thus Rachel and I were again left—I was about to say as in the first year of our married life alone with each other—but there was one very important difference in the fact that no lodge oath now came between us to part asunder those whom God had joined together.

But as Mark and I stood by the open door, talking over the matter of his approaching trial, I suddenly noticed how aged the elder had grown. Yet never had he seemed more like the Mark of old times—with the intense ideality and enthusiasm that had onee led him such a fool's chase through the swamps and fogbanks of error, when he mistook a deluding ignis fatui for the guiding star of truth—the brave loyalty, the burning devotiou that had characterized his first surrender of every worldly ambition at the call of Christ, not one whit abated, he was the same Mark Stedman who sat on the back stoop, in the glow of that far away spring sunset, when we talked together about joining the lodge.

"It has been a hard warfare, Leander," he said; "but I would not wish to enter heaven with one honorable sear the less."

"Well, Mark," said I, "I must say I don't feel easy at the risk you are constantly running. There is a German proverb that 'the pitcher that goes often to the well gets broken at last,' and in spite of the assertion lodgemen sometimes make that 'they have stopped killing since Morgan's day,' I know the last martyr has not yet been sacrificed to the implacable spirit of the lodge."

"Well, Leander, I have always said that if the cause of truth requires the saerifice of my life, I am willing to be offered. But it seems to me that I already see—whether in prophetic hope or positive reality I can hardly tell—the first feeble beginnings of a great reform whieh is destined to sweep the ehureh and nation. Intelligent freemen cannot long resist conclusions forced upon them as they have so lately been forced upon the people of Granby. And when onee the question is carried to the ballot box, the lodge will see the hand-writing on the wall."

I was about to answer, but Mark suddenly turned pallid, and sinking into the nearest chair eovered his face for a moment with his hands.

"You are ill," I said, in alarm. But Mark only made a deprecatory gesture.

"Don't call any one. Hannah knows nothing of these ill turns, and I don't care to have her, for I think they are some after result of the accident that happened to me last spring, and I am hoping will pass entirely away when I gain my full health and strength. I thank God that it only affected my body and not my mind. I can deliver as sturdy blows for the truth as I ever did."

I was not quite satisfied, but my mind was too fully possessed by other fears to attach much importance to a passing indisposition which he himself treated so lightly, knowing as I did that he had gone to work long before his health was entirely recovered. I saw him beset by mobs, or waylaid in his solitary journeyings; but I did not see that his brave, noble heart was breaking in a martyrdom slower but not less sure than if the knife or the bullet of the secret assassin had been permitted to wreak their deadly vengeanee.

As Mark needed me for a witness, I attended the meeting of the conferenee, but I will not trouble the reader with any wearisome details of the proceedings. Suffice it to say that the specifications read by Elder Chadband really amounted to but two:—"Speaking to the injury of his brother ministers, and neglecting his proper work on the circuit to lecture against Masonry."

To these charges Mark pleaded not guilty, and a cross examination of witnesses elicited nothing farther than the fact that on several occasions, when his spirit had been especially stirred within him by the lodge idolatry of some of the leading members of the conference, he had denounced them freely as "hireling shepherds" who fed not the flock, and consequently had not the smallest business to be in the ministry at all. As to neglecting his proper work to lecture on Masonry, it was clearly proved that he had held on an average as many preaching services as any other member of the conference; and it was also clearly proved that the leading proseeutor, Elder Chadband himself, had been known more than once to neglect his regular ministerial work to participate in the ceremonies at some Masonic gathering. But what avails innocence against inquisitorial power? They could tolerate no longer the rebuke of Mark's presence among them, and were bound to cast him out, or, to use Elder Chadband's expression, "put him where he could do the least harm."

Mark had no counsel, and made his own defense before the conference.

"Brethren," he said, "I stand among you accused of serious charges, which the witness against me has utterly failed to prove. You, in your secret hearts, know that the real ground of the accusation is my uncompromising hostility to Freemasonry. That hostility will never abate. It will only grow stronger with every breath I draw. I boldly declare that the Rules of Discipline faithfully carried out would expell every Masonic pastor in this conference. There are no less than sixty-nine different oaths in the first seven degrees of Masonry. And this, in the face of that part of the Discipline which forbids 'all vain and rash swearing,' and any taking of oaths 'save when the magistrate may require in a cause of faith and charity, so it be done according to the prophet's teaching in justice, judgment, and truth.' Is there justice, judgment, or truth in these obligations with their fiendish penalties, their terrible trifling with Jehovah's name?

"I charge Masonic pastors everywhere with the sin of Balaam. They cause God's people to err, they deny the Lord that bought them, and will surely, unless the Spirit of the Lord enlightens them to repentance, bring upon themselves swift destruetion. 'Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture, saith the Lord.' Shall I, by keeping silent, incur their doom? Nay, ten thousand times better be shut out not only from the Methodist church but from every church iu the land.

"I have offended in no point the rules of the Discipline. I have ever striven to go in and out among you with a eonscience void of offense and in a spirit of meekness and charity towards all meu. The Lord judge between us and lay not to your charge the sin of casting me out for no other reason than because I refuse to bow the knee to Baal."

Mark sat down. Onee more he had flung his gage of defianee at the Beast.

The after proeeedings did not seem to interest him. He sat with a strange look on his faee, a high celestial expression, as of one who had fought his last battle and conquered his last foe; and was waiting in serene silence the moment of palms and shouts of victory, and lifting of triumphal gates.

The committee retired and in a little while made their report, which was to the effeet that they had found all the charges against Elder Stedman sustained, and therefore adjudged him suspended from the ministry of the chureh and all chureh privileges.

The elder started as if to rise and speak, but sank baek in his chair with a groan. The medical man who was hastily summoned could do nothing more than pronounee his verdict—a case of heart trouble indueed by the aceident which befell him on the night of the fire, and suddenly developed to a fatal result by the excitemeut attending the trial.

Mark Stedman had borne his last testimony against the lodge. Shut out from the church militant he had entered the ranks of the ehurch triumphant.

"And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire, and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark and over the number of his name, stand upon the sea of glass having the harps of God."

My story is ended. It is the experience of one man and must ueeessarily fail in giving a complete pieture of that terrible secret system which binds men's souls in a network of oaths and obligations to do—they know not what. But such as it is let the facts here given—for they are facts which can be indisputably proved—speak for themselves.

Freemen of America! I appeal to you, will you bow your necks to wear the yoke of the Secret Empire? or will you waken to the danger before it is too late? It has no respect for human rights. It is monarchical, despotic, inquisitorial. It breathed its first breath under the shadow of throned corruption and priestly rule. It is as alien to the principles of a free republic as light is to darkness. And on you depends the question, which shall rule this fair land, the few or the many; the spirit of caste, or the spirit of equality? The weal or woe of future generations hinges on your answer.

Churches of America, God has a controversy with his American Zion. In your midst is a horrible thing—a gigantic religious system which ignores his Son and proposes to do the Holy Spirit's work of regeneration for men—a system as dark, cruel and unclean in its principles and teachings as the ancient Moloch, tolerated and worshiped! Christian ministers officiating at its altars, wearing its dress and sounding its praises! Is it strange that the ways of Zion mourn? that the bright gold is dimmed and tarnished? The Lord our God is a jealous God. He will not give his glory to another. He speaks now in the still small voice of warning and entreaty. How soon he may speak in the whirlwinds of judgment who can tell? Before it be too late heed his voice who walketh in the midst of the seven goldeu candlesticks. "Repent, or else I will come quiekly and will fight against thee with the sword of my mouth."

Members of the Masonic order, honest men, kind hearted lovers of truth and justice—for I know there are many such among you—who secretly loath the iron yoke of your slavery, to you I would make appeal. Assert your God-given manhood. Deny the power of the lodge to bind for a moment what he has forever loosed. Your eountry needs you, but she wants freemen, not slaves. God needs you in the great warfare of these latter days against anti-Christ, but he wants men with the martyr spirit who have overcome the Beast through the blood of the Lamb and gained the victory over his mark.

The issue lies before you. If the Lord be God follow him, but if Baal then follow him. On which side will you take your stand? Will you be the slaves of the lodge, holden with cords of secret iniquity, or Christ's freemen?

THE END.

Reform News.

THE CHAMBERSBURG CONVENTION.

Chambersburg, Pa.. Feb. 16, 1883.

Dear Cynosure:—On the 7th and 8th inst. I lectured to interesting congregations at the Wesleyan church, Jaekson Valley, Pa.; on the 9th at LeRaysville in a hired hall; on the 11th in the M. E. church at East Herrick; and on the 12th, morning and evening, in the Wesleyan church at Herriekville. At each of these places I found faithful brethren and friends. Rev. E. Barnetson, who labors on this work. is a faithful reformer, and able man.

I reached Chambersburg on the morning of the 13th, and found that our convention had been well advertised. In the evening the friends of reform met promptly in the King St. church and held a devotional meeting. A revival has been in progress in this church since Dec. 26th, with continued and inereasing interest. At 7:45 the exereises of the convention eommeneed with an address of welcome by the pastor, Rev. W. O. Tobey, after which H. H. Hinman spoke on the relation of the secret orders to the Gospel of Christ. The church was full and all were attentive.

Convention met at 9 A. M. of the 14th. An hour was spent in devotional exercises, after which Rev. F. C. Weidler was ehosen chairman pro tem, and Bro. J. S. Yaukey secretary. Committees were then chosen on Enrollment, Business, Finance, Resolutions, Reform literature, and Organization.

The eommittee on Organization reported:

For President: Rev. J. M. Bishop, of Chambersburg.

1st Vice President, S. C. Weidler; 2d Vice President, David Lefever; (Pa.); 3d Vice President, W. H. Showalter, (Pa.); 4th Vice President, Caleb Wyand, (Md.); 5th Vice President, Joseph Bowes, Washington, D. C.

J. S. Yaukey, Recording Sec'y.; Miss Sallie Fohl, Corresponding Sec'y.; and Levi Oyler, Sr., Treasurer.

Executive Committee: J. M. Bishop, J. S. Yaukey, and Levi Oyler, Sr.

The report was adopted and the brethren elected.

The committee on resolutions presented the following:

1st. Whereas, The Christian Scriptures were given by inspiration of God, and constitute the Great Charter of our eivil and religious liberty, and

Whereas, All constitutions, laws, and institutions, ought to be in conformity with their teachings, therefore,

Resolved, That our national Constitution ought to recognize these truths and acknowledge the Lord Jesus Christ as the supreme Ruler of men.

2d. Whereas, The institution of Freemasonry has been proved by its history, its acknowledged teachings, and its internal character, to be hostile to Christianity and destructive to civil equality; therefore,

Resolved, That we regard its immense power and influence with sorrow and alarm, and its practical endorsement by some of the churches and ministry, as indieating a deplorable decline in piety and morals.

Resolved, That the so-called minor secret orders are wholly needless for the accomplishment of any good object and are training schools for the more dangerous and distinctly anti-Christian organizations.

Resolved, That the secret trades unions, under pretense of protecting labor, have denied to laborers their rights, enforced idleness, promoted crime, and in many ways impaired the efficiency and diminished the income of labor, and ought, therefore, to he suppressed.

Resolved, That while we regard the traffic in intoxicating drinks as a crime, and that every consideration of justice and humanity demands its suppression, we look in vain for relief to legislators, civil officers, and jurors, who are in sworn fellowship with brewers, distillers, and saloon-keepers, and that the success of prohibition demands the breaking up of the secret rings, and especially the overthrow of their mother, the Masonic order.

Resolved, That we commend the N. C. A. and the Christian Cynosure, and we especially rejoice in the inauguration of Christian reform work in our National Capital, and we heartily commend that enterprise to the support of all friends of Christianity and good government.

Resolved, That we heartily approve of the platform and candidates of the American Party, and we hope to see a co-operation of all reformers in one united phalanx for the promotion of righteous civil government.

The discussion of these resolutions was spirited, and occupied the time till 5 P. M., when they were unanimously adopted.

In the evening Repository Hall, the largest in the city, was filled to overflowing, to witness the working of the Entered Apprentice degree of Masonry by S. E. Starry, of Iowa. The work was admirably done, and full explanations were given. With a few exceptions good order was maintained, and an excellent impression produced.

Convention met Thursday at 9 A. M., and spent an hour in devotion. The committee on Organization then presented a constitution for "The Christian Association for Southeast Pennsylvania and adjoining localities," which, after full discussion, was approved, and the officers of this convention made the officers of the Association.

The Finance Committee reported the expenses of the convention at $62.00, and a collection was taken for its payment. Resolutions were adopted commending "The United Brethren in Christ" and "The Highway of Holiness," published in Chambersburg, and all other papers friendly to our reform. Thanks were voted to the citizens for generous hospitality; to the King St. church for the use of its house; to the proprietors of Repository Hall for reduced rents; and to the press of the city for kindly and courteous mention; "and above all to God, who has so abundantly blessed us."

The convention then adjourned, to meet at the call of the Executive Committee. But the congregation could not disperse without a season of thanksgiving and praise, in which some time was spent, and with shoutings and rejoicings of great joy.

By 7 P. M. Repository Hall was packed to its utmost capacity, when Bro. S. E. Starry worked the Master Mason's degree with great effect. There was much difficulty in preserving order, but there was no serious disorder. The single policeman did his best, and the great body of the audience listened with fixed attention.

Although the weather has been very bad and the walking dangerous on account of the ice. the attendance has been good, especially by the sisters, and the spirit of the convention harmonious and deeply religious. Much credit is due to Rev. W. O. Tobey and others who labored to make it a success. It is suggested that the next meeting be held in Philadelphia. Bro. Starry has been invited to give his experience as a Mason and a seceder tonight in the King St. church, and other work in this region is waiting for him. H. H. Hinman.

HOW GOES THE WORK IN MICHIGAN?

Dear Cynosure:—I did not go to Eaton county. Elder Bradshaw had engaged a house and made arrangements for the meetings; but ministers and others suddenly turned against it, and the house was refused us. But it made quite a stir and Bro. B. writes me that when the weather gets warmer they intend to have the lectures.

The meetings I held in Ingham county were the best I have attended for a good while. I traveled eighty miles on the cars and about thirty on foot. I had a blessed time on the cars. The Masons all wilted and God blessed me. The conductor took sides with me nobly. But he wanted to know if I felt clear about violating the oaths. He could see that they were wicked and without authority; but how about my own conscience? I answered that I violated no obligation. I repented of the sin of taking the oaths and renounced them. The men all said that the idea was new to them. The conductor said, "Put the thing down or we will all be ruined." I distributed tracts and the Weed pamphlet and met with many things that I should gladly report, had I space.

I have just spent five days in Detroit. I went in response to an earnest call to help in meetings. I saw glorious good accomplished. Very intelligent men were amazed beyond measure when I told my lodge experience. One congregation, where I spoke several times, had never heard anything about the reform work or the lodge work. They had never seen the Cynosure. I will supply them with reform literature and hope they will take the paper. The people need stirring up. We must do a good deal of work for which we will never be rewarded in this world. I took a cold in Detroit, and got my feet very wet in walking home, and it has made me quite sick. But I am getting better. I see much good done wherever I go, for God is with me. It is pleasant to have friends and a help to have means; but I expect to move steadily and triumphantly on whether I have them or not. It is for God to open doors and shut doors, but I must do good as I have opportunity. I enjoy glorious victory through grace.

Four or five years ago the M. E. official board of this city decided not to support any more Masonic preachers. They so informed the (Masonic) P..E. He tried to dissuade them from their purpose; but, failing in the attempt, promised to do the best he could for them. The next man appointed to Pontiac was a high Mason and an Odd-fellow. At the close of his first year the society were determined to ship him. But he plead piteously to be allowed to stay another year. They had mercy on him (though not on themselves) and kept him the second year.

Last fall he was determined to stay the third year. But the whole society positively refused to support or hear him another year. He then wrote a letter to his brother Masons appealing to them as Masons to use their influence Masonically to secure his return. I wrote a letter to Bishop Peck, stating the facts, and told him to send a man religiously inclined—if he could find one in the conference—and if the conferenee would let him do so. They sent a man who says he is not a Mason. He says he is in sentiment an Anti-mason, but he says that he never mentions it in public!

The fact is, Masonry is too well known in Pontiac to give "character" to a preacher. So they send a man to conciliate all parties, and revive a society already hopelessly dead. I have time to give merely the bare facts without comment. In a few days I will give your readers another view of the abominations that are done in the dark in the Masonic "hole in the wall" in Pontiac. Meanwhile, that the people may escape for their lives, let us heed the direction given by the Lord to Ezekiel, "Son of man dig now in the wall." A. H. Springstein.

ORGANIZING FOR VICTORY.

Fort Scott, Kan., Feb. 14, 1883.

I have just held a county convention in this place with good results. The weather was horrid, thawing and raining. The mud was terrible, and the rain incessant; but the Lord gave us the victory. We effected an organization of the county for vigorous work. Brothers Worrell and Curtis were down from Olathe and helped us much. Brother J. A. Richards was at home and threw his great soul into the convention. Brother Fisk, the pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, is now our secretary, and I hope that the county will be canvassed before another year rolls round. I go to Topeka to try to organize Shawnee county, so as to be ready for the State meeting in the fall. We have already engaged the Young Men's Christian Association rooms, which are quite central, and brother Milligan, of North Cedar, has promised to be there and deliver a lecture on the relation of the lodge to the infidelity of the day. I have undertaken the work of organizing the different counties as far as they are prepared for it. I have arrangements ahead for Shawnee and Osage counties. P. S. Feemster.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.
E. D. Bailey, N. E. Sec'y.

A Knight Templar was heard to say, recently, that "A man who bothers with the Bible is a fool."

One man says, "There will be many a soul lost through belonging to secret orders."

An adhering Mason recently acknowledged, in private conversation, that our exposition of Freemasonry is true.

A friend remarks that the majority of defaulters belong to secret societies. Probably that is the reason why the majority get off without punishment.

A physician in this city stated that he has lost cases of young men, who might have been saved if they had not been so poisoned with tobacco.

It is seldom that a Catholic is found who is a member of secret associations; but there was a priest at Ayer, Mass.. who joined the Masons and was dismissed from his parish in consequence.

It is an encouraging fact that churches who have heretofore tamely submitted to Masonic preachers, are becoming more watchful and look out for men untrammeled with lodge affinities. Masonic gospel does not convert men to Christ.

A gentleman recently gave his experience of Masonic justice as follows: He gave part of his property in charge of his son, who squandered it on the secret societies to which he belonged, and in attempting to recover it in the courts he lost the rest of it by Masonic connivance.

A Mason said recently that a few secret society men in a church could control it and it was better for the church, and that it helped a minister to belong to secret orders, as he could then use phrases which the secretists could understand and gain their favor and get better places.

One of the editors of a Lowell paper states that he first learned of Bishop's Anti-masonry from an Odd-Fellow, who was evidently influenced against Bishop by his hostility to secret orders.

Another minister reports that he has been secretly advised by a Christian brother, a Mason, not to join the lodge. This brother did not dare give such advice openly, but being appealed to he still had manhood enough to speak against his own secret obligation in confidence.

Mr. Spaulding obtained some interesting statistics at Ayer. In conversation with a Mason, the latter claimed that Masonry could not be very bad because so many church members belonged. Mr. Spaulding asked him what proportion of his lodge members belonged to the church. He thought about one half, but on examining the records he found that out of seventy members of the lodge there were only seven church members.

Mr. Geo. M. Morse preached against Masonry in the M. E. church at Putnam, Conn., while supplying the pulpit for the pastor. He told his hearers that if they had the grace of God in their hearts they would have no taste for secret societies.

The Congregational church at Wilbraham, Mass., postponed its own meetings to accommodate lodge meetings.

A gentleman residing in Lowell, Mass., claims to have good evidence that the Anti-masonic sentiments of Hon. R. R. Bishop, late Republican candidate for Governor against Butler, Democrat, were openly discussed in a Masonic lodge of that city. That city is Butler's home and this circumstance furnishes another link in the chain of evidence that Butler's Masonry elected him.

Brother Stephen Grover writes from Maine as follows: "While pursuing my business, travelling in some parts of this State, I am improving such opportunities as come in my way to say a word for my Master, in distributing tracts where they will do good. Many for the first time learn the surprising nature of Freemasonry. While some are disposed to discard the light, others take hold of it with avidity and wish to know more about it. It is singular how those who have been led only to think that Freemasonry is a good institution will, upon learning the position which I am taking in opposition to it, say that they should think it would injure my business."

Masonic temperance is defined as a virtue that prevents a man from indulging in excess or any vicious habit that might lead him to disclose any of those valuable secrets which he has promised to "ever conceal and never reveal." A Mason broke his obligation recently by getting intoxicated and letting out the secrets to an interested outsider. Masonry must be a good training school for virtue.

A business block was burned last summer in Putnam. Detectives discovered the incendiary to be one of the occupants of the building. The evidence went to show that the incendiary screened himself by his Masonic obligation and a part of the testimony was allowed to be withheld. Nobody doubts the guilt of the man, but he was cleared by the court and goes unpunished. It is probably another example of the interference of lodge oaths with the free course of justice.

A Vermont lady writes as follows: "We conclude your people will not have recourse to the drama and to neck-tie festivals to support their pastor, as is the case here, and they will not be led into card-playing and dancing to make their ladies societies the more attractive and to help out the salary. Can you tell me if it is true that the first neck-tie festival in our country originated in a low dance house in New York City? A lady connected with mission work there said to me some years since, that this was boasted of to a Bible reader and the question was sneeringly asked of her if the churches could not find something better to do than copying them and their ways of raising money."

PREPARATIONS IN CONNECTICUT.

Worcester, Mass., Feb. 19, 1883.

The arrangements for the Connecticut convention, March 20th and 21st, are progressing favorably. Elder J. L. Barlow, Rev. X. A. Welton, Rev. C. S. McCracken and Elder Hezekiah Davis are among those invited to address the convention with good prospect that they may all consent. Other speakers are also in reserve and if there should be an essay by a lady it will only add to the pleasure and profit of the occasion.

It is expected that the convention will open at 2 P. M. Tuesday, the 20th, and continue through the following day and evening. Hartford is so centrally located that friends from both the eastern and western portions of the State can be present. Putnam, where there are so many friends of the reform ought to be represented by several delegates. It seems to me reasonable to expect the largest convention ever held in the State.

An interesting revival is in progress at our new chapel in South Worcester. Meetings were held every evening last week and are to continue during this week. The congregation Sunday filled the chapel and a deep interest prevails, both among the adults and the children. Some have already been converted.

Friends in Brandon, Vt., have written requesting lectures at as early a date as convenient. It is best to fill as many appointments near there as possible when we go there. Will other Vermont friends who want lectures please write to me soon so that I may plan as economical and successful a campaign as possible. One or two men can generally arrange for lectures in any town if they set about it properly. Let those who want to do something for the cause improve this opportunity by arranging for a lecture while the lecturer is at hand.

February 7th, Mr. F. B. King came to our office to make known the fact that that day was the anniversary of the birth of Samuel D. Greene and that at the request of Mr. Greene's son, the doctor, he was to purchase a wreath of flowers to adorn the grave in honor of the veteran reformer. This reminds me that Dr. Greene has requested us to ascertain the expense of a suitable headstone to mark the resting place of his father. E. D. Bailey.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EX-GOVERNOR JEWELL.

Marshall Jewell, a distinguished politician, died suddenly of pneumonia in Hartford, Conn., on the 10th of February, 1883.

In an Anti-masouic work called "Seeret Societies, Ancient and Modern," there is a foot note on page 73 which states that "A governor of oue of our New England States reeently beeame initiated into the third degree of the mysteries of Masonry while a candidate for re-eleetiou. He thus doubtless prepared himself [in the language of Webb] 'to express his notions of government by signs and symbols,' and to conceal from 'vulgar eyes' his 'principles of polity under hieroglyphieal figures.' A Republiean government whieh eharters a 'Masonic Hall Association' at the capital of the country, could do no less than reward such distinguished 'services,' which it has recently done by elevating the governor to a high foreign mission."

The person here alluded to was the deceased Marshall Jewell, ex-governor of Connecticut. He was sent by Gen. Graut to Russia, and from therc was recalled to become Postmaster General in Gen. Grant's Cabinet. Singular as it may seem, the man who had assumed the secret obligations of Masonry, now uudertook to become a reformer, and conduct his office on business principles and not on Masonic priuciples, so little did he seem to be aware of the uature of the Masouic network into whose meshes he had fallen. Of course he soon found himself in disaccord with Gen. Grant, who had risen and was sustained by the aid and favor of the lodge. In consequence he resigned his seat in the Cabinet; and the frauds which he would have corrected remained in full and growing operation through Odd-fellow Hayes' administration down until the honesty of Postmaster General James exposed them to public view.

After the withdrawal of Governor Jewell frou Gen. Grant's Cabinet, he became member aud chairman of the Republican National Committee, and had ever since remained in the active exercise of that office, although the leading and directive element of the party was Freemasonry, which renders all reform perfeetly impossible.

We state these facts because to omit them, as the usual run of the newspapers do, would be hiding very important truths, which are matters of great consequence in forming a right idea of the characters of meu, and of their influence in the affairs of the uatiou. To conceal such vital truths is tantamount to the practice of deception at the very borders of the grave. If Freemasonry is "ancient and honorable," pious, charitable, religious, etc., as it is claimed to be, why conceal from the world that the men who profess and practice its arts are entitled to all its glories?

But as an erring human being ourself, yet as an Anti-mason, we would offer this tribute at the grave of Marshall Jewell: His training and his character were Puritan; and in consequence he was infinitely better than the institution to which, in an evil hour, he resorted for political influeuce, and by which his moral uature had not yet had time to become wholly devitalized and corrupted.

GOD'S REMEDY.

Chicago, Feb. 16, 1883.

For some days past, and more especially this morniug, it has been very much on my mind to write a short article for the Cynosure. I see it has chauged hands, changed quarters, and changed its dress, and thus far every thing done has been done well and done for the better. But it has not changed its tone, its spirit, nor its opposition to secret oath-bound societies and to the liquor traffic—two of the principle agencies used by the devil in these "last and perilous times," in ruling and controlling this world, and in "blinding the minds of those that believe not lest the light of the glorious gospel," or rather "the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ who is the image of God, should shine unto them."—2 Cor. 4: 4.

There is just one thing, however, in which I would like very much to see more of a change in the Cynosure, and that is, in setting before its readers more prominently and more constantly the glorious truth which that gospel proclaims. The Living God has no other remedy for this world, in all its rebellion aud ruin, but Christ, and hence, the Lord Jesus, in Jno. 3: 16, most beautifully and blessedly declares that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." This is the gospel, and nothing else nor nothing less. A world in a perishing condition—a world of rebel sinners rushing madly on to a doomed and a damned eternity, and there the glorious glad news that God—the infinitely holy God—loved such a world as that, and loved it so much that he gave his only begotten Son to die for those very rebel sinners, to bear their guilt in his own blessed person, to enter into the awful judgment due to them, to receive the punishment that they ought to have, to take "the wages" that was their portion, and thus to "put away sin by the sacrifice of himself."—Heb. 9: 26. O, but this is good news for the poor sinner, this surely is "glad tidings," this is "the glorious gospel of the blessed God" (1 Tim. 1: 11), worthy of God and in all respects like himself; aud, beloved reader, this glad news is for you, this blessed message from heaven is sent aud addressed directly to you. Have you ever believed it? Has the light of that glorious truth ever penetrated your heart, that Jesus died for you—died in your room and stead, that "he bore your sius," yours individually, "in his own body on the tree."—1 Pet. 2: 24. And have you received him as your own personal Saviour? If you have not, then you are on the same "broad road" with the very lowest and worst infidel, Mason, or Odd-fellow in the country, and you both are surely hastening on as fast as time ean carry you to the same "lake that burneth with fire and brimstone."—Rev. 20: 11–15.

May the blessed Spirit of God convict you even now as you read these lines of the awful siu of rejecting his Son and thus making God a liar (1 Jno. 5: 10), and may he lead you to take your true place as a guilty rebel sinner and trust in the sinner's Saviour. Many of the readers of the Cynosure, uo doubt, are true and devoted earnest Christians, but many more of them, I'm afraid, are not. In these last and evil days, when sham and hypocrisy so much abound, and when the devil's counterfeit is so extensively eireulated and accepted with such popular favor in preference to the "pure gold" of the kiugdom of God, it is very easy to be deceived, and thousands of honest, well-meaning men and women are deceived and lured on and on to a dark eternity while actively engaged even in the duties of religion, and thinking all the time they are going to heaven. In view of this tremendous fact then, and in view of our own responsibility as wituesses for the Lord Jesus, during this the time of his rejection by a guilty world, "lying in the arms of the wicked one" (1 Jno. 5: 19), and in view also of the further fact that very many unsaved persons, both inside and outside of secret lodges, read the Cynosure every week, the "National Christian Association" ought to see to it, that its weekly testimony be direct and positive for the Lord Jesus Christ as God's only remedy for man's ruin.

Dear frieuds, the time is short, the day is now far spent, the uight is at hand, let us, therefore, be active, and constant, and earnest iu setting forth "Christ crucified" as the power of God and the wisdom of God before a perishing world (1 Cor. 1: 24). It is all well euough in a certain way to set up Hiram Abiff in his mock shroud, or the ghastly skeleton in the Odd-fellows' coffin, for public contempt and scorn, but God wants men and women to look to Calvary; he wants them to "behold the man Christ Jesus as their substitute and sin-bearer; he wants them to see his mangled form, his blessed brow pierced with thorns, the emblem of the curse, because of man's sin; his pierced hands and feet and his bleeding side; and he wants them to listen to his wail of agony, "my God, my God, why hast thou forsakeu me," as he hung upon the cross in the sinuer's stead, a spectacle for men and devils. "He who knew no sin made sin in my behalf that I might be made the righteousness of God in him."—2 Cor. 5: 21. This is truly wonderful, this is iuexpressibly grand, and this, dear friends, is what God wants the world to behold and to accept. He will be pleased with nothing else; he can accept nothing less.

Before writing this article it was somewhat on my mind to say something about Odd-fellowship in relation to God's Word, but I have been led ou and on to write as I have done, and I'm glad of it. It has been a source of much blessing to my own soul just to dwell for a little while once more on God's infinite love to me in giviug his own beloved Son to die for me, a rebel sinner, so as to bring me to himself. May it prove a similar blessing to you, dear reader, and may you "see Jesus" in all the fulness of his perfect atonement for you upon the cross, and in all the beauty and loveliness of his person as your Great High Priest now upon the throne. With the kind permission of the editor it is my intention, from time to time (the Lord willing), to try and discuss the counterfeit as you and I behold it iu lodges and so-called churches, compariug it at the same time with the truth of God as revealed iu his owu blessed word. In my next I may have something to say of the "three liuks" of Odd-fellowship—"Friendship, Love and Truth"—but for the present I simply desirc only to greet all my old friends of the past, and to assure them that while I have ceased to hold up Hiram for contempt and ridicule, I have been endeavoring since last we met to do what I could in holding up the Lord Jesus Christ for acceptance, adoration aud love.

COMING TO THE LIGHT.

A WONDERFUL LETTER FROM A LATE SECEDER.

Sabetha, Kan., Feb. 15, 1883.

Dear Editor:—Since you were in our city I have been studying the Twenty-first and Twenty-second Landmarks of Masonry. You will recollect that prior to your coming, I had learned enough from the Twenty-first, to bring me to repudiate the entire system. I find that the more I understand of those two landmarks, the more the system appears to be opposed to the Christian's Bible, religion and the Christian's God.

You know that I felt that I was still bound by the obligation, or Masonic oath, measurably. That, while I felt it to be a religious duty to leave the institution forever, yet I did not see the illegality of such oaths. In short, from the time that Mr. John Thompson,Sr., placed Mackey's Jurisprudence in my hauds, until today, I have lived in Wonderland! I had it but a few days when the Tweuty-first Landmark operated as above, on my mind. Then eame your visit and the wonder increased. 1, To see a man who could speak the "uuwritten language of Masonry," but who had never entered a lodge. 2, To hear the truth relative to the baleful influence of the secret empire and feel the influence of the Holy Spirit in attestation of that truth when you preached in the M. E. church that Saturday eveuing. 3. Then the anti-secret literature; all formed a series of stations in this Wonderland, through which the truth has couducted me, and today I am at Anti-secret station, "duly and truly prepared" to "follow my Conductor and fear uo danger."

I am now satisfied that the oath which makes the Mason is not legal. 1, It is uot recognized by law. 2, No man is authorized by law to administer such an oath; while the legislator who would be foolhardy enough to propose the legalization of such an oath, would be branded with infamy. And that bill in which such an oath was incorporated, would prove the politieal winding-sheet of its author.

I presume your readers as well as yourself, are at some loss to account for my silence on this matter. But you take a man out of a coal mine, or dungeon, and even though he may have seen daylight a few times during a stay therein of ten years, he needs some time to become used to the light. But, while here, at Anti-secret station I have written my experience in relation to seeret societies all up, but it needs transeribing before enelosing it to the Cynosure. I have also prepared and delivered my first anti-seeret lecture, to a quiet, intelligent, audienee, at Campbell's school-house, some miles north of this place. My subjeet was, "The Alternative of Choosing between Christ and the Bible, or the Devil and the Koran, in matters of Religion, Faith and Practice."

Vera pro Gratiis.—Truth before favor.

Geo. T. Dissette.

EXPERIENCE MEETING.

Robert W. Chapmau of Gilroy, Santa Clara, Co. Cal., has had some experience within as well as without the lodge. He was pleased with Bostonian's article Jan. 11, on "The one Orgauization that cannot be Investigated," also with Rev. Mr. Hobart's Thanksgiving sermou in the Cynosure of Jan. 18th. He has some facts of the olden time stored up in memory which we hope he will set forth more at length iu a future letter. He gives us this at present concerning characters in Western New York fifty years ago:

"I personally knew the Rev. Mr. Cummins. He officiated when I was initiated. Burrage Smith was master of the lodge. General Gould I knew; he kept a shoe store. I recollect reading a few lines in a Roehester paper that offended the Masons, and in the uext paper there was an apology. The Whitney aud Valance confession don't agree, but they both agree that Morgan was taken from the magazine at Fort Niagara and drowned in the river. The Secret Empire seems to be getting possession of both state and church, and is not our natiou asleep upon a political volcano that will be worse than the rebellion if we do not awake and put away the great evils which are overwhelming us? Secretism has got possession of the press and the pulpit and they ore nearly all sileut on the subject; they dare uot speak out if they have a dispo,sition to. Somebody has truthfully written, 'The nation overpowered by a stroug arm may gain strength and rise again, but if she sinks beneath the weight of her own vices she sinks to rise no more.' May God grant that our downward course be arrested before it is too late."

S. J. Teter, of Douglas, Kansas, is enlisted for the war. After reading the Cynosure a few weeks he sends a list of monthly trial subscribers and says this of other work:

"I have also made arraugements for a series of lectures by eugaging a hall, writing to Bro. Feemster, and gaiuing the co-operation of many in the movement. One prominent man told me he had for a long tiuc feared the Freemasons more than he did Catholicism. I showed the M. E. miuister, who is a Mason, the American platform, and he said that was all right, aud he would attend the lectures. Another ex-minister who is a Mason says Masonry 'is ruining the churches.' I have 'Finney on Masonry' and 'Master's Carpet' circulating all the time, but I cannot get my children interested in them as I would like. I am anxiously looking forward to the time when 'Holden with Cords' will be out, for I think it will secure their attention. I notice in a late issue of the Cynosure in Bro. Greenslitt's 'Experience, Testimony, Exhortation,' what seems to me to be a contradictiou. He first states, 'A man will not be lost because he is a Mason nor because he is not a Mason.' He then goes on to say, 'When God calls a man into divine life and walk he also calls for a separation of that person from all worldly orders.' Now if God calls, and mau refuses to harken, can he be saved?"

Bro. J. Shaftsbury from central Kansas, Alexander, Rush county, has been refreshed by a visit from Bro. Feemster, and the good effect of his work abides:

"By the help and under the leadership of Bro. P. S. Feemster, the battle line has been advauced into the enemy's country; and by the help and blessing of God and the Cynosure we not only hold the ground but have made a little advance. Praise the Lord. We have some here in this dry part of Kansas who are not afraid to stand up for truth, although some of those who have 'the mark of the beast whose deadly wound was healed,' howl and rave; we are not without our timid ones, who cry, 'Preach the Gospel, but do not say anything about Masonry or secretism. That was the cry in regard to slavery—O, you will only make it worse. The result: Slavery was crushed. Praise be to the King of kiugs."

Calvin Marshall of Uuion, Iowa, while in Howard county, Indiana, some two years ago, wrote asking that a lecturer might visit that section, and Dr. Cook respouded, had the degrees worked and held meetings in the vicinity. He now sends by way of sequel:

"Some of the people told me that I had caused a division in the church by sending those men to lecture. I told them I knew it, and they and I should thank the Lord; I hoped the divisiou would continue to widen until the last Baal-worshiper was cast out of the church, not only there but everywhere else. Thanks be to the Lord, the good work is gaining ground and will finally triumph. They need some good brother in Israel like H. H. Hiuman to visit them for their strength and euconragement."

Bro. J. S. Bibbins, of Newark, Ill., was stirred up by our Odd-fellow number (Feb. 8), and thinks it the best thing of the kind yet printed. He says:

"I find the work on 'Masonic Salvation' very usefnl indeed, and think a complete work of this kind on Odd fellowship would be a powerful weapon of destrnction against the order. Let us have a tract on this subject by all means."

John T. Kiggins, of Jewell, Kansas, whom many friends in Indiana will recognize as their former State lecturer, notes this for us:

"Rather an interesting controversy has been raised in the Jewell County Review between the editor and a correspondent signing himself 'Ma-ha-bone.' The controversy started over the Weed letter, bnt promises to cover the whole Masonic question, and is prodncing an excitement among the brethren of the Cable Tow. The Review is read by fifteen hundred subscribers, and so much good is likely to result in the spreading of light on the subjeet. I am enclosing your tracts in envelopes and sending them broadcast where I think they will do most good."

Hear a friend from the remote western region, where the light of truth's genial ray is even now penetrating. J. H. Crumrine, Moscow, Nez Perce county, Idaho territory. This is his word of cheer:

"No secret lodge in Moscow yet; hope there never will be one. The Cynosure and tracts are doing good work here. I usually scatter them at church among those who will read and pray God's blessing to rest upon the efforts to keep out lodgery here and suppress it from the land. We want such a political party as the American very much to save the country from the corruption of secretism."

OBITUARY.

DEA. ROBERT BERRY.

This veteran reformer of eighty-four years is gone to his reward. Converted to Christ in 1839, and baptized April 21, of that year, together with sixteen more of whom the writer of this sketch was one, the deacon never looked back. He was a man of decision and purpose and very positive in his convictions, and usnally right. He was scrnpulously honest in all his dealings with men and had the absolute confidenee of all who knew him. His strongest opponents pronounce him sincere and honest. He took strong ground against all secret orders and was among the very first to plant himself on the bed rock of "No fellowship for the unfruitful works of darkness." He kindly and steadily reproved them to the day of his death. Nearly twelve years ago he was appareutly nigh unto death, and made all the preparations for his near departure, selecting text and hymns to be used at his funeral. We were choseu to preach the sermon on 1 Cor. 15: 57, which took place on Sunday Jan. 28, in Scott Valley. He was an ardent friend of the Cynosure and the reform which it advocates. He lived in harmony with his companion who survives him, nearly sixty years. She is one of a thousand in the steady upward march of a sixty years' pilgrimage to the New Jernsalem. In early life she was a teacher. She is waiting and watching for the coming of Jesus. Let our prayers for her ascend. It may be in place to mention that soon after the removal of Bro. B. to Carbondale, Pa., sonie fifteen years ago, a tirade of abuse and threateuing was perpetrated upon him, venerable and honored as he was, that would disgrace savages. Documents with menacings and epithets too coarse and base to be printed were sent him through the mails, and repeated till he doubtless looked for assasination. This is supposed to have been the cause of his nervous complaint that came near ending his life twelve years ago. The writer now has in his hands some of these savage documents. The inevitable coffin, skull and cross-bones with the—"Beware, you old traitor," etc., ete., were among the lodge jewels sent this veteran of unreproachable life. This was not the work of thoughtless and rude boys as some would be glad to make out. The diagram of the coffin, etc., were the work of the art of mature manhood and skill.

The Scranton Daily Republican contains this notice of his death: "Deacon Robert Berry, one of the oldest citizens of Carbondale, as well as one of the oldest residents of this section of the State, died at his residence in Carbondale on Saturday morning in the eighty-fourth year of his age. For many years he had been one of the best-known inhabitants of Carbondale, and, until a few days ago, his familiar form was seen daily on the streets of that eity. He was a sincere and gennine believer in the Christian religion, and he had been a communicant of the Baptist church for more than forty years. His faith was as strong as any man's could be, and he took much comfort in discussing religions snbjeets with people whom he knew well. Deacon Berry was always affable and pleasant in his manner, and he never became in the least offended with any one who did not believe as he himself did. He had a great deal of charity for his fellows, but he was a bitter and relentless enemy of all kinds of secret societies, and he regarded them as being degrading to the morals and the intellect of the community, and as enemies of the Christian church. Especially was he opposed to Masonry, and he expressed his opinions as freely to members of that order as he did to any one else. He had no better friends in Carbondale than the members of the bodies whose principles he appeared to abhor, and no one humored his notions on such matters more than they. His wife, who is nearly eighty years old, survives him." NATHAN CALLENDER.

NOTES.

"There arose a murmuring." The murmuring here described was the first indication of danger. The word rendered murmuring indieates that it was a suppressed and whispered discontent. The apostles did not wait for a public outbreak, but acted on the first suggestion of difficulty.—Abbott.

"Of the Grecians." Not Greeks, but Grecian Jews, usually called Hellenists, from the Greek word, meaning "to speak Greek." The Jews dispersed from Judea by the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities, finding themselves "allowed the fnll rights of citizenship, and free scope for their individual energies, rapidly developed a remarkable genius for commerce. It was only a wretched handful of the nation—compared by Jewish writers to the chaff of the wheat—who availed themselves of the prepermission to return to their native land. The remainder made their homes in every land to which they had been drifted by the wave of conquest, and gradnally multiplied till they crowded every corner of the habitable globe."—Farrar.

"In the daily ministration." This refers to a daily distribntion, either of food or money, among the poorer and more helpless members of the church. The funds which defrayed the cost of such a distribution were supplied by the free donations of the richer brethren (see Acts 2: 45; 4: 34).

"Called the multitude of the disciples." Not simply a committee of the church, nor even the original nucleus, the 120 mentioned in chap. 1: 15, bnt the whole multitude of disciples (i. e., the whole church).—Lange. A difficulty has been suggested respecting the great number of the multitude of the disciples meeting together; but (1) we are not told where they met: surely the city contained halls and courts large enough for a great assembly if need be. (2) Many of the believers had no doubt left Jerusalem. (3) At such a meeting, only those really interested in the internal government of the society would be present.—Schaff.

"Serve tables." The word was used for the "tables" of money-changers, as in Matt. 21: 12, John 2: 15, and was, therefore, equally appropriate whether we think of the relief as being given in money or in kind.—Plumptre. It may be taken in a general sense, and imply an attention to the bodily wants of the poor.—Gloag.

THE THREE QUALIFICATIONS. (1) "Of honest report," i. e., with a good reputation for honesty and character. Those appointed to office in the church must be not only good, but of a good reputation; they must have the goodness that makes itself manifest. (2) "Full of the Holy Ghost." Not in a low seuse, "filled with a holy ardor," but inspired by the Holy Spirit—thoroughly religious men.—Gloag. It is eminently worthy of regard, that although the specific work to which the deacons were in the first instanee called was the distribntion of money and other material gifts, a necessary qualification for office is, that they be "full of the Holy Ghost." Grace in large measure is announced to be a necessary requisite in one who shall handle "the outward things of the house of God." It is on this border belt, where the church and the world meet, that corruption is apt to spring; and it is especially important that those who are called to duty in that sphere should be eminently spiritual men.—Arnot. (3) "Wisdom," i. e., full of prudence—a virtue indispensably necessary for the performanee of their special duties.—Gloag. And for all the duties of the church. Piety shines brightest when it is wise as well as good.

"To prayer and to the ministry of the word." The word rendered ministry here is the same as that rendered serve in verse 2. The apostles will serve the word of God, and leave to others to serve the charities of the church. There is a hint here of the inexpediency of placing the secular properties of the church in the hands of its ecclesiastics. Certainly the church which does this is not apostolic. Observe that prayer in the apostles' minds precedes and prepares for preaching. They that exhort us to prayer give themselves to it (Rom. 1: 10) —Abbott.

"They laid their hands on them." The imposition of hands, as practiced in appointing persons to an office, was a symbol of the impartation of the gifts and graces which they needed to qualify them for the office. It was of the nature of a prayer that God would bestow the necessary gifts, rather than a pledge that they were actually conferred.—Hackett.

"And Stephen." One of the new men just chosen as assistants to the Twelve at once attracted public attention. His fearlessness, his splendid oratory, his intense faith, the great wonders and signs done in the power of this faith, threw into the shade the apostles and their words and works.—Schaff. Rapidly maturing under the tuition of the Holy Ghost, first, the outward gifts of miracle-working are added to his qualifications as servitor to the poorer saints, to keep pace with the expanding inward forces of faith and love; then, without formal indication of transfer, the Holy Ghost advanced him to the higher office of ministering the Word, as afterward Philip was similarly advanced.—Butler.

"Disputing with Stephen." With does not necessarily imply that he entered into any public debate or discussion with them. It is equally consistent with the account to suppose that he preached the truth affirmatively, and that they opposed, but could not successfully resist him. Comp. chap. 13: 45.—Abbott. It is entirely probable, that as Paul was in the front rank of Stephen's persecutors, he was also one of the keenest disputants with whom Stephen had to contend; and though the immediate effect was only to inflame the rage of the controversialist, we may well believe that the truths which he then heard became the germs of much which, under the influence of the Holy Ghost, afterward developed into the Epistles with which we are now so familiar.—Taylor.

"And they were not able to resist the wisdom." What now was there in Stephen's preaching which so powerfully affected the rulers in Israel, which even alienated the people hitherto so favorably inclined to the new sect? Was his teaching different to that of Peter or John? There is no doubt that Stephen, with the light of the Holy Ghost shining clear and full on his early and elaborate training, saw more plainly than the older and comparatively untaught apostles how transitory after all was that law of Moses now more than ever fanatically reverenced and observed; how faded were the glories of that temple, the object now, more than at any previous time, of a passionate love. The sacred law, the holy and beautiful house, in the days when our Lord and his apostles lived on earth, were all that remained to the Jew of his ancestral glories; their holy land was ruled by strangers, their name and fame were only a memory; so they surrounded the law of Moses and the house on Mount Sion with a strange unreasoning devotion; and when Stephen told them that these things were only shadows which were even then passing away, it was an easy matter, by a very slight perversion of his words, for the Jewish leaders, Pharisee and Sadducee, to excite among the people a storm of patriotic indignation against one who dared to teach such hateful doctrines.—Schaff.

"And all that sat in the council, looking stedfastly on him." As they would naturally in expectation of what he was about to say in his defense.—Cambridge Bible. The countenance of Stephen, like that of Moses on his descent from the Mount, shone probably with a preternatural lustre proclaiming him a true witness, a servant of him whose glory was so fitly symbolized by such a token. The occasion was worthy of the miracle.—Schaff. It was the direct result of the indwelling of God with him—the fulfilment of the promise of Christ (John 14: 23-27).—Abbott.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

What effect had murmurings on the church in the wilderness; and what passage shows it? What did an apostle say to the Corinthians about murmuring? What effect had the work of one of these seven on the people of Samaria? What on the people of Ethiopia? What man of the Cyrenians will ever be famous in gospel history? What Jew of the Alexandrians was mighty in the Scriptures? Who is the most famous man of Cilicia? What apostle did a great work in the church of the chief city of Asia?—Scholar's Quarterly.

THE WAY HE DOES IT.

A brother on the frontier, where this year "the crops are short and money is close," keeps his list up and is constantly adding new names. He has a way of doing it that would work well in many neighborhoods. Speaking of methods, he says: "I have to look closely to some of my subscribers and nurse them through the hard times." He goes directly to the individual and finds out the peculiarities of each case, and when he knows the difficulties, helps to overcome them. It may be timidity, indifference, lack of ready means, or simply negligence. If the man is timid, he encourages him; if indifferent, he stirs him up; if short of money, he is ready to take his subscription at lowest club rates, and even to supplement that in special cases; and if he has simply neglected to renew, a gentle reminder is sufficient. This plan works well in Kansas, and is worth a trial in YOUR PLACE.

THE FOLDER FUND.

We want names and addresses of the persons to whom you want the Cynosure sent on your subscription to the $15.00 "Folder Fund." We have your money, please do not compel us to remain your debtors. We are anxious to furnish all papers paid for, folded, pasted, trimmed and mailed on time. Why not give your paper a clean financial status as well as a clean face and new dress? If you can't fill the list tell us to do it, and we will remember the poor and make some of God's needy ones glad at your expense.

ARE YOU COMING TO CHICAGO?—If you have business in the city or if you have occasion to pass through, it will repay you to call at headquarters, see what is being done, and get a supply of tracts, look over our list of publications; order such as you need and give us a word of admonition or encouragement as you may think appropriate. Quite a number of friends from the country and some from the city have dropped in to gladden us by their presence. We appreciate such calls and hope they will in future be more frequent. Don't forget the number, 221 West Madison St.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1883.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

When this reaches our readers I hope to be in Washington attending the closing sessions of the 47th Congress. I spoke consecutively in five towns in Kansas, in winter weather, from three to six times in each town; and traveled, off from railroads, above an hundred miles over the frozen prairies, and came back in better health than when I started. If the people enjoyed their intercourse with me one half as well as I enjoyed mine with them, it was a source of enjoyment to both; and I gained a much clearer insight into our political state and prospects than newspapers could give me at home.

Similar benefits may result from a visit to our national capital." Mr. Stoddard has requested me to correspond with papers in several States and to confer with ex-Senator Pomeroy on the organization and interests of the American party. We are receiving letters proposing a newspaper company to start a National American paper at Washington." A sojourn of a month, more or less, at our seat of government, may be made useful to our cause. Whatever changes may occur, how many political papers soever may be started, the Cynosure will still be our Pole Star.

The National Prohibition and Home Protection party, formed in Farwell Hall last summer, is like a noble bird with a weasel under its wing, which is slowly sucking its blood. Iowa, next perhaps to Kansas, was its most hopeful field. It meets head winds in both. Both States rejected it and clave to the Republican party. In the great Topeka convention of Jan. 9th, Governor St. John declared himself a Republican, now and continually; and the great crowd "Resolved, That we are opposed to the organization of a new party."

The Iowa convention, Feb. 7th, was seized, packed, officered and manipulated by the lodge; and yet, on a straight vote, with all the prestige and power of their officers and committees, the people broke over their majority-report and voted against them 401 to 243. Those 401 votes properly belong to the American party; and will belong to it, as soon as the honest open masses learn that prohibition, in Iowa, is run by a handful of secret lodges in perpetual caucus.

In other States, the same lesson will soon be learned. Secrecy is the natural-born, sworn and drilled ally of the saloon. In the DesMoines convention, the lodgearchy was voted down; but what of that! What can a crowd of open-hearted, honest men and women do against a dark, unscrupulous minority in weekly night-session at the county seats throughout the State. The saloons were beaten in the popular vote on the constitution. The Grinnell lodge-prohibition-party were beaten in the DesMoines convention; but when the Irishman was beaten before the court and jury he declared he would "bate 'em on the execution," for he meant to run away. The secret wing of Iowa prohibition will beat the open crowd "on the execution" every time. Their only refuge and hope is an honest, open, American party. J. B.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

At Washington—Mr. McPherson and the Thad. Stevens Biography—The Cynosure number on the "Great Commoner"—The Senate Debate on the printers' secret order and its impertinent demands.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 24, 1883.

TO THE CYNOSURE:—I arrived safe this morning. I have called on Mr. Colton at the new N. C. A. building; but have not yet seen Senator Pomeroy or Mr. Ford.

Mr. McPherson, clerk of the House of Representatives, knows nothing of the biography of Thaddeus Stevens, lately issued at Boston, or its author; had not even seen the book; but had learned through the papers that it contains one mistake. He tells me that his own materials are arranged in chapters, and would have been published some years ago, but different public employments have engrossed all his time and energies, so that he could not possibly complete and put it to press. We both think the issue of the Boston book will aid rather than obstruct the sale and circulation of his own.

Mr. McPherson learned with evident interest of the purchase of the property here by the N. C. A.; of the monthly Americans; and the other papers devoted to and aiding the anti-secrecy reform; and, above all, that it is contemplated to open an auxiliary here at the national capital—and that a number of the Cynosure is to be devoted to the memory of Mr. Stevens, who, he rightly thinks, is not appreciated by the people of the United States as his remarkable record warrants. I told him that the Boston book has a likeness of Mr. Stevens which is and so, a bad picture. He says there are two excellent engravings of Mr. Stevens, which have great merit, and if I will call at his office he will endeavor to put us in the way of getting one; and also will cause the library to be searched for some salient points of his speeches and Congressional life, during our great national agony. I shall gladly accept his invitation and give our readers the benefit of his kindness.

When the Senate lately was debating the secret printers' society, Eugene Hale, the young Senator from Maine, protested against employing members of the American Typographical Union. He said:

"MR. PRESIDENT: I am informed there is a national and, for anything I know, secret society, which affects to control the public printing of these United States. I am informed that the head of this organization declares openly, that no printer shall have work in the public printing office, who will not first join their association! This is no less than an attempt to take the public printing out of the hands of this Congress and the American people, and control it to their own interest and liking! I am opposed to this. I am willing the printers should be liberally paid, but if the facts stated are true, I would be in favor of instructing our Public Printer to examine the list, and weed out every member of that association which undertakes to dictate to the Congress and people whom they may employ."

Mr. Voorhees of Indiana, said Senators were getting up a tempest in a teapot. Every trade and art got up associations for their own benefit and they have a right to. There is a National Association of Banks which comes here and dictates legislation from one end of the Capitol to the other; and every Senator knows it. Why not begin with them?

Senator Plumb of Kansas granted that printers had a right to associate for their own benefit and improvement. But they had no right to say to a brother printer, "If you do not join our association, you shall have no part in the public printing." This was dictation and proscription. Once in the hands of such a society, we are at their mercy. Like Mr. Hale of Maine, he was in favor of taking the printing from such an order and putting it in the hands of the Congress and people to whom it belongs. Debate continued. J. B.

TEMPERANCE LEGISLATION.—The one question which is agitating our State legislatures more generally than any other is the restriction or suppression of the saloon business. In Illinois, the check given to the triumphant success with constitutional amendments in Iowa and Kansas, has kept the demand for a similar amendment in the background. The Women's Christian Temperance Union has been foremost in pushing this demand. Their work has for the time being been superseded by an agitation for high license. One or two Democratic obstructionists in the legislature have apparently thwarted the efforts of the well-meaning gentlemen who were urging the measure in this city and Springfield. The Chicago aldermen, anticipating a $500 tax by the legislature, have raised the license of city saloons from $52 to $103 so as to protect their clients and political backers from further demand by the State. The Maine legislature has adopted a measure providing for the submission of a constitutional amendment to the people. The New Jersey legislature has just rejected the temperance and prohibition measures before it. In Ohio the law-makers and politicians are in much tribulation. Two or three days were taken up last week in caucusing and fruitless discussion. The contest is without parallel in the history of the State. Without coming to any conclusion the debate was postponed for a week. Lieutenant Governor Richards says the Republican party is in "a decidedly bad fix," because of the discontent manifested throughout the State with the management in the legislature. The Columbus State Journal, an influential Republican paper says that its party with its two-thirds majority are "absolutely responsible for every thing that was done or left undone." "But in spite of all this the majority has done but little toward satisfying the expressed wishes of the people. They have shown themselves unequal to the situation and indifferent to the gravity of the consequences of their inaction." As a result the fear of losing the next election is opening like a "cave of gloom."

In Wisconsin the legislature has passed a bill allowing the courts to shut up as common nuisances all unlicensed saloons. In Iowa, since the late convention at Des Moines, Judge Nourse, counsel for the prohibitionists, has presented an able plea to the Supreme Court for a rehearing of the amendment case. He argues most forcibly that the court went beyond its prerogative in deciding upon the validity of the legislative records when that body and the whole body of voters in the State had passed upon that record. A new case will soon come before the Supreme Court which will bring the question to an issue without the intervention of technicalities. The result of the Des Moines convention promises that the great movement will not go back in Iowa.

—The editor of the Cynosure started for Washington Thursday night by the Pennsylvania Central route, safely reaching destination Saturday morning. He will probably remain in the capital for a week or two after the adjournment of Congress.

—Mr. Carpenter was able to ride out on Monday, which is his first venture from the house for some two months. We all rejoice at the prospect of returning vigor to one whose interest is so great in the reform.

—Bro. Geo. W. Dissette, of Sabetha, Kansas, has another brief report of lecture work near his home which will be read with great interest when it appears next week.

—Brethren Hinman and Starry were at Fayettville near Chambersburg, Pa., last week. On Monday evening they occupied the United Brethren church. On Tuesday evening the third degree was worked and explained in the Covenanter church, which afforded room for but about half the crowd that came to hear. Bro. Starry is so well pleased with his reception in Pennsylvania, and so hopeful are the prospects for future work in the East that he is debating the question of removal from Iowa.

—With the present number ends our story—the longest and, we predict the future will prove it to be, one of the most useful publications that the Cynosure has ever undertaken. With our readers we have followed its development week by week with eager attention, and have marked the skill with which some of the most alarming facts developed in the progress of our reform have been interwoven, until the whole appears like some piece of wonderful tapestry unrolling in pictures of sweet home life, darkened by frequent black shadows as the dusky legions of the "prince of the power of the air," which control in the councils of secrecy, sweep their foul pinions across the sunlight of the scene. But noblest are the portrayals of the hero spirit of men who, for truth's sake, are willing to become martyrs for Christ. Aside from the moral character of the story, its literary merit is of a high grade that will introduce it favorably in the most critical circles. We are happy to be able to promise that the gifted pen which has finished this great work will continue its contributions to the Cynosure.

WASHINGTON.

"Is it wise to agitate the question of a political organ at Washington and the organization of a stock publishing company there in a building on which there is a mortgage?" It may be so. I simply ask the question. My experience in paying interest has been very limited, and I never lived in a house or cultivated a foot of land under mortgage, and I have either inherited or acquired an aversion to debts. The business policy of our N. C. A. Board has been "pay as you go," and keep on hand a small margin for emergencies. We have found this policy quite as safe and as pleasant as a constant struggle to "make ends meet;" and if I am not mistaken there is a saving of from ten to twenty per cent in paying "cash down." An inexperienced man should not speak with too much assurance of advantages or disadvantages in methods of business which he has not tested, but an opinion is admissible, and it is my opinion that to divert attention from the one point of paying for the Washington property would be a mistake. One step at a time, persevered in, completes the longest journey. I have said little about contributions, except in a few instances to personal friends. The opinions of others more experienced than myself were in my judgment necessary to enable friends to form an intelligent opinion of the real merits of the case, and I know of no man whose judgment would command greater respect than that of Pres. Blanchard, who is now on the ground for a personal inspection. When he has looked over the ground he will give his opinions, and, whether adverse or favorable, they will be his own, and so expressed as not to be misunderstood. If favorable, and in view of the facts, friends think best to take up the mortgage and stop the interest, sixty days should be the extreme limit allowed to cancel the entire amount. What do our business men say? Is it good policy to "pay as you go," or shall we enter the arena at Washington with a "promise to pay" in the rear, to act as "Paul's thorn in the flesh," and a mortgage cloud on the title of our home at No. 215 Fifth and a half St., to detract one half from our power for good, consume a portion of our funds in paying semi-annual interest, and giving a nervous, insecure feeling to our movement, in the hope that by procrastination and new ventures there will come a reactive influence that will make it easier to pay both principal and interest two or three years hence than it is to wipe the whole thing out now. There is space in the columns of our paper for business men to give their opinions.

J. P. STODDARD.

PRESIDENT FINNEY'S TESTIMONY.

[From his book on the Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry *]

THE YOUNG MUST BE INSTRUCTED.

I, with the many, have been remiss in suffering a new generation to grow up in ignorance of the character of Freemasonry, as it was fully revealed to us who are now old. We have greatly erred in not preserving and hand ing down to the rising generation the literature upon this subject, with which we were made familiar forty years ago. For one, I must not continue this remissness.

Because I know that nothing but correct information is wanting to banish this institution from wholesome society.

CONVERTED FROM FREEMASONRY TO CHRIST.

Soon after my conversion the evening came for attendance upon the lodge. I went. They of course were aware that I had become a Christian, and the Master of the lodge called upon me to open the lodge with prayer. I did so, and poured out my heart to the Lord for blessings upon the lodge. I observed that it created considerable excitement. The evening passed away, and at the close of the lodge I was requested to pray again. I did so and retired, but much depressed in spirit. I soon found that I was completely converted from Freemasonry to Christ, and that I could have no fellowship with any of the proceedings of the lodge. Its oaths appeared to me to be monstrously profane and barbarous.

MUST BE RENOUNCED.

Afterward I considered it more thoroughly, and was most perfectly convinced that I had no right to adhere to the institution, or to appear to do so; and that I was bound, whenever the occasion arose, to speak my mind freely in regard to it, and to renounce the horrid oaths I had taken.

THE DISCUSSION IN OBERLIN.

When the subject of Freemasonry was first forced upon our churches in Oberlin for discussion and action I cannot express the astouishment, grief and indignation that I felt on hearing professed Christian Freemasons deny, either expressly or by irresistible implication, that Morgan and others had truly revealed the secrets of Freemasonry. But a few years ago such denial would have ruined the character of any intelligent man, not to say of a professed Christian.

FREEMASONS WILL LIE.

We cannot learn what Masonry is from the oral testimony of adhering Masons. Let it be pondered well that every one of them is under oath to conceal and in no way whatever to reveal the secrets of the order. This Freemasons do not deny. Hence, if they are asked if the books in which Masonry has been published are true, they will either evade the question or else they will lie; and they are under oath to do so.

It is mere madness to receive the testimony of men who are under oath, and under the most horrid oaths that can be taken—oaths sustained by the most terrific penalties that can be named to conceal their secrets and to deny that they have been published, and that those books contain them—I say it is downright madness to receive the testimony of such men, it matters not who they are. Masons have no right to expect an intelligent person to believe their denials that these books have truly revealed Masonry. Nor have they a right to complain if we reject their testimony.

I say again that Freemasons have no right to expect us to believe their denials; for while they adhere to Masonry they are under oath to "conceal and never reveal" any part of its secrets, and of course they must expressly or impliedly deny every revelation of its secrets that can be made. Would they have us stultify ourselves by receiving their testimony?

THEY JUSTIFY MURDER.

The credibility of these books is further sustained by the fact that adhering Masons did then, and have always, justified the murder of Morgan as that which their oaths obliged them to do. They have said that he deserved it, and that he had taken upon him the obligation consenting to suffer the penalty if he violated it. In the two small volumes published by Elder Stearns letters will be found from the most respectable and reliable Christian men that fully sustain this statement, that the adhering fraternity, with very few exceptions, at that time justified the murder of Morgan. In thus justifying that murder they of course admit that he violated his oath, and had truly published Freemasonry.

MASONRY POLITICAL.

To all this testimony adhering Masons have objected. First, that the movement against Freemasonry was a political one. Answer: I have already said that by its having seized upon all the civil offices and totally obstructing the course of justice it was forced into politics by Masons themselves.

It was found that there was no other way than for the people to rise up and take the offices out of their hands by political action. At first there was no thought on the part of any one, so far as I could learn, that it would ever become a political question. But it was soon found that there was no other alternative.

AN ALARMED CONSCIENCE.

Some months since I received a letter from a Master Mason, who was manifestly a conscientious man. He informed me that he had been reading my letters in the Independent, on Freemasonry—that his mind was so distressed, in view of his Masonic obligations and relations, that he was wholly unable to attend to business, and that he should become deranged if he could not escape from these entanglements—that he must and would renounce Freemasonry at all hazards. When he took the oath of the Master's degree the clause pledging him to keep a Master Mason's secrets, murder and treason excepted, was omitted, so that he was not aware of that clause until afterward. This clause, however, that I last quoted, bound him fast. No wonder that this conscientious man was frightened when he came to understand his true position.

FREEMASONS UNFITTED FOR PUBLIC OFFICE.

Now, is it not perfectly plain that a man who has taken this Master Mason's oath ought not be intrusted with the office of a magistrate, a sheriff, marshal or constable? That he is not to be credted as a witness where a Master Mason is a party? That he ought not to be allowed a place on a jury where a Master Mason is a party? And, in short, that he cannot safely be intrusted with any office of honor or profit, either in church or state? Is it not plain that a Master's lodge in any community is a dangerous institution, and that the whole country is interested in the utter suppression of such an institution?

Let not this opinion be regarded as too severe. The fact is that Freemasons intend to fulfill their vows, or they do not. If Master Masons intend to do what they swear to do, is it right to intrust them with the execution of the laws? If they do not intend to fulfill their vows, of what avail will their oath of office be, since they have no regard for the solemnity of an oath? In every view of the subject it is plain that such men ought not to be trusted.

WHAT MORE ABOMINABLE?

Now, the solemn question arises, are these oaths a mere farce, a mere taking of the name of God in vain, in the most trifling manner, and under the most solemn circumstances? or, are we to understand that the Masonic institution is a conspiracy, its members taking, in all seriousness and good faith, such horrid oaths to do such horrid deeds, upon such horrid penalties? Which are we to understand to be true? If either is true, I ask the church of God, I ask the world, what more abominable institution ever existed than this? And yet we are told that in all this trifling with oaths, or, if not trifling, this horrid conspiracy, there is nothing inconsistent with the Christian religion! And even ministers of the Gospel are found who can justify it and eulogize it in a manner most profane, and even blasphemous.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE BIBLE CONTEMNED.

I cannot imagine anything more directly calculated to bring the Word of God into contempt, than such a use of it in Masonic lodges. It is enough to make one's blood curdle in his veins to think that a Christian minister, or any Christian whatever, should allow himself to pass through such an abominable scene as is frequently represented in the degrees of Masonry—multiplying their horrid oaths, heaping one imprecation upon another, gathering up from every part of the Divine oracles the most solemn and awful sayings of Jehovah, and applying them in a manner so revolting, that the scene must make a Christian's heart tremble, and his whole soul to loathe such proceedings.

A SOLEMN WARNING.

Professed Christian Freemason, how can you hold up your head either in the church or before the world, if you still adhere to this most hypocritical institution? Just think of the Worshipful Masters, the Grand High Priests, in their mitres and priestly robes, the great and pompous dignitaries of Masonry arrayed in their sacerdotal robes, solemnly teaching their members such vile falsehoods as these, claiming that to Freemasons the church owes the preservation of the law of God, and that the true name of God is known only to Freemasons! Shame! But I said you have either been made to believe these things or you have not. If you have never believed them, pray, let me ask you how it is that you have ever given any countenance to this institution when you did not at all believe its teaching? How is it that you have not long since renounced and denounced an institution whose teaching is replete with falsehoods taught under the most solemn circumstances? These falsehoods are taught as Masonic secrets, under the sanction of the most awful and solemn oaths. What shall we say of an institution that binds its members by such oaths, to keep and preserve as truth and secrets such a tissue of profane falsehoods? You see nothing in it inconsistent with Christianity! Why, my dear brother, how amazing it is that you can be so blinded! Are you not afraid that you shall be given over to believe a lie, that you may be damned, because you believe not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness.

MICHIGAN STATE MEETING.

It is proposed, the Lord willing, to hold the next State meeting in Grand Rapids, beginning on the 17th of April. An effort will be made to secure able speakers and a degree worker, and we are exceedingly anxious that every friend of the reform should be present. Let there be a grand rally. We would like to see all those who are interested in the proposed Anti-secret Alliance at the State meeting, that we may consult together as to what shall be done. Come one and all and let us show our faith by our works. The time has come when every friend of Christ, and every lover of his country should rally for the overthrow of the gigantic evil of secretism, else the church and the state will be ground to powder beneath the heel of the lodge. Up then to the conflict in behalf of a free country and a pure Christianity.

BOOKS AND MAGAZINES.

Ideas for a Science of Good Government. Among the finest specimens of American manhood and independent character, our country has long pointed to Peter Cooper of New York, now just past his 90th birthday, yet vigorous as many at one-half that age. Having risen from poverty, and acquiring ample wealth by industry and business energy, he has generously spent a large portion for the benefit of his poorer neighbors, the working men of New York, and few cities can present so noble a structure for this purpose as Cooper Institute, and so successfully meeting the end for which it was constructed. A man of such experience, in dealing with the necessities of the common people, must needs have many valuable ideas on the science of government, and a compilation of such ideas is the ample volume Mr. Cooper has just issued, in which are gathered many letters, public papers, addresses and interviews on questions of coin and paper currency, the tariff, taxation, the public debt and the civil service. This record of a wonderful personal experience of seventy years' active business life and personal acquaintance and correspondence with statesmen divines, scholars, artists, inventors, manufacturers, etc., is a valuable contribution to our financial literature. The book is finely printed and bound, and contains a fine portrait of Mr. Cooper.

The frontispiece portrait of Gambetta in the March Century, and the accompanying article by a writer who was intimately acquainted with Gambetta, appear now with a timeliness which will be appreciated. A short biographical sketch of the late Dr. Leonard Bacon, with portrait, is contributed by his son, Leonard Woolsey Bacon, under the appropriate title, "A Good Fight Finished." Mr. Bacon defends his father's position in opposition to the Boston extremists in the anti-slavery agitation, and records that Abraham Lincoln acknowledged indebtedness to Dr. Bacon in forming his own convictions on the subject. The writer, at the same time, disparages the work and influence of William Lloyd Garrison. Edward Eggleston's early American historical sketches are continued in a paper on "Migrations of American Colonists," finely illustrated. In the editorial department we read one of the best arguments in defense of Sabbath rest that can be drawn from reasons that omit Divine authority.

—The North American Review for March opens with an article on "Money in Elections," by Henry George, who brings to the discussion of that hackneyed subject a contribution full of originality, freshness and keen insight. Robert S. Taylor writes of the "Subjugation of the Mississippi," a work which, in his opinion, and in that of the Mississippi Commission, of which he is a member, can be accomplished only by employing, for the purpose of deepening and straightening the channel, the forces developed by the river itself. Moncure D. Conway contributes a very striking study of Gladstone as a man and a statesman, showing how some peculiar traits of his nature, quite as much as his pre-eminent native force and elevation of character, conspire to make him the foremost Englishman of his time. Hon. George W. Julian's "Railway Influence in the Land Office" is a grave, judicial exposure of the practices which, against the manifest intent of the law and the determinations of the highest courts, have won for corporations millions upon millions of acres of the public domain. Richard A. Proctor writes of the "Pyramid of Cheops;" Prof. Wm. G. Sumner of "Protective Taxes and Wages;" Elizur Wrightof "Some Aspects of Life Insurance;" and finally there, is a symposium on "Educational Needs," by Prof. G. Stanley Hall, Prof. Felix Adler, President Thomas Hunter, and Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi.

The Elzeria Library, a semi-weekly reprint of some of the best productions of English and American authors, reaching its twelfth number February 9th. Already such works as Irving's "Rip VanWinkle," Shaksperes' Hamlet," Farrar's "Burning of Rome," Stoddard's "Life of Washington Irving," Tennyson's "Enoch Arden" Wilson's "Sea Serpents of Science," etc. have appeared at the mere nominal price of from two cents to seven cents each neatly printed and bound in paper.
The 104 numbers for the year are offered for $2.00 by the publisher John B. Alden, 18 Vesey St., New York.

—Mr. Rouayne is greeted by the Cynosure and its readers in this number. His self-reliant mind has ploughed its way, "through much tribulrtion," from Romanism in south Ireland to the grand truth of his present article, which Watts put thus:

"This remedy did Wisdom find
To heal diseases of the mind;
The only balm whose virtues can Restore the ruined creature man."

And it is not wonderful that the Atonement now fills his moral and mental horizon; and he asserts it with all his old time vigor and force. But while Christ taught Martha that "he that believed in himself should never die," he also taught, at large, that human substitutes for religion, made the worship "vain" and the law "void." See Mark 7th chaprer, This also Mr. Ronayne has done and will do.

—The Wesleyan says that Governor St. John of Kansas lectured in Syracuse, Feb. 19th, and so great was the anxiety to hear the great temperance champion that nearly every seat in the hall was engaged hours before the address took place.

The Home.

TWO SONNETS.

WINTER SORROW.

A grey and leaden sky, without a break
  Shuts in the narrow world whereon I look,
And, day by day, mine ears almost forget
  To miss the babbling of the ice-bound brook.
The woods stand rigid, ghostlike, draped in snow,
  Life is no longer there, nor pleasant sound,
No breath is stirring in the bitter air,
  To bid them drop their burdens to the ground.
The drift lies deeply piled before my door,
  My little garden, touched by winter's breath,
Laid cold and smooth beneath his icy hand,
  Looks stark and changeless as the bed of death.
'Tis thus my heart, thy desolation chill
Holds me, like cruel winter, dumb and still.

SPRING SORROW.

Spare me that clear, triumphant song of praise,
  Sweet thrush, with which thou welcomest the morn;
It wakes too keen a sorrow in my heart,
  Who sigh too think another day is born.
Ye opening buds, ye sounds and scents of spring,
  So deeply interwoven with the past,
Ye touch the inmost fibre of my grief,
  And bring the bitter memories thronging fast.
Not less the lilac crowns herself with bloom,
  And bright laburnums shake their tasselled gold;
Nor does the violet breathe one odor less
  Because my life is left to me dark and cold;
Only while earth and sky such joy express,
I fain would turn me from their loveliness.

ENCOURAGEMENTS TO FAITH.

BY MRS. L. R. DE WOLF.

It had been a wearisome day. Everything seemed to go wrong. Things dropped from the nervous hands, the kitchen was over close with all its day's heat, and the baking was not yet finished. Without all was calm and still, save the birds' gay notes and the sound of a bell. Thoughts of earnest work for the Master oppressed me. I kept asking myself, What have I done for him who had given his dear life for me? In a recent sermon it was asked of the Christians present if they had averaged to bring one soul to Jesus a year since their conversion. I had counted over my "stars"—there ten Sabbath scholars, here a young man, there a weary woman, several children, here and there doubtful ones, and again and again one I hoped for but did not know surely about. And what if these would count more than one a year, more than one in the three hundred and sixty-five days, was that all I could have brought to Him had I never grown cold or indifferent? These thoughts oppressed me more and more. I sat down upon the door-steps and told Jesus all; prayed earnestly that words I had spoken for him to individuals and in the prayer-meetings might be gathered up and saved for him. It was all I could do with the past, but with his help I would try to lead a truer life, and labor more diligently in his service in the future.

I went back to my work; the bread was over-baked, and the hour was late. I was making haste to retrieve for my absence when some one spoke my name. Company! and I so busy. I passed into the parlor. "The call must be short," they said. There was an errand to me; it must be told alone. I led my young friend into the dining-room and seated her by the window. She would never again look into the face of her old teacher and friend, for God had afflicted her; but in my love I placed her among the flowers just the same.

"I've thought many times I would come up here and tell you that but for you I never should have learned to love and trust Jesus. Do you remember, after I became blind you came to my home and talked to me about the personal friendship and the tender sympathy of Jesus, and what his fellowship in the years of darkness might become to me? How he who never sleeps would comfort me when all earthly friends slumbered, and keep me from harm when they were not near? And don't you remember how you spoke of his ministering to my wants, my peculiar needs, such as those who can see would not think of? O, I do! I never can forget those words and the sweet impression they left on my mind. Well, I kept thinking about it for several days, and the more I thought the more I felt my need, and the deeper grew my desire to receive from this loving Saviour all you had promised in him; and so I told him I would receive and welcome him into my heart if he would come in and abide with me. He came. It was so still, and I so calm, that at first I felt I was deceived. But he remains still."

"And have you found in him just what I promised?"

"Yes, and more. O! if you hadn't come to me then, in my sorest, dreariest hour, what desolate, weary years these would be! But now each year is sweeter and brighter than the last."

It was only a year and two or three months after this that loving hands placed sweet flowers over her grave. She who had begun to live, growing stronger and nobler in spirit daily, went from us to join that "innumerable company around the throne of God." She does not need to ask now if we are "changed" when we next meet. She will see and know what we are, and if we have been growing like Christ in these years she has been waiting within the "pearly gate." And she will no longer grieve or weep, for she can forever behold the "King in his beauty," and he has wiped away her tears; and she will have no more pain, for former things have passed away. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. Yea, blessed are they that know the Master's will and do it.

WEEK DAY SERMONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

We are apt to mistake submission to the inevitable for resignation to the will of God. This is the plain, hard truth in regard to the way in which many Christians bear trials. They say, "Thy will be done;" and they think they mean it, but there is always a sigh behind the prayer.

Let me quote again from the aged saint whose ripe Christian experience has once before enriched this series of articles with those sparkling nuggets of truth that are dug in greatest abundance very near the shores of Canaan.

"The Lord has given me a lesson on this point," she said to me one day. "I thought I was submissive when I lost my sight, and my husband died; and I was obliged to leave our pleasant home to strangers. Breaking up that home almost broke my heart, too; but I made no complaint; I followed the Lord's leadings."

"And wasn't that submission, Mrs. Y.?" I inquired.

"No;" she answered, emphatically. "It was no more submission than giving away what we don't want ourselves is charity. It was mere slavish submitting to what I couldn't help. Submitting to the Lord is another thing. And I will tell you how he led me to see it. I sat thinking the other day what a beautiful home I had lost, so hallowed with the dear memories of my husband's life and death that to go away from it seemed like leaving a part of him; and how hard it was that I must be transplanted in my old age when every root and fibre had so came another question, 'What is submission?' Then I was still. I let the Lord himself speak to my soul. And he showed me what true submission was. It is rejoicing in him; rejoicing in having his will wrought in us and through us. It isn't simply not murmuring. It is rejoicing. That is the test of true submission—'joy in the Holy Ghost.' I can look back now to my lost home without a single regretful longing. My grief is swallowed up in joy. I have Christ and heaven. What could I want more?"

I carried home her words, not to lay them up for future use when the Lord might see best to send some great trial upon me, but for a daily spring of courage and comfort by the way; for a spirit of submission is just as necessary in meeting the common ills and crosses of life as its crushing sorrows. And while pondering them over it occurred to me that possibly one solution of the question, why so many Christians are not joyful ones, is because they are not truly submissive to the Lord's orderings.

"Some men are born to luck," sighs hard-working Brother Jones. "Now there goes a man that is making his thousands. Everything he touches turns to money. Well, I don't suppose it is right to murmur at the difference between us;" and the good brother, quite oblivious to the fact that he is murmuring, goes to his work, feeling just a little sore, as if fortune or destiny—in plain words, the Lord he serves—hadn't used him quite right.

"Mrs. Worldly can keep half a dozen servants, and go to the seaside every summer, while I have to stay at home and drudge," sighs Sister Brown. "Some folks are born with a silver spoon in their mouths, but that was never my lot;" and poor, tired Sister Brown goes to her work of getting dinner for six hungry men, without the least idea that she is not perfectly submissive to the will of God.

Oh, weary, tired souls, bound to the tread-mill of care and toil, there is a large heritage waiting for you to claim, a royalty of promise and blessing; and why not go in and possess the land? If the Apostle could rejoice in reproaches, in afflictions, in persecutions for Christ's sake, is it impossible to rejoice in lives of poverty and labor for the same divine reason?

"Think what Spirit dwells within thee;
  Think what Father's smiles are thine;
Think that Jesus died to win thee;
  Child of heaven, can'st thou repine?"

You hold a treasure of uncounted price—"Christ in you the hope of glory, and the world will be sure to gauge the value you place upon it by the sunshine it sheds through your life. "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, rejoice."

PREPARATIONS FOR SICKNESS.

Though it is not well to be always drearily on the look-out for sickness, yet since, with our degenerate bodies and degenerate habits, sickness is so prone to befall, it is desirable so far to anticipate the same that it shall not take us altogether at a disadvantage when it comes. It is hard work to take care of the sick when no forethought has preceded and no provision been made. Go into a house of this kind and ask only for so much as a soft cloth to bathe the patient's face, and confusedness immediately ensues. Chests are ransacked, drawers stirred to their bottoms, ragbags emptied of their contents, but all in vain. Everything has gone forth to furnish the last rag carpet, or to the rag-man in exchange for tinware. And so if old flannel or pieces of old sheets are in demand, continued search only serves to emphasize the fact that, simple as the things are, they are—unless good clothes be torn to pieces—absolutely un-come-at-a-ble in that establishment.

Every housewife should set aside for this especial purpose some drawer or box, and see that it is kept well stocked with the simple but indispensable articles required in time of sickness—soft cloths for bathing purposes, or for cooling the head (these are best made from old, fine white stockings, the foot cut off well up into the ankle, the leg cut open and trimmed to the desired size, the edges turned in and the two legs run together with a few stitches taken here and there through the middle); rolls of white cotton for mustard plasters and the like; old sheets or pieces of the same for compresses or packs; old linen for dressing sores, blisters or wounds; old flannel, fine towels, and whatever will be likely to come into play. This dispenses with all hurry or bustle at time of need, all that is requisite being to point out the drawer or give the box to the nurse.

Thoughtful housewives will be likely, too, to have a few pairs of extra sheets and pillow-slips laid aside, and several changes of night-dresses and underwear not in usual use, so frequently as the case requires, the patient may not suffer from lack of changes of linen or bed clothes. The beds themselves are a most important item of the sick-room, and especially is this the case where the illness is painful or prolonged. Many sensitive and nervous patients suffer exceedingly from the hardness, lumpiness, sagging, hotness, or other discomforts of their beds. Good springs and mattresses are tidiest, coolest, and most easily made up, and for most patients are wholesome and comfortable. Light mattresses of feathers or down over the other mattress are admissable where the patient is aged, thin in flesh, or otherwise sensitive to the hardiness of his couch; but ordinary soft mattresses of cotton are preferable to feathers for both the sick and the well. In making the bed, the under sheet, which should be of extra large size, should be well tucked in all around, at head and foot as well as at sides, so that no amount of restless moving about shall pull it out of place. The upper sheet and quilts should be smoothly spread and tucked in well at foot, as it is most wearisome to the weak and ill to have the clothes twisting about, pulling up from the foot, or dragging off to the floor. Pillows should be of good size and soft.

Too seldom in the planning of our house is any thought given to the planning of a room to be sick in—it is so much more natural and agreeable to plan for our pleasure than our pain! But since pain is more or less the portion of all, would it not be well to plan a little for that also? If the sick-room is situated at too great a distance from the kitchen or work-room, from the stove, cistern, pantry, and the like, the result is much tiresome journeying for nurse, especially if she is also the wife, and mother, and house-keeper, and in addition to her sick-room duties, has to oversee, if not actually perform, those of the kitchen also. But on the other hand, it is only that anomaly in nature—a sick person without sick or sensitive nerves—that can, without disastrous results, endure the immediate nearness of the working machinery of the house, the pushing of chairs, the chattering of dishes, the constant moving to and fro. These things should be taken into account, and, as far as possible, the well-being of both patient and nurse considered.

Nor is the locality of the sick-room the only thing. Its size and pleasantness, its facilities for letting in fresh air and sunshine at need, should receive thought. Means for the total shutting out of flies and other troublesome insects, without obstruction of fresh air, are also, for the summer, a most important point.—Country Gentleman.

How Diseases are Propagated.—The assertion is made by Prof. Tyndall that diseases are propagated, not by effluvia or sewer gas, but by solid particles discharged into the atmosphere by currents of air or gas. This conclusion he was led to by the following experiment: He cut up a piece of steak steeped in water, heated it a little above the temperature of the blood, then strained off the liquid; in a short time this fluid became turbid, and when examined through a microscope was found to be swarming with living organisms; by the application of heat these were killed, and when the solution was filtered, he obtained a perfectly pure liquid, which, if kept free from particles of dust, would remain pure for an unlimited period; but if a fly were to dip its leg in fluid containing living organisms, and then into the pure liquid, the whole would be swarming with animalculæ in forty-eight hours.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

LEOPARDS IN PAY FOR LEARNING.

Edward S. Morris, consul for Liberia, Africa, residing in Philadelphia, relates this beautiful incident:

It was at sunset, one beautiful Sabbath day, as I stood for the last time on the beach at Monrovia, Liberia, waiting for my boat to take me out to the anchored vessel at sea. A little native boy came to me, bowing low, but with his eyes firmly fixed upon me. I told him to stand up; and never bow to man, (believing that to be orthodox to begin with); understanding my actions more than words, he stood up. I then said, What do you want?" In broken, disjointed English—the best the little fellow could utter—and pointing out to the ship, he said: "You God-man take me big America, big ship." "What for?" I asked. He answered, "Me learn big English you."

In consequence of my then enervated condition, resulting from overwork, I was forced to say "No" to the little fellow. I said it not harshly but in mild and gentle accents; whereupon he immediately drew from the folds of a cloth around him, two little leopards, alive, with unopened eyes, and presenting them, said: "Me give him; you take me big America, big ship, learn big English." Think of it, the mother leopard must to his knowledge have been near when he captured her kittens; still, that hungry, thirsting child risked his life to earn a passage to America solely to gain an education.

This little boy could have obtained as his passage-money—without any such risk of life—a parrot or a beautiful gazelle, the tusk of an elephant, or large ear-rings of pure African gold; but no, he wanted to convince me at the beginning, not only of his bravery, bnt of his burning desire for education—for "big English," as he called it. I have no words to tell yon of my feelings so unexpectedly brought into action.

There are thousands of such courageous boys in the Niger Valley alone, and as many more in Soudan, burning for education. This indigenous human clement should, for substantial reasons, be educated in Africa, and not out of it. Native Christian teachers, graduates from my school house, are to be some of the lights for a Dark Continent," containing two hundred millions of people.

GENERAL WASHINGTON.

AN INCIDENT.

One pleasant morning in August, 1775, Gen. Washington set out from his headquarters at Cambridge on horseback, merely for recreation. As was frequently the case, he rode unattended and wore the dress of a civilian. He had proceeded a couple of miles in the direction of Watertown, when he saw a woman far advanced in years, sitting in a doorway and moaning piteously. His sympathy was at once aroused, and bringing his horse to a halt, he inquired—

"What troubles you, my good woman?"

"Oh, sir," was the reply, "some rebel soldiers have been here this morning, and stolen or destroyed everything in my garden. I had cultivated the garden with my hands, and looked to what I should gather from it for the support of my invalid husband and myself during the coming winter."

"May I see your husband?"

"Certainly. He is always glad to have any one call upon him."

Washington dismounted, tied his horse to a fence, and then followed the woman into the house, where, on every side, he found evidences of extreme poverty. He was, however, cordially welcomed by the feeble old man, who, bolstered up in bed, extended to him a thin, colorless hand. For half an hour, or more, the commander-in-chief of the American army held converse with the aged couple, during which he learned they were pronounced tories, and had two sons—their only children—among Gage's troops in Boston. Before taking his departure, he drew some money from his pocket and held it towards the woman, saying:

"This will enable you to provide for your present needs." She at first manifested a reluctance to receiving it, but finally accepted it, with profuse thanks. Then he promised that Gen. Washington should be informed of the treatment to which his soldiers had subjected her.

"General Washington!" she exclaimed; "he is our bitterest enemy, and will, doubtless, rejoice to know that any who sympathize with the British have been abused."

"I think you are mistaken in regard to his disposition; I hope you are at least," was the answer, with a smile, as he left the house.

He immediately rode to Maj.-Gen. Putnam, who commanded the center divisiou of the army—stationed at Cambridge—and having acquainted him with what he had just learned, ordered a search for the maranders to be instituted and that, when identified, they be sent to his head-quarters. The third day thereafter, an aide-de-camp conducted three soldiers into his presence.

"Are you the ones who disgraced the uniform you wear by plundering a defenceless woman's garden?" asked Washington, sternly.

"She is a tory," was the indirect answer.

"So she told me, and also that her sons are in the British army. But she is a woman, nevertheless, and for that reason, if for no other, entitled to respect. Your wanton conduct was worthy of oppressors rather than of those who—as does the American army—aim to prevent oppression. Accompany them to the woman whom they molested," addressing the officer having them in charge, "and see that they fully compensate her for the damage they wrought. Another offence of a like nature will not be dealt with so leniently."

Later that same day while he was engaged in writing, a servant informed him that a woman waited in an adjoining room, who was urgent to see him, privately.

"Ask her to step in here," said Washington, laying aside his quill.

When the woman presented herself before him, he saw she was the one in whose behalf he had acted a few hours previously. She went to him and placed her tremling hand upon his arm, saying, "God bless you!" Then the tears came and she could articulate no more.

"Please be seated, madame," and Washington placed a chair for her.

She seated herself, and' as soon as she could command her voice, continued—

"Only a little time ago the soldiers who robbed my garden came and gave me a sum of money, more than sufficient to make good my loss. From them I learned that my visitor of the other morning was General Washington himself—of whom I had held so erroneous an impression—and that it was at his—your—command that they recompensed me. When they had gone, my husband and I, talking the matter over, came to the conclusion that such a commander- so unlike General Gage, who never calls his men to acconnt for any violence or injury they may have done to the rebels—would not be likely to have charge of au unjust cause; and, though we have been firm adherents of the king, we then and there resolved to espouse your cause in the future. I think our sons, when they learn what has occurred to us, will do the same. I came here to tell you this. God bless you!" and touching her lips to his hand, she went from the apartment.

Within the month, two soldiers--this woman's sons—deserted the British standard and enrolled themselves with those who fought beneath the flag, which was emblematical of freedom, justice, equality. One of them was killed, the other was severely wounded in the assault on Quebec, under Arnold. This story was often told in Boston and Cambridge during the Revolution and after its close, but we do not know that it has been given in history. It is one of the many local traditions of Washington, and we present the version of it that was told by the old-time firesid s. Stories of popular kiugs acting the part of unknown benefactors have often been told, as, for example, King Henry and the miller, King James and the tinker, but we have not before met witn a like incident of Washington.—Youths' Companion.

TEMPERANCE.

A COUNTERBLAST.

The Cigar vs. Lady Students.—One of the members of the Columbia College faculty argues against the propriety of admitting ladies as students, using as an argument the fact that the habits of the young men in the college are such as to render the environment disagreeable to ladies. He says that "nearly every student enters the campus puffing a cigar; he lights a cigarette between recitation hours and finaly leaves college in the afternoon enveloped in a cloud of smoke." Is tobacco then, the President of Columbia College?

In the Blood.—The New York Times has a startling warning for tobacco-users. A gentleman of wealth and culture, with a cigar in his mouth, passed ont of an instrument-maker's establishment as a professor of microscopy entered it. The wealthy gentleman was himself an amateur in the use of the microscope, and had just been trying the power of one upon a drop of blood from his finger. The instrument was still adjusted on the counter, and the professor glanced into it. Inquiring of the proprietor who the gentleman was, he informed him that he was his best customer, buying largely of his instruments. "And this is a drop of blood from his finger?" asked the professor. To the affirmative answer he said, "Very well, tell your best customer, if you can without impertinence, that unless he stops smoking at once, he has not many months to live." He did not stop, but left for Europe in a few weeks to recruit his failing strength, and in a short time his death was announced from Paris, the doctors styling his disease "a geueral breaking up."

Adulterated Tobacco.—In the last report of the Commissioners of H. M. Inland Revenue, the Principle of the Laboratory states (p.24) that of 148 samples of tobacco examined during the year, 53 proved to be adulterated. Nearly all the adulterated samples consisted of smuggled cavendish, illegally imported American packet tobaccos, or of foreign cigarettes which contained prohibited ingredients. With one small exception, there was no evidence of adulteration in the tobacco manufactories inspected. The consumption of tobacco is not equal to what it was in 1877, before the addition of the duty: it is at present barely keeping pace with the increase of population.

Selfishness of Smokers.—The Hon. Neal Dow has discovered that more than one class in the community has rights. Of smokers who indulge in the presence of ladies and other non-smokers, he says: "These are men whose moral sense is dulled, if not deadened, by the tobacco habit. They do not even consider, they do not think of it, that these people have a right to the pure, fresh air, so important to their comfort and health, and they poison it with tobacco smoke. The pure air is as much their right as is the purse in their pocket; and the forcibly taking it away by the tobacco smoker is as much stealing, in the moral sense, as picking the pocket; but these tobacco victims do not think of, or do not heed."—The Outlook.

Satan's Kindling Wood.—Beware of cigarettes. Says a correspondent of the Rural New Yorker, "I have tried cigarette smoking, and have examined cigarettes, wet and dry. I find opium and fenugreek in them to such an extent that the smoking of one or two would narcotize me, although I am an old smoker. In closely observing ardent smokers of cigarettes, I have observed the effect of the opium in the eyes and its unmistakable operation on the nervous system, and in other ways have seen the ruin the use of the fashionable cigarette is bringing upon young men and middle-aged men, too That there is misery and death in the use of the cigarette as now made, I challenge any man to deny. No person who habitually uses them, as now prepared, can long be healthy, especially in the nervous system, nor can such persons long have good sight, appetite or physical comfort."

Saturated with Nicotine.—One of the Delmonicos died in New York a few days ago from the excessive use of tobacco. "I have known him," says Dr. Wood, who attended him for a long time, "to smoke as many as one hundred cigars in one day. He was completely saturated with nicotine, and the question of his death was only one of time." His cigars were of the strongest tobacco, and he smoked them without ceasing during his waking hours. As a result he was often attacked with fits of choking, which threatened to carry him off. His disease, Dr. Zolnowski says, is known to the medical profession as emphysema of the lungs. For years he had been under medical treatment, changing his physicians often, but gaining no permanent relief from his affliction.

Tobacco Intemperance.—It is probably safe to say that not one man in ten can use tobacco temperately; and that of students—that is, editors, ministers, lawyers, and all sedentary people, there is no example on record of any of them using it moderately. The result is that we have no doubt that the number of years of human life lost by the use of tobacco is greater than the number of years of life lost by the drinking of alcoholic liquors. It is a great misfortune every way for a young man to contract the habit. He stands nine chances out of ten to have his life shortened by it, and ten chances in ten to have his usefulness impaired. The tobacco user is often subjected to great annoyance, inconvenience, and sometimes shame, and he can hardly hope to be as agreeable or useful to others as he would be without it. The effort to break the habit, when once it is fairly settled, involves so much pain that few persons have sufficient endurance and will-power to persevere in it—and yet the alternative is liable to come, almost certain, we may say, to come, to the student—stop! be insane! or die! And one may wake up to the alternative when it is too late to choose. Boys, take the advice of one who is no Traskian fanatic, and never touch the weed. It may be said just as truly of it as of another drug, though it moves more slowly, "At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."—Interior.

The Metropolitan Drinking Fountain and Cattle Trough Associatiou has now 497 fountains and 502 tronghs established in London, and it is estimated that 250,000,000 visits are paid to these annually.

American Politics.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

PARTIES AND PRINCIPLES.

BY REV. J. C. K. MILLIGAN, NEW YORK.

There are noble Christian names among those who rally to the Democratic standard, but neither in its principles nor its membership is it a Christian party. In its politics there are strange bed-fellows; in Maine it humbly follows Greenback leaders; in Massachusetts it adopts General Butler as its exponent; in New York it is for honest money, but is ruled by Tammany Hall and corrupt rings; in Ohio it rallies to the cry, Free Whisky and no Sunday; in the South it includes the greater part of white Christians. but is largely run by the fire-eaters, Ku Klux and other secret orders. Everywhere Roman Catholics, Mormons, Jews, infidel foreigners, liquor men, and criminal classes are found in its ranks, and shape its policy. It was the pro-slavery party, and is the white man's party; it favors divorce and opposes all Sabbath laws; it helps the Mormons and opposes as "sumptuary legislation" any restriction of the liquor traffic, and even its taxation like other business; and leaves our elections unprotected against tissue ballots, repeaters, and unnaturalized foreigners. In no respect is Christian morality safe through its influence.

In the North the Christian population, both native and foreign, is largely Republican; the evangelical ministry and professional classes are largely in its ranks; the negroes, North and South, are in it. Unfortunately it has a few Romanists, infidel Germans, and liquor men, who oppose all attempts to squarely meet the moral issues of the day, and so many of the professional politicians that they have succeeded in excluding principles from its platform, and by their corrupt policy have so controlled the organization that it has been cast off by its Christian members and lies a wreck. It is doubtful whether the madness of its rings and the virtue of its supporters will ever allow it to recover its former prestige.

The Constitution of the United States, containing no reference to God or Christ, or the Bible, or Christian morality, has produced its natural fruit in the separation of religious principles from politics, till our politics are wholly Godless; nay, Christians unite with the most depraved and against each other in political relations, and by secret plans and organizations the vicious classes are dominant, hold the offices high and low, and drive away the better class of Christians. Hundreds of thousands refuse even to vote because so often betrayed by their party candidates, or they see so little choice in the rival nominees, they are compelled to dissent from the Constitution as recusant to the claims of Christ and his law. In such a state of affairs we must soon become like the infidel French republic of the last century, unless the Christian and moral part of the community can be united in some efficient effort to save our country.

The present time is favorable for this in many respects. The Christian South is growing sick of the Bourbon rule that unreasonably forces a sectional attitude; and would gladly accept any basis which would bring them into harmony with the better portion of the North, rather than with its worst elements. In the North, at the late election, the Christian rank and file refused to obey the dictation of their Republican party leaders; in New York State it is reliably estimated that 150,000 Republicans did not vote at all; 60,000 voted the Democratic ticket for governor, and 28,000 more than last year voted the Temperance ticket. The Prohibition party fails to secure the co-operation of its friends, because vital interests are left out of its platform requiring another party organization. The Democrats this year, making a virtue of necessity, put up their best men for candidates; but we shall wait for some grapes and figs from these, and the repetition of the policy, before we take much stock. There is no hope from Republicans as now organized; a trusty re-organization is doubtful, and if it is secured, the influence of its bad elements, the bitterness of its feud, and sectional prejudices would delay or prevent hearty Christian co-operation.

The undoubted majority of the citizens of this country are Christians in affiliation if not profession, and prefer to see Christian morality, justice and integrity in its government; and if a hopefnl organization embodying Christian principles, and headed by able and earnest men, could be formed, it would probably rally these in a controlling number. The difficulty will be to formulate a platform. The following is suggested for consideration:

I. Liberty, based on Paul's inspired words to the Greek Areopagites, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation," including equal civil and political rights for all who have not forfeited them by crime.

II. Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic, according to the Word of God. "Wo unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness." The Republican party has been "temperance enough" to repel all the friends of the liquor traffic, but not enough to have the confidence of honest Prohibitionists. If Baal be God, follow him; if the Lord be God, follow him.

III. Suffrage limited by Intelligence and Moral Character. One who cannot read or write, one who is a habitual drunkard, a thief, or a felon, ought to be denied the ballot until reformed. "The wicked walk on every side when the vilest men are exalted" to the exercise of the soverign power of citizenship, and elect our rulers at the nod and beck of educated demagogues.

IV. Civil Service Reform, based on God's Law, "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." "Thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness." By Constitutional law, officers should have high moral character, approved ability, promotion when deserved, and removal for cause, or at a fixed limit of age or time; and without this, effort at reform is useles.

V. A Revision of the Constitution to embody these principles, to unify its different parts, to blot out all the traces of slavery, to establish Christian morality as supreme law in the land so as to forever prevent the admission of a Morman State or the enactment of un-Christian laws, and to honor the soverign Lord who has made and preserved us a nation, and whose name is loved and adored throughout the Christian world as "above every name."

These principles are clearly founded on the Word of God, and must commend themselves to every Christian; they lie at the foundation of civil and religions liberty, and of national prosperity; and they are the questions of the hour already widely discussed and approved. A party with some such platform will be in the near future; is the only hope of successful opposition to the now dominant democracy; is demanded by thousands of our best citzens, Democrats and Republicans, in the North and South, in the East and West; and is essential to guard against the red republicanism which is cunningly seizing control of our government and undermining our Christian liberties. If the Christian ministry, the Christian press, and Christian statesmen will give it their earnest attention, surely a platform can be prepared, a party can be organized, and patriotic Christian citizens can be rallied to its standard; and thus the desire and prayer of every believing follower of Jesus will be assured, that our beloved land may speedily become a kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

Let us all ponder the wise words of Mordecai to Esther; "For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed. And who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"—Christian Statesman.

The Churches.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley, Wesleyan evangelist, has been holding special meetings with the College church, Wheaton, during the past week, beginning on Sabbath, Feb. 18th. Much interest is manifested and the meetings are continued.

—A remarkable religious interest is reported among the Indian and colored pupils of the Hampton Institute, Virginia.

—The Lutheran church in the United States has: Ministers, 3,504—gain, 197; churches, 6,171—gain, 320; communicants, 801,486—gain, 62,073.

—It is estimated that nearly $107,000,000 were given for benevolent and religious purposes by the different denominations of this country last year.

—The Detroit Ministerial Union, composed of members of the various Protestant denominations of the city, after a full discussion, have voted, 23 to 1, that the so-called Apostles' Creed is not a sufficient declaration of faith on which to admit members to that body.

—A revival is in progress at Middleboro, Mass., attended with so great interest that no church edifice in the vicinity is sufficient to hold the crowds who wish to be present at the meetings. Men come seven miles in stormy weather to share in the blessings bestowed.

—Rev. E. Frank Howe, successor of the long esteemed Bro. A. A. Stevens, as pastor of the First Congregational church, Peoria, is conforming to the manners of our fashionable churches by observing Lent in a series of lectures to his young people.

—A new Free Methodist church in Vineland, N. J., was to have been dedicated last Sabbath by Rev. B. T. Roberts. General Superintendent.

—The First Presbyterian Church, Chicago, has rented Central Music Hall for the evenings of fifteen Sabbaths, and will maintain religious services there for the purpose of reaching a large and neglected class of the "down-town" population. Prof. Tomlins will have charge of the music, and Dr. Barrows of the preaching, or at least will be responsible for it.

—Rev. John D. Potter, the evangelist, has been laboring with the churches in Western Pennsylvania. At Spring Creek where a church was organized last fall, there was very deep conviction. Among the converts are men who have been bitter opponents of religion. A house of worship is to be built in the spring. At Mercer six churches united, stores and offices were closed, and there were many conversions, among whom were men of influence. Mr. Potter goes to Lorain, Ohio, soon.

—A most remarkable religious awakening is in progress in York county, in the State of Maine, through the preaching of the Rev. John T. Vine, the evangelist. He has been preaching nightly for nine weeks in Sanford and East Lebanon, and crowds flock to hear him. Such a revival has not occurred in Sanford for a quarter of a century, and it is still spreading.

—It is a significant fact, as shown by the annual sales of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, that the demand for the Shorter Catechism is steadily increasing, and at the same time, that the demand for the Child's Catechism, for very young children, has so advanced that the yearly sales now reach seventy or eighty thousand. This does not look as if the use of the Catechism was dying out very rapidly.—Presbyterian.

—The "Methodist Year Book," just published, gives these statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, North, on July 1, 1882: Annual conferences, 99; missions (not included in conferences), 13; bishops, 11; itinerant preachers, 12,552; local preachers, 12,106; members on probation, 172,468; members in full connection, 1,551,952; churches, 17,935; parsonages, 6,150; value of churches, $66,405,568; value of parsonages, $9,021,034; number of Sunday-schools, 20,894; number of officers and teachers, 222,863; number of scholars, 8,608,836.

—More than 120 persons have been hopefully converted since the week of prayer, in the Presbyterian and Methodist churches of Whitehall, N. Y., and the Holy Spirit still moves on the hearts of the people. Business men, skepties and hardened sinners are anxiously inquiring what they must do to be saved, and the whole town is moved.

—It is reported that in the revival in the Presbyterian Church in Schaghticoke, N. Y., between eighty and ninety persons, of all ages, have been converted. It is further added that the revival started from the paying off of the church debt. An elderly Scotch lady gave the first impetus by remarking: "Now we have paid off our debt and done our part, let us pray the Lord to give us what we need the most, an outpouring of the Spirit."

—The principal mission work in Egypt is that of the United Presbyterian Church of the United States. It was begun in 1854. It had in 1881 four principal stations, at Alexandria, Mousoura, Cairo and Asyoot, or Osioot, 54 out-stations, 9 ordained foreign missionaries, 1 presbytery, 17 organized congregations, 9 ordained native pastors, 7 unmarried female missionaries, 136 native teachers and helpers, 13 churches, 1,168 communicants, 88 schools (48 week-day, 40 Sunday), 3,084 scholars, and 21 Bible women and teachers in zenana work—i. e., among the women. Classes for the training of teachers and theological students were conducted at Osioot and Cairo by Rev. Drs. Hogg and Lansing. Native evangelical schools have increased every year, nearly all of them self-supporting, and conducted by the natives themselves. All departments of the work were interrupted by the recent war. Much prayer should be offered for the missionary workers and for those who have, in the providence of God, the responsibility for the settlement of affairs political and military, that a new and more effectual door may be open for the former by the wise and righteous conduct of the latter.

—William E. Dodge, the New York Philanthropist, left property worth about $15,000,000. The following are the bequests in his will to charitable institutions: Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, $50,000; Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, $50,000; American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, $50,000: education of young men for the ministry, $50,000; American Bible Society, $10,000; American Tract Society, $20,000; American Sunday School Union, $10,000; National Temperance Society, $10,500; City Missions and Tract Society, $20,000; Presbyterian Board of Publication, $10,000; Lincoln University, $10,000: Children's Aid Society, $5,000; Howard University, $5,000; Atlanta University, $5,000; Hampton Institute, $5,000; Presbyterian Board for Aged Ministers, $5,000; American Seamen's Friend Society, $5,000; International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, $5,000; McAuley Mission, $5,000; Syrian Protestant College, $20,000; Metropolitan Museum of Art, $5,000; American Museum of National History, $5,000.

The New York Chamber of Commerce, at its meeting on March 1, will adopt measures toward perpetuating in some permanent manner the memory of Mr. Dodge.

—A meeting of representative men of the Society of Friends in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Kansas was held in this city in the literary room of the Young Men's Christian Association in Farwell Hall Building, Tuesday last, to arrange for the establishment of a publishing house in the interest of their denomination. The growth of the denomination in the West in recent years has been so great as to make such a step necessary. The capital stock of the company is limited to $50,000, and it is required that it shall have $15,000 to start with. The commissioners are A. H. Pickering, W. B. Wickersham, and F. B Hill, appointed at a similar meeting a year ago. The meeting was unanimous in prosecuting the enterprise, and it was arranged that a meeting of stockholders for the election of a board of managers should be held on the 27th inst. Arraugements have been made to transfer the Christian Worker, the Olive Leaf, and the Bible Lesson Leaf to the association on the first of March, and the office of publication will be changed at that date to the headquarters of the association from New Vienna, O.

—The Christian Worker publishes an earnest protest from a Friend in Iowa against the lodge. He writes: "It is well known that some, if not all, of the popular churches, are for the most part under the control of Freemasons and other kindred associations, and that but a few of the smaller denominations are making a successful stand against the encroachmeut of this system and 'Mystery of Iniquity.' At the last yearly meeting a prominent minister spoke in connection with the consideration of the 'State of Society' referring to oaths, warned Friends against secret societies and their horrible obligations. He was promptly met by two or three well-meaning Friends on the floor of the meeting, who deprecated that such 'respectable associations' were to be treated so uncivilly in such an intelligent audience, etc., whereupon all discussion was promptly closed." The brother quotes at length President Finney's striking letter to Woodruff Post and several convincing extracts from his book. The Iowa Friends need to renew the battle "every day and help divine implore."

LIBERIAN SCHOOLS.

PHILADELPHIA, First Month, 1883.

My first school in Liberia, Africa, was opened by a Christian lady from America, Mrs. Ogden, April 11, 1881. Twenty-two children found modern school desks, made in Philadelphia, for their use, with the necessary school books, maps, charts, slates and pencils, to read, write and cipher. More than sixty children are now in daily attendance. Material for uniform clothing is forwarded annually and substantially made there on a sewing machine belonging to the school. The present teacher writes as follows:

"The boys wear the coats and pants as designed by you, and the girls wear short gowns. How interesting they look when they all appear in school. The parents and guardians are well pleased with the progress their children are making. Some of the native children are now in the Fourth Reader; last year they did not know a letter of the alphabet or a word of English. They truly learn fast; some can already write and cipher. They not only attend school daily, but Sabbath-school also. The interior chiefs often come and talk about your school. When all your plans shall be successfully carried out, this mission will be second to none in Liberia, and our interior settlement will go ahead with practical education."

The above are brief extracts from monthly reports received from the school teacher. The reading of the New Testament Scripture, Foster's Bible books, and Dr. Richardson's temperance lessons are embraced in the daily school teaching. By mail, via England, I am every month sending to the teacher hundreds of seeds of the cinchona—the eucalyptus-globulus, and the mulberry. If the climate of Africa will allow the latter to grow to a tree, then it is my intention to inaugurate silk culture. This industry, more than any other, methinks, will be a practical step towards helping African women to become independent of the men. The future of Africa must come from Christian mothers, not women slaves. If it is true that "the home is the father of the state," so it is true that woman is the mother of the home.

EDWARD S. MORRIS.

Edward S. Morris, the Quaker philanthropist of Philadelphia, has become in himself a missionary society for Africa, and has begun the planting of schools in Liberia. He works upon a unique and commendable plan. He sells for this purpose the Palm Oil Soap, manufactured from the palm oil of Liberia, and this fine toilet article is in the market solely for Liberia's benefit. He says of it: "So soon as I can reach the sale of 1,000 gross of this 'matchless' soap annually, I can and will build and establish a school in Liberia each and every year—steppiug towards the Niger Valley, hoping to reach the heart of Soudan. The Mohammedan chiefs will welcome a 'Christian,' who practices and believes in the law of the Koran, declaring that 'fermented liquor is a snare and a curse from the devil.' Faith, work, and patience, methinks, will in due time reach the 1,000 gross. I find it much easier to give all the 'first fruits of my increase,' than to ask any one for money to help light up the 'Dark Continent.'" The friends of Africa may help in this good work by addressing Mr. Morris at No. 4 Merrick St., Philadelphia.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The President has sent to the Senate the names of the Civil Service Commissioners, as follows: Dorman B. Eaton New York; John B. Gregory, Illinois. Leroy D.Thoman. Ohio.

—The Clerk of the United States Supreme Court, who has been making from thirty to forty thousand dollars annually in fees, has had his lucrative business terminated by Congress, as a clause in the sundry civil appropriation bill now peuding fixes his compensation at $6,000, and requires him to pay over all fees in excess of that to the United States Treasury.

—A systematic effort is being made by the Commercial Gazette to ascertain the losses by the flood in Cincinnati. The difficulties are too great to enable it to reach anything like an accurate result. The largest actual loss is to the gas company—$100,000, besides the loss of a week's business. The loss to the coal interest is $100,000; to the city from broken culverts, sewers, drains, and sidewalks, $10,000; to railroads, actual and indirect, $500,000. The personal losses, so far as gathered, will amount to hundreds of thousands, but nothing like a complete estimate can ever be made.

—The Cairo correspondent of the Globe-Democrat writes that that point and for many miles below is as high or higher than the great flood last year. Bird's Point, opposite Cairo, on the Missouri side, is submerged; and people have either abandoned their houses or are living in second stories. The town is also filled with ice which has floated in from the river. The bottom lands on both sides of the Mississippi River below Cairo are flooded, and great damage is being doue to farm property. A large number of cattle, hogs, and other stock have been drowned.

—A dispute among teamsters in Brown's logging camp, twenty-six miles east of Tawas, Mich., resulted in one of them stealing into the other's cabin and decapitating him with one stroke of an ax. The murderer was immediately hanged to a tree.

—C. B. Richards & Co. of New York have transmitted to the Rhine flood sufferers subscriptions aggregating $112,174.

—Some of the Sophomore class of Dartmouth College "larded" the seats of the Faculty in the chapel, and suspeusions have been pronounced.

—A great silver ore discovery has been made twenty miles south of Tucson, Arizona. A large expanse is included, and at least half a million's worth of the precious metal is in sight.

—The first through freight train on the Canadian Pacific road, from Montreal to Manitoba, was dispatched Thursday.

—In the school-house attached to the German Catholic church of the Most Holy Redeemer, at New York, under the care of the Sisters of Notre Dame, fire under the stairway in the second story, Monday afternoon, caused a panic among the children in attandance, who rushed for the exits, causing the breaking of the balustrade, thus sending the surging mass to the floor below. The little ones were piled upon each other from four to five deep, and still others were pushed down by the frantic crowd above. Six were taken out dead, nine died after being rescued, and three have died since. The accident caused great excitement and the streets were jammed with people for blocks around.

—The Oberlin druggist who attempted to secure $30,000 damages from Rev. Mr. Brand, President Finney's successor as pastor of the First church, for libel in a sermon denouncing him for selling rum, has lost his suit.

—Over a hundred workmen at Sing Sing refused to work the other day and a general strike is feared. The dark cells are not available for their punishment. The penalty imposed is the frugality of a bread-and-water diet.

—By the latest mail from Madagascar it is learned that the French flag is flying on the northwest coast. Owing to the fact that the natives are very much irritated, the Prime Minister has begged the foreign residents at Tamatav not to venture to the interior. Warlike preparations are proceeding at Tamatav.

—A society of Socialists has been discovered at Xeres, and several of the members have been arrested. A number of documents were seized, clearly proving the connection of the prisoners with secret societies abroad.

—The coronation of King Kalakaua took place Feb. 12. About 7,000 persons witnessed the ceremony, which passed off without interruption or disturbance. The event fully establishes the general popularity of the King in the Islands.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.—At a recent session of the Fulton Street noon-day prayer meeting, in New York, a man who has been devoting a large share of his time during the last quarter of a century to this subject, made the following significant statement: He said, "We do not find the opposition of infidel Germans, or powerful railway and other Sabbath breaking corporations, or even the liquor interests, or all together the chief difficulty. It is the blindness of the clergy, and other professing Christians. Their desecration of the great Rest Day is undermining it more efficiently than all other causes combined." Is it not time for the sons of the Church "who have not bowed the knee to this Baal, to pledge themselves to stand together as a bulwark to stem the tide of Sabbath breaking? A tide which is a menace to the national life, the main stay of the liquor trade, and a dry rot of vital Christianity. Sunday street and steam cars and steamboats, for example, deplete the churches by taking people who are needed in chapels, near where they live; they are enslaving several hundred thousand corporation employees. Already the working men of Europe are finding that Sunday labor results in their getting only six days pay for seven days work, and they are protesting against the outrage. If the laboring man rises against this secular abuse, it surely is a disgrace to Christians, either by precept, example, or inaction to have part or lot in the prostitution. "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." Moody, it is said, will not set foot on a street-car on the Sabbath.

[NOTE.—Any one who sees this in print, and who indorses these views, please address a letter or postal card to that effect to the "Sabbath Committee, P. O. Box 1801 Philadelphia, Pa." Also, please try and secure reprint of above in a secular newspaper.]

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

The Cynosure is happy to announce herewith a grand list of contributors and correspondents for 1883. HINTS FOR THE SHOP.

A GOOD two-foot rule is this: Always keep your feet dry.

TO DRIVE NAILS into hard wood dip the points into lard and there will be no difficulty from breaking or doubling up. Carpenters who are engaged in repairing old buildings sometimes carry a small lump of lard or tallow for this purpose on one of their boots or shoes.

A CHEAP BLACK PAINT or varnish for iron work is prepared as follows: Clear, solid wood tar, 10 pounds; lamp black or mineral black, 1½ pounds; oil of turpentine, 5½ quarts. The tar is first heated in a large iron pot to boiling, or nearly so, and the heat is continued for about four hours. The pot is then removed from the fire out of doors, and while still warm (not hot) the turpentine, mixed with the black, is stirred in. If the varnish is too thick to dry quickly, add more turpentine. Benzine can be used instead of turpentine, but the results are not so good. Asphaltum is preferable to cheap tar.

YELLOW PINE FLOOR.—A man in Little Rock, Ark., went to work to see how fine a yellow pine floor he could put down First he had the lumber cut in winter and stacked in the open air till the next fall, shifting the pile several times that all parts might dry equally; then he stored it in the house above a furnace for two or three months. The lumber was then sent to the mill to be dressed; when this was done the floor was laid and treated to two coats of raw linseed oil mixed with a trifle of melted beeswax and well dried in. The result was a floor perfectly smooth, handsomer than any tapestry, and that showed no disposition to crack, although subject to furnace heat.

TO TAKE OUT RUSTED SCREWS.—One of the most simple and readiest methods for loosening a rusted screw is to apply heat to the head of the screw. A small bar or rod of iron, flat at the end, if reddened in the fire and applied for a couple or three minutes to the head of the rusted screw, will, as soon as it heats the screw, render its withdrawal as easy by the screw-driver as if it was only a recently inserted screw. As there is a kitchen poker in every house, that instrument, if heated at its extremity, and applied for a few minutes to the head of the screw or screws, will do the required work of loosening, and an ordinary screw-driver will do the rest, without causing the least damage, trouble, or vexation of spirit. In all work above the common kind, where it is necessary to use screws, and particularly in hinge work and mountings, fancy fastenings and appliances affixed to joinery or furniture work, we would advise the oiling of screws or the dipping their points in grease before driving them. This will render them more easy to drive and also to withdraw, and it will undoubtedly retard for a longer time the action of rusting.

CUTTING GLASS.—Very few persons are aware that glass can be cut with scissors or shears, if it is only kept under water, the pressure of which prevents the small pieces cut off from flying away and the cracking of the large pieces. The glass must be kept as deeply under the water as the bowl or pail will permit; but the cutting cannot be done like cutting cardboard, for instance; a piece of glass cannot be cut in two; in attempting this it may break in the wrong place and produce more than two pieces—it is only possible to trim edges and corners in this way, so as to reduce the shape gradually to that required. Soft glass is the best for the operation. It is not necessary that the scissors should be sharp, their action not appearing to depend on the state of their edge. Ovals and segments can be easily cut in this manner when a diamond is not at hand; and although such cutting may leave the edges not quite so smooth, yet the process is often perfectly satisfactory.

TO DEADEN NOISE IN WORK-SHOPS.

1. Rubber cushions under the legs of the work-bench. In a certain factory the hammering of fifty coppersmiths was scarcely audible in the room below, their benches having under each leg a rubber cushion.

2. Kegs of sand or sawdust applied in the same way. A few inches of sand or sawdust is first poured into each keg; on this is laid a board or block upon which the leg rests, and around the leg and block is poured fine dry sand or sawdust. Not only all noise, but all vibration and shock, are prevented; and an ordinary anvil so mounted may be used in a dwelling house without annoying the inhabitants. To amateurs, whose workshops are usually located in dwelling-houses, this device affords a cheap and simple relief from a very great annoyance.—Workshop Companion.

THE CHURCHES AGAINST LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen, $15.00.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

ONE HUNDRED ANTI-MASONIC LIBRARIES.

AND A COPY OF THE CYNOSURE WITH EACH.

The donation of a friend for that purpose enables us to offer the Cynosure for a year and one of one hundred set of our $12.00 libraries at half the price of the libraries. By this offer you can secure books to the value of $14.00 as advertised on page 15 of the Cynosure and one copy of the paper for a year for $6.00, express charges extra, on the following conditions:

1. The order, accompanied with the money, must be received before April 1, 1883.

2. The library must be used for the benefit of the public. None will be furnished for exclusively private use except to lecturers or actual pastors of churches for their own use (not to sell). It is particularly desired to put as many of these libraries as possible into public, especially college libraries; but any one who wishes one of these libraries and will invite the public to make use of the books by posting up in public places cards furnished free for that purpose, is entitled to a library and the Cynosure for one year on receipt of $6.00; provided—

3rd. That it is received before the one hundred are gone and not later than April 1st.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of CAPT. WM. MORGAN. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents, per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 De-GREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most Interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason, and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Chris-TIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Re-PUBLIC, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Oddfellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

BUSINESS.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

Much importance will attach to Pres. Blanchard's communications from Washington. His letters are always and under any circumstances read with interest and profit. He will visit Congress, the several departments and bureaus, the Botanical Gardens and public Libraries, the Literary Clubs and art galleries, the universities, observatories, public schools and asylums, taking in the Parks and national grounds, with their immense statuary, fountains and embellishments such as are found in no other city on the continent. He will make the acquaintance of foreign ministers and distinguished Americans and write up the personal of Washington as far as possible. With such facilities for gathering and his happy faculty of communicating not one of our 20,000 readers can afford to lose a single number of the Cynosure at this juncture.

TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS.

The few hundreds who have received and read the Cynosure on the four weeks Trial list, may safely reckon that the best is yet in reserve, and they should be careful not to miss a single number, by neglecting to forward their subscriptions for a year in time to avoid a break. Our back numbers have been so reduced by calls for specials that we can promise no back numbers, and you should be sure to keep the connection.

We are on the eve of a struggle which is to determine who shall rule and administer our government. Whether secret rings and cliques all centering in Freemasonry shall connive at the crimes of oath-bound confederates, or open courts with lawful oaths shall assure rights to all, on the plane of equality and law.

THE OLD GUARD.

Will the "Old Guard" look after the new four weeks recruits and see that they are mustered into the regular army, and fall into line on the Lord's side.

A PROMISE.

The time has expired in which we promised four numbers of the Cynosure for 10 cts., to Trial Subscribers. Several hundred have availed themselves of this opportunity and we are hoping to receive a sufficient increase in the list of annual subscriptions to justify the trial.

So many have written favorably that after consultation we have determined to extend the offer until the 22nd inst. We do this to give others an opportunity to get acquainted with our work, and especially with the Washington department. If yearly subscriptions received from Trial Subscribers should be sufficient to justify a further extension we shall be glad to extend the offer beyond the 22nd inst., otherwise we shall be compelled to close with that number. It is not for us but for you, friends, to say when this offer shall cease, by sending in subscribers—either your own or your neighbors.

TEN CENTS.

Friends are heartily endorsing the 10-cent "Trial-subscriber" plan of introducing their paper into the homes of their neighbors. This is as it should be, and now is the time to push on the work. This plan divides the expense of giving a great many persons an opportunity of becoming acquainted with our Association and its organ, and is better in many respects than the free sample copy plan. It should be pushed while the season lasts, and those desiring specimens for their own information should send orders.

We are prepared to fill all orders for anti-secrecy literature and to take subscriptions for the Christian Cynosure at No. 221 West Madison street, Chicago.

☞Our friends will aid in meeting the expenses of keeping up their Publishing House, by sending orders for books either anti-secret or the publications of the secret orders. Direct to W. I. Phillips, 221 West Madison St., Chicago.

Orders for books in the general trade are beginning to come in for which we are obliged. If you are going to order any thing published or sold in the trade of this city, please give us an opportunity to serve you and we will do our best to make it satisfactory and to you interest to order all books, tracts etc., from Head-quarters at 221 W. Madison St.

HELP YOURSELF AND THE CAUSE.

Much less inconvenience and confusion has occurred in the transfer of correspondence than was anticipated. It speaks well for the intelligence of our patrons that a letter intended for the N. C. A. or Cynosure is very seldom misdirected A glance at the book orders sent during the last few days, suggested that a word of commendation was due to those who have so readily fallen into line. You have our thanks, and we are still at your service to send anything published in the line of our reform and also any book on sale in this market. When you send for "Freemasonry Illustrated," "Odd-fellowship Revised," etc., put in your orders for Bibles, histories, biographies, volumes of sermons, books for your children or any standard works you may want. They will receive prompt attention at No. 221 West Madison street, and every penny of profit go to the credit of the work we have in hand as your agents and fellow-helpers.

FARM FOR SALE.
W. H. LAYTON OF MT. AYR, RINGGOLD CO., IOWA,
offers for sale his valuable farm of over seven hundred acres. This is a fine opportunity for some man who has six sons (more or less) to colonize and gather his children around him. Stock and implements sold with farm if desired. Price reasonable and terms easy. For particulars write as above.

ILLUSTRATED SUPPLEMENTS to the Christian Cynosure are occasionally ordered. The supply is exhausted, but "Freemasonry at a Glance" can be supplied which is very convenient for reference and in form more convenient to carry in the pocket.

CLUB OFFER.

The price of the Cynosure is $2.00 per year; of the American Agriculturist, the best farmers' illustrated monthly, is $1.50. We will send the two, with a fine steel engraving "In the Meadow," for $3.10.

TO OLD SUBSCRIBERS.

We want to keep all our old readers while adding many new ones to our list. We shall do our best to merit your confidence, and hope to receive your co-operation and continued patronage. Give us a fair trial before you "cut our acquaintance." We come to you with a clean dress, a pleasant face, and words of truth and soberness, modestly asking a weekly welcome at your fireside.

NOTES OF AFFAIRS.

The city of Washington hardly realized the presence of hallowed time last Sabbath. Congress after dragging on its business until the last moment finally adjourned at noon—the latest moment allowed for the session. After all is over we doubt if more than a small minority would venture to justify the public Sabbath desecration before the people of these United States. The weeks spent in useless wrangle for party ends certainly are no apology for the unseemly haste, the all-night sittings, and the final continuation till Sabbath noon. With our Presidents and Congressmen and government mails leading the way, we can not expect the railways and other corporations to be far behind in promoting this great moral evil. And we have reason to fear that unless the Christian churches unite in a formidable protest the matter will grow worse until the great body of the working men arise to demand with threats and violence that seventh day of rest which the laws of God the Creator have given them.

The measures which have received by far the largest attention of Congress are those suggested by the President's message respecting the reduction of internal revenue and customs. The House took up the tariff with some resolution but dropped the subject after long and weary debates, and left the business for the Senate, nor could the Ways and Means committee agree on a reduction of the internal revenue taxes. The Senate, profiting a little by the mistakes and failure of the House, took up the business early in February. At first a tariff reduction of some account was promised, but the lawmakers failed to withstand the powers of the manufacturing interests and the bill, at length completed with little resemblance to the first draft, which promised at least to begin a substantial reform in our repressive financial system, came to the House. The lobby was again too strong for the Congressmen. The House debate resulted in a parliamentary curiosity—the adoption of a rule providing for the discussion of the bill, but at the same time providing that the final action should be a disagreement thereto. On Tuesday of last week a conference committee from both bodies was appointed to settle upon some compromise. The protectionist as well as the politician, who beheld with foreboding the anger of his constituency like a storm cloud on the horizon, were both at their wits' end. The debates of the conference were watched with anxiety and fear, and the result made known Friday noon was equally unsatisfactory to free trader or protectionist. With some changes in favor of the latter the bill passed, many fearing to oppose even an unsatisfactory measure because they would not seem to object to a reduction of the tax burden from $45,000,000 to $60,000,000. The internal revenue taxes are generally abolished, except upon liquors and tobacco, and the tariff rate is lowered a notch or two.

The long discussion of tariff questions through the press would, with ordinary topics, have been sufficient to so enlighten the mass of voters that this question would hereafter be out of character as a political issue. But there is no doubt that much difference of opinion prevails among all parties and sections of the country. The line between free trade and protection cuts off a large segment of both the Democratic and Republican parties, nor is there any considerable district where both cannot find honest advocates. Professor Sumner of Yale College zealously inculcates the former theory, but his students with an early bias from paternal and political influence object seriously to his teaching. The growing preponderance of the Western farms in national affairs must in time change even the judgment of manufacturing communities and no doubt a few years will put this whole question upon a basis of tariff for revenue only.

After more than eighty ballots and several weeks of lost time the Michigan legislature has chosen a Senator. Mr. Ferry was dropped and Mr. Palmer, his friend, selected. We cannot vouch for the truth of the report that the whisky dealers had marked Ferry for defeat. There was not so evident reason in his case as in that of Windom of Minnesota. The latter ably opposed the whisky bond bill in the Senate and has the satisfaction of knowing that it was not passed by the House. Ferry's finances crippled him. A large lumber firm of which he was a leading partner failed lately and brought distress to many poor families. They may not be glad that his friend succeeds him but evidently the Freemasons are. Mr. Ferry is understood to be a member of the lodge. Mr. Palmer's relation is made somewhat clear by the joy of the craft. F. W. Blades, a "Rev." well known as the Grand Prelate of the Michigan Knight Templar Masons was as happy as some pious and humble preachers are in a revival. He expressed his feelings by sending as a dispatch Campbell's well known lines:

> "Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea; > Jehovah hath triumphed, his people are free!"

What significance these lines have in the circumstances must be one of the things only good Masons can understand, just as they do geometry, astronomy and other polite arts and profound sciences, and especially the interpretation of the Scriptures.

A curious proposition has been made in the Illinois legislature. It is a bill providing that city councils and town boards may submit directly to the voters the question of license or no license every two years; or if these boards fail to do so, one-fifth of the legal voters may compel the presentation of the issue. The arguments of the author of this proposition are that there should be a separation of the question of license from all connection with officers to be elected. It is in many places an absorbing topic, and nominations are made solely with reference to it which often results in bad management. The bill is undoubtedly in the liquor interest, for it is beyond question that pronounced temperance men are more faithful than drinking men to the interests of any community; and advantage would always be taken by some liquor ring to put in officials who would never enforce a no-license law, no matter what the vote. Such a measure might act unfavorably in some places, however, now vexed with the saloon plague, by compelling a vote at regularly recurring intervals where now it is difficult to get the issue fairly presented. It is agitation which the liquor interest dreads as well as the lodge; for the facts are all entirely against it.

Last May, after the Dublin assassinations, Parnell, the Irish leader in Parliament, denounced the murderers of Cavendish and Burke in the severest terms. None felt more keenly than he how Ireland would suffer from the universal horror which the crime would arouse. The men are now in the hand of inexorable justice and the crime laid to their charge. The same testimony that convicts them implicates in some degree the leaders of the Land League movement. Mr. Forster, the predecessor of Cavendish, whose life was several times sought, attacked Parnell in Parliament upon this issue lately with great vehemence. One Irish member, who seems to have had no better reply than the ordinary Freemason when his lodge secrets are published, several times yelled out, "It's a lie," and was suspended; but Parnell refused to speak though loudly called upon, and gave occasion for grave suspicion that the Irish leaders were compromised. Nor did his reply, a few days later, clear up the case. He discounted the evidence against the "Inner Circle," claimed that they did not belong to the Land League, denounced the government for brutality, expressed confidence in his cause since a million Irishmen in America were behind him, and moved a resolution in violent language. Such a line of defense was not calculated to disarm suspicion while his speeches in May are remembered, and he is mistaken about his American backers, if there is any collusion with secret lodges of assassination in his effort for Irish liberty.

The season of the year is upon us when fashionable and worldly church members and the Freemasons of the so-called Christian degrees set themselves about making amends for a year's neglect of their professions. One proclaims a fast of forty days and drops roast beef from the list of table expenses, the other selects "Easter" or "Ascension" day and slap their swords about in some church and mumble through what they can remember of the Apostles' Creed. We say nothing of sincere persons who observe these seasons; but to the multitude who find the ritualistic churches a convenient halfway house to the Wicket Gate of repentance, a masquerade in the midst of their perfunctory fast is often too great a temptation, as one of our suburban pastors found to his dismay; and the whole observance as a part of religion by those who manifest no regard for it the rest of the year is a standing joke to those who sit in the seat of the scornful. This sentiment is founded, notes a leading journal, "on the idea favorite among scoffers that the religious observances of those who carry on 'society' are more or less a sham and pretense, and that it is absurd for people devoted to the pomps and vanities of the gay world to suddenly become devout for a few weeks, fast, go to church on week days, and refuse, according to one of the traditional jokes, to dance 'on a crash.' We have no doubt that Lent has an excellent sanitary effect, and, whatever it does for the soul of society, gives its body a chance of periodic rest, which it much needs. Society in New York, it should be remembered, is managed, not by people in mature life, who can stand a prolonged strained, but by very young girls and boys, who, having thrown aside all parental restraint, and being passionately fond of excitement, would keep it up all through the winter if the church did not interfere to check their excesses." Equally shallow and more fearful because of its blasphemy is the Masonic profession of Christ. After swearing through eleven degrees of denial of the Lord Jesus, it is not easy to understand how a man can pass into the twelfth a professed believer in him without repudiating what he has gone through; but to the ordinary Knight Templar Freemason this question is a matter of complete indifference.

Every man needs to keep himself at one with the spirit of the age in which he lives. Even a reformer is to fight against the principles and practices of his time, and not against its soul.

SECRET POLITICAL SOCIETIES OF IRELAND.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

The secret political societies of Ireland are receiving a terrible exposure, which will probably result in their destruction, or at least in their abandonment for years to come. It has long been known to the authorities that the murders which have been such a foul blot on Ireland have in some way been the work of secret organizations. Irish political crime has this characteristic, that whenever a number band together against law and government there is always some one ready to betray them. The old proverb that "when one Irishman is roasted there is always another ready to turn the spit," seems literally true. Over twenty persons have been quietly apprehended, and of these several have offered to give Queen's evidence, as most people think, to save their own lives. The authorities, however, have so much evidence forthcoming that that of informers is received with great caution. So far as the evidence has been tendered, we have the startling revelation that in Dublin there has been in existence an assassination club, the avowed purpose of which has been the assassination of all government officials and of all who have stood in the way of these secret assassins. The evidence of Farrell, the informer, though tainted, as all such evidence is, yet is very circumstantial and minute. About eighteen months ago, among those connected with the Fenian brotherhood was originated an organization known as "The Inner Circle," the special business of which was that of murder. The members of this circle were limited, and almost unknown to each other, each man being personally introduced only to the one who preceded and the one who followed him. There must have been a directing head, which it is hoped will be reached before the close of the investigations. Farrell says that he knows not from whence they received their orders, but he knows that the penalty of disobedience was death. According to his statement, Mr. Forster, the late Irish Secretary, had more than one providential escape. There are some suggestive hints that the murder of Sir Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke, was the work of this Inner Circle, and that the perpetrators of the crime are amongst the captured. Farrell gives a full account of the attack of Mr. Field, describing the whole plot with such explicitness and fullness of detail, that a flood of light is poured upon the proceedings, such as will result in the dissolution of the organization.

The evidence that is being elicited is of an appaling kind. It appears that nothing can satisfy these secret organizations, except a concession which Britain cannot grant, and which, in all probability, if a plebiscite were taken, the Irish nation would at once reject. The Government in facing these secret combinations has to face an unreasoning and unconciliatory people, who ignore not only all political principles, but also the very rudimentary principles of morality.

That a committee should exist in the old Fenian body, the object of which should be the stirring up of insurrection, and which by a Nihilist policy of assassination, should aim at the destruction of a viceroyalty, seems incredible. That men should believe in the possibility of destroying a purely monarchical dynasty by successive assassinations is understandable, though such an event, so far as our memory serves, has never transpired in history. Such projects have hitherto been baffled even in places like Russia, where revolutionists are able to secure relays of assassins, and even a succession of self-devoted murderers; but that this evil conception should be applied to a delegated government, perpetually renewable, and sure to be filled up century after century is beyond our understanding. England is not to be damned by murders, and can easily find any number of men to undertake the risk, just as it can find generals in times of war and leaders for forlorn hopes. If Lord Spencer or Mr. Trevelyan should fall, their places would be instantly filled by others, probably by soldiers accustomed to something more than the art of self-defense. In the case of these secret combinations, the divergence between the means employed and the end to be accomplished, are so far apart, that the observer feels himself in the presence of forces that are not under the guidance of reason of any kind.

Louth, England, Feb. 1883.

Masonic vs. Humane Beneficence.—Ahab goes to the lodge to get qualified to be humane to his brethren. He pays his money and spends the required time (for it takes time) to get ready by initiation, etc., so that he may be and do to some few what all ought to do to all men by the expressed law of God. Joseph declines the qualifications in the lodge and claims that he was born with a far better and universal qualification to enter instantly upon the work of "doing good to all men as he has opportunity." Does not have to wait and pay to get ready to do to a part of mankind that which is due from all to all. While Ahab is getting ready to be in duty bound to save a drowning brother Mason, Joseph by his inborn desire to save a fellow man, saves a score or more. He does not have to wait to distinguish between the Masonic sign and the natural one of a fellow man, bnt rushes to the rescue as an angel of mercy would spontaneously do, in all emergencies. Perhaps the blackest feature of lodgery is its interference with God's law—"As ye have therefore opportunity do good unto all men," etc. Masonry savagely cuts this law asunder by swearing men to limit their acts of relief due to all, to a few, who learn in the lodge to give the sign of distress. A QUESTION FOR WOMEN.

BY MRS. E. G. BAILEY.

Why are not women more interested in the anti-secrecy part of our reform work? They have energy, ability, time and enthusiasm to lavish upon other things—charities public and private, temperance, religion—everything but this, which they dismiss without a thought.

Of course, through default of proper education on the subject, or through a favorable conception of an institution to which gentlemen friends have belonged, or do belong, many women are indifferent; or a dislike to hear the question mentioned, which is perhaps excusable. One is not expected to have a clear vision while living in darkness. But there are other women who cannot plead this excuse. They have light; they hear the truth. Father, husband or brother has pronounced convictions and makes a determined opposition to secret orders. Why are not the wives, daughters and sisters of anti-secretists equally strong in their convictions, equally opposed to orders that classes them outside their sacred limits with idiots, madmen and fools?

It is true that many a man whose voice and pen and pocket-book are at the service of the reform goes to this battle unsupported by the prayers and blessings of his family, often discouraged by actual opposition. Christ says, "A house divided against itself cannot stand," and surely a man who goes against the sentiments of his home must go weakly and unprovided with the zeal and courage that would win success.

This will be found to be the reason why many a man with the strongest convictions and ardent desires to see the truth triumph will weaken just at the point where he is needed most. "His wife doesn't sympathize with him" we hear, or "his family are afraid it will injure his business to be so outspoken." "He is too fanatical, and it makes them unpopular," and various other excuses show where the screw is loose.

Is it not a question that thoughtful women should consider? In the first place, if a man at the head of a family holds convictions and opinions on other subjects, and they receive respectful consideration from his family, why can he not form a judgment on this subject also, and be entitled to the same consideration? Good or bad, a woman should not be indifferent to the opinions of her husband. What interests and concerns him should interest and concern her. What he deems worthy his efforts, his money and his vote, she should inquire into and satisfy herself of its worthiness. She should thoroughly understand the nature of a principle to which he is willing to devote his best years, or for which he would lay down his life.

A man may be right. He may be called of God to champion a despised truth. Dare a woman then thoughtlessly and for selfish reasons take upon herself the responsibility of stifling the voice of God in his soul? of putting out a glimmering ray of truth because it draws the world's gaze upon her? Surely not, if she understands.

But for further reasons it is a woman's duty to investigate this subject. By the love she bears her husband, son or brother; for the sake of their precious souls she should inform herself on this question, that she may know what to teach and how to warn. Many a man is taking his secret lodge for his church and expects to win salvation through its teaching. If a woman longs for the safety of his soul she must be able to show him the falsity of his hope. Countless numbers are following this ignis fatuus of lodge salvation and the churches are being left to the women, while we wonder where the men are.

Women should rouse to a realization of this; she should inform herself of the facts and set herself to study the means and ends to resist this dreadful foe, and being once informed she will become a powerful aid in the work of overthrowing the kingdom of darkness.

And lastly, indifference is not Bible ground. "He that is not for me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." We cannot be on Christ's side and gathering with him and yet feel nothing, do nothing, or say nothing on questions that intimately pertain to his kingdom. We must have definite opinions. We must be ready to do good service or we are not disciples of the truth. For our own sake, for our friends' sake, for Christ's sake, we should examine this question of secret societies and take our place.

Worcester.

A MOST IMMORAL PHILSOPHY.

BY PROF. A. J. CHITTENDEN.

The Masonic system of ethics has done much to vitiate the moral sense of people who have any cause for defending the oath bondage. Such a cause is commonly found in family relationship or in the possession of some friend who is so "good" that there could not be anything bad in an oath that he would take; or, if the oath was unwise, to keep it inviolate must be right because "such a good" man thinks so.

The people evidently need to be schooled in the ethics of oaths. I do not think that the common moral sense of men would approve of the Masonic oath; yet men will hold a kind of sacred regard for the mere fact of having taken an oath, and assent to the claim, that because they have taken it, it is therefore inviolate. So long as this idea obtains a hold, the evidence concerning the oath is weakened in such damaged minds and therefore all argument is annulled at the outset.

I wish to state some principles which, I think, may meet these artificial and diseased states of mind as a possible specific.

1. The moral claim of an oath is no stronger than the moral character of the promise made.

The individual is always under moral obligations. The general claims of society are upon him at all times, and cannot be set aside by any scheme of limited association, or destructive forms. The general moral claims that hold men accountable to God and society are universal and unalterable. An oath may assist some men to the performance of them, but no counter oath can set them aside.

To assume that an oath is valid simply because it is an oath, is to assume that the individual may at his option transfer himself from one system of government to another. Now the moral government of the world is one, and holds such a relation to all men and the nature of all good society that neither God nor society can absolve the individual from its control. And if any system of community life should undertake to provide for rejecting the laws of its own existence, the system is at once self-destructive. The idea that—"You may obey the laws of life if you please, but not, if you don't please," would soon demonstrate the absurdity of such a ruinous admission. If a man's oath is right, simply because he has taken it; then it follows that any crime is right as soon as the criminal has sworn to commit it. In other words, there is no longer any valid distinction between right and wrong.

Again, if the keeping of the Masonic oath is good morals, simply because it is an oath, it follows that if another oath should be taken to disregard the Masonic oath, that new oath would be right on Masonic grounds. Then all that is necessary to absolve one from the Masonic oath is to take a new one requiring him to violate its terms; for, of course, the oath that has the latest date holds precedence over all others.

It has never been taught by Masonry that the oaths which the candidate may have taken with other organizations can be allowed to qualify the force of the one administered by themselves. Yet they very strenuously hold that no oath taken subsequent to that one can be recognized as having any force as against their own. But the ground on which they make that assertion is that the oath is binding, simply because it has been taken. Why then should not that same reason hold good the next time the man wishes to take an oath? Let him only disregard all moral considerations and take it; then he is holden on strict Masonic grounds to break the Masonic oath.

The proper way to plead for the validity of the Masonic oath, if it has any claim, is to show the moral character of the bond to be in harmony with the irrepealable laws of God and good society.

2. If the idea prevails that an oath is binding by force of its mere form or accompaniments, then we have the most fearful system of Nihilism on foot that has ever been discovered. Every three men are a law unto themselves with a conscience suited to the fact. There remains no authority in heaven or on earth to which they are accountable, for they have passed beyond the reach of all laws not made by themselves. THE NIHILISM OF MASONRY should be recognized immediately as the only system on earth that strictly deserves the name. For the most fanatical of European revolutionists do not propose to set up oaths in the place of God and all governments of men, but rather to overturn the existing state of things and recognize a better as soon as society finds it. But here we have an old and solidified system reaching around the earth, which makes the mere fact of having sworn to its compact ignore any and every claim called moral; and the bond is held because of the form and not because of its economical value to society. It is therefore destructive of society in the larger sense and is professedly meant to be, should the interests of society call for an abrogation of its oath tenure.

3. All this is true of Masonry, whether we regard its oaths as promises to do or not to do any specific thing.

The distinction between doing and not doing does not hold in a case where the negative form of the act becomes positive in its effects. To refuse to warn a neighbor of danger on the highway simply because I have made a compact with the highwaymen, is a very positive kind of act, although the form of the oath was a requirement promising not to tell.

Nothing in Old Testament legislation is more distinctly required than to act the part of an informer whenever any form of peril is in the path of a neighbor. To have taken an oath not to do so would not have released the man from the duty to do it. But Masonry says it would. The history of Masonry shows that they mean what they say, and that their principles are very practical in their workings.

The candidate has promised not to reveal any scheme that may be devised in a regular lodge, even if the plan be ruinous to his neighbor's property or deadly to his life. Not to do is in this case to DO, in a most wicked and murderous sense, and yet the system teaches that the crime is absolved by virtue of a mere form. Catholic absolution never reached the depth of villainous absurdity confessed by this ethical Nihilism.

4. The principle held by Masons and their apologists would be self-destructive if the other and injured portion of society should chance to retaliate on their own ground of action. There is little doubt that a large number of men should have been hung for the murder of men condemned by the Masonic death penalty. We have only to suppose that the exasperated opponents of Masonry had formed an oath-bound alliance at the time of the murder of Mr. Morgan, for the purpose of exterminating all acting or adhering Masons. If they had only sworn to do it, of course they ought to have done it. That would be Masonry at large, or Masonry applied to society in general. Of course it would have been necessary to slay all adhering Masons, simply because the avengers had sworn to do so, whether the deed would have been otherwise right or not.

Now I have no doubt that some Masons should have been hung for the murder of William Morgan. (The evidence is strong enough to hang an archangel.) Others should have been deprived of liberty and civil rights for endorsing the act. But a wholesale slaughter of Masons would not have been advisable or right. Many innocent people would have perished—with people comparatively innocent; and families would have suffered great distress. Society would have been thrown into a state of anarchy, and such a sanguinary passage of history would not have helped the cause of civilization. But Masonry would be obliged to approve of the procedure, if only it had once been duly sworn to. Masons would then have the privilege of dying consistently, and in the Day of Judgment no one of them could accuse his murderer.

A principle that is good ought to "go 'round," and if ever the injured portion of our communities become aroused to the outrages continually practiced upon them, and retaliate in a Masonic form of compact, the Mason cannot raise a protest either against the mob or the swift process of the law born of vengeance. We suspect that he would not be slow to abandon his monstrous ethical system when he found himself shadowed by half a dozen men thirsting for his blood. But if the oath is not binding simply on the ground of its form, then it follows that it may and always does become a positive duty to break from the oath when the good of society or any innocent and exposed person calls for it. Such testimony has always been considered admissible in court, and the admission proceeds from the governmental instincts of the people.

THE ISLAND OF DESPAIR.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

North, due north ten thousand leagues,
Over the waves of an icy sea,
Over the starless fields of air,
With never a moon and never a prayer
Piercing their dark immensity,
Lieth the island of hope forlorn;
Where Death and Disease sit brooding and pale,
Where no bow of hope in its beauty bends,
But still from the ominous heaven descends,
A tempest of ashes and sleety hail,
Where the hell-black bird with his carrion beak,
Screams with a note like the laugh of the damned
And the thick black air, by the bow of despair—
A huge fiery serpent—is lighted and spanned.

And there no banks of beautiful green,
Slope gently down upon sands of gold,
But the great rent rocks with their foreheads bare,
Frown black in the grim and sulphurous air,
Like beetling ramparts stern and bold;
While at their base the wintry sea,
Grinds and roars with the force of the storm,
Lifting its waves with their loads of ice,
Lifting their foam wrath and lifting their voice;
Threatening deeds they might well perform—
Oh! never above those dark waves rode
A ship that was not a demon sail,
And never a pilot ventures abroad
On its waters except a fiend of hell.

And there from those hard, black rocks break forth
Fierce torrents of something all cloated and red,
And ever a voice with a thunderous sound
Calls out, as it were from the depths profound,
This, this is the blood of the murdered dead.
High perched on the trees by the slippery bank,
Envy, and Malice and Lust are seen,
Gorging like buzzards on carrion stale,
Served by the bounty and wealth of hell,
Yet ever hungry, and foul, and lean;
And ever they flap their raven wings,
And open their great throats gaping wide,
And croak with the voice like the whine of a fiend,
One gluttonous word, Unsatisfied!

There Slander sits like a dragon fell,
Brooding on eggs that she hatches ever
To monstrous creatures, and each as it feels
The stirrings of life, in a moment steals
Down to the gory and fetid river,
And dipping itself in the brine of hell,
Lifts its awful and loathsome head,
And cries with a voice like a raven's croak
From the slippery point of a blasted rock,
Woe, woe to the living and woe to the dead,
In earth above and in hell below.
Our power is potent and understood
For we are the true old serpent brood.
And hell through her caverns answers, Woe.

And out of the darkness sounds arise,
Awful sounds like the voices of men
In deadly hate, oaths that might freeze
The blood in the fishes of icy seas,
Screams of laughter and groans of pain,
Loud, wild snatches of ribald song,
Such as might make a courtesan blush,
Shouts of defiance, yells of despair,
Growlings of beasts in their hellly lair,
And harpy wings in their terrible rush,
Up and down in that black abyss,
While ever comes up one terrible yell,
From the heart of the pit, from its depths profound,
The awful, significant syllable, Hell.

EARLY EGYPTIAN ADVANCEMENT.

Evolutionary philosophy has received a severe blow in some of the recently discovered Egyptian manuscripts. Those containing the histories of the fifth and sixth dynasties, taken from the pyramids at Sakkara last spring by M. Maspero, and about to be published in Paris, are said to establish the fact that the oldest religion of the Egyptians was the most nearly monotheistic, and that the grosser forms of idolatry came later in the history of the country. Fragments of the texts in the possession of Maspero, hitherto not supposed to have any relation to each other, are found to have been used in many later temples and tombs. Commenting on this fact, a writer in the Nation says: "This adds force to the growing conviction among Egyptologists that the earliest Egyptian civilization we know of, is the highest, and that all we know of is its decadence. The oldest pyramid is the largest and best built; the oldest temple, that beside the sphynx at Gizeh, shows masonry since unapproached; the oldest papyrus, though as yet hardly understood, is the wisest; and the tombs and the temples of the Theban period are filled with extracts from the ancient books not yet found complete. Three or four of these books furnish five-sixths of the texts of the tombs of the kings."—Interior.

PRACTICAL HOMILETICS.

The following extracts from an old-time letter, as illustrative of resource, tact, and versatility in adapting sermons to the occasion and the needs of the hearer, is worth more than quite a pile of abstract disquisitions on preaching; but it would not be entirely safe for a young preacher to pattern after the same, unless he is quite sure that he too, is a man of resource.

Elder William Satterlee having once been called to preach the funeral sermon of a Mason high in rank, he had selected his text and was about to proceed with the sermon, when, to his surprise, a large procession of Masons—delegates from all the lodges in the regions round about—march into the church filling all the pews and aisles, and thronging every available place. They were in full regalia, with Bible, square, compass, evergreen boughs, and all that. Among them were civilians high in office, military men high in rank, Christians, atheists, infidels, drunkards—a motly-charactered group.

The elder saw at a glance that his selected text was utterly unsuited to the occasion; but, quite unlike what happened on a recent occasion, where the friends of the deceased were compelled to freeze up the corpse and keep it nearly a week, while the pulpit reader prepared a carefully written document, suitable for the occasion, he immediately announced that he should take a more suitable text. He first requested that all the Masons who were not provided with evergreen badges should do so at once. The astonished and bewildered badgeless ones instantly complied. He then announced for his text, "Masonry." All was attention. Curiosity stood on tiptoe. Amid squirmings, frowns, whispered curses, smiles and tears, he proceeded with allegory, humor, pathos, wit, irony, doctrine, argument, solemn admonition, and winning appeal and persuasion, to discourse under divisions, as follows:

1. Masonry has for its creed the Bible, as you have declared in bearing it in the front rank of this procession. Therefore, no Mason can be an atheist or infidel.

2. Masonry adopts the Bible in heart and affection, as you have declared by laying this Bible on the breast of the dead. Therefore, Masons have in heart and affection adopted its teachings.

3. Masonry, by the square laid as you see, declares that all Masons square their lives by its teachings.

4. Masonry, by the compasses thus laid, declares that its followers circumscribe their lives by the precepts of the Bible.

5. Masonry declares by the evergreens with which you are now all supplied, that you are all living Christians, practically living out all the teachings of the Bible.

6. Masonry declares, by the evergreens which you have placed upon the dead, that its followers believe in a life after death.

In conclusion, all Masons here to-day, unless they are hypocrites, are believers in the Bible, have accepted its doctrines into their hearts, are squaring and circumscribing their lives by its precepts, and are preparing for an evergreen and blessed immortality beyond the grave.—Sabbath Recorder.

ANTI-MASONIC AXIOMS.

The man in office, the newspaper editor, the preacher and the teacher who never make any allusion to Freemasonry, are like the actors of Othello who leave out the part of Iago; or like the physician who sedulously attends to a case and takes no note of the cancer with which his patient is dying.

The American citizen who has bargained away to the lodge the free exercise of his right to speak, print, mark, engrave, hew, cut, or otherwise express to the public what he knows, or who is restrained from such expression by any thing but a sense of Christian decency, is a more pitiable slave than he who is denied this right by a despot.

The Masonic lodge enters as a controlling element into both the Democratic and Republican parties. This element sustained the Democratic party in glorying in the shame of slavery, and has sustained the Republican party in back-pay grabs, credit Mobilier swindles, Indian war outrages, star-route frauds, pension frauds, land-grab frauds, river and harbor frauds, etc., etc.

The Democracy claim that "to the victors belong the spoils." The lodge, through its mouth-piece, says: "The government belongs to its friends," its friends being Masons of course. But we Anti-masons say that the government belongs to Americans, and not to the subjects of the lodge.

It is a common mistake to suppose that a fine education unfits for the common walks of life; it is certainly a great mistake. Any man can handle a hoe better for knowing something of mechanics; any girl can cook a breakfast better for knowing something of chemistry. You cannot educate one faculty without developing them all. Many a young girl without household training has after her marriage at once mastered the art of housekeeping; her college did not teach her to cook; but it taught her to think, and the cooking followed as a matter of course. Intellectual development is physical development; by refining and strengthening the nervous system it gives power of recuperation to the body. The war statistics show that delicately bred college boys stood the hardships of camp and field and hospital far better than roughs, whether from the wild woods or the great cities.—Christian Union.

JOHN P. ST. JOHN IN MASSACHUSETTS.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

The Worcester reception of the late noted Governor of Kansas came off on Saturday, Feb. 24th, at the now historic Mechanics Hall, which has so often resounded with the eloquenee of Garrison, Phillips, Foster, Wilson, Sumner, Bullock, Blanchard and Hoar. One of the dailies reports that a larger audience than ever before assembled of a week-day in the cause of temperanee was gathered at this hall to reeeive ex-Governor John P. St. John. The "No License" Mayor, S. E. Hildreth, presided, giving the welcome of the eity, and introduced first Hon. J. B. Grinnell of Iowa, as from a State that had voted by a majority of 30,000 for Constitutional prohibition. The speaker affirmed that notwithstanding the present blocking of the wheels of reform in that State by venal judges, and the thwarting of the will of the people by clerieal blunders in the legislative journals and teehniealities in the courts of Iowa, the saloon keepers would have to go; and for their epitaph they eould take that on the tombstone of a cherished Iowa pig:

"When I lived I lived in clover,
But when I died I died all over."

Governor St. John followed for an hour or more with great force and fervor, showing how, as Abraham Lineoln argued that this eountry eould not exist half free and half slave, so eould it not endure half drunk and half sober. Either the sale of intoxieating liquor was right or wrong. If right and good it should be put upon a level with other lawful traffic. If wrong and ruinous it should be suppressed and outlawed, and no amount of money paid into munieipal treasuries for its lieense could ever make it right. It were better to walk in mud to our boot-tops than on streets and sidewalks built by revenues from the ruin of human souls. The one hundred and seventy-five lieensed saloons of Worcester doubled or trebled the poliee force, and quadrupled the eost of almshouses and prisons. Massachusetts was regarded as the mother of Kansas, and he as an adopted son of Kansas was a grandson of the old Bay State; but he was almost ashamed of his grandmother when he found that she spent $45,000,000 a year for liquor.

The liquor traffic was responsible, by the showing of Massaehusetts courts, for eighty-four per cent. of the crimes committed within their jurisdietion. It destroyed manhood, it blasted eharacter, it ruined the home, it even got on board the lamented President's funeral train. But the ballot in the hands of the women and the liquor traffic of Massachusetts would die in a day.

But many said, You can't put down the liquor traffic. So there were plenty to say, You ean't crush the rebellion. But we did crush it. They told us we couldn't pass the Prohibitory Amendment in Kansas, but we did; and it was to be observed that prohibition in Kansas had already closed twenty-one out of the thirty-two breweries, and eleven of the thirty wholesale liquor houses, and it had driven the last illicit distillery from the State. And, although the news had not yet reaehed the people of the East through the Assoeiated Press dispatches, he was happy to say that on the 14th inst. the Kansas House of Representatives, fresh from the people, voted down by a very decisive majority a proposition to rescind the Prohibitory Amendment of the State Constitution. Had thc vote been the other way it would doubtless have been flashed in an instant from Topeka to Sandy Hook and San Francisco.

Aneedotes pungent and pathetie enlivened and emphasized the logic of discourse, and at the elose this deelaration was adopted with enthusiasm by a rising vote of the large assembly:

The temperance men and women of Worcester, having before observed at a distance with profound interest the public career and labors of ex-Governor John P. St. John of Kansas, in behalf of temperance, and having now had the pleasure of listening to his masterly defense of the principle and policy of prohibitory legislation in regard to the liquor traffic, take this occasion to endorse the method of Constitutional prohibition by him advocated and enforced with such signal ability and success. And they hereby declare their determined purpose, under God, come what may, to "chain the tiger" of the liquor traffic in Massachusetts by a Constitutional Amendment, to be secured as in Kansas by vote of the people, and to be executed with fidelity and courage by the chosen Executive in their behalf.

A growing religious interest is reported in connection with the labors of your eorrespondent, Rev. E. D. Bailey, and his brother, at the Union ehapel, South Worcester. That it may brighten and broaden is the fervent prayer of more than one on-looker.

Reform News.

MICHIGAN STATE MEETING.

It is proposed, the Lord willing, to hold the next State meeting in Grand Rapids, beginning on the 17th of April. An effort will be made to secure able speakers and a degree worker, and we are exceedingly anxious that every friend of the reform should be present. Let there be a grand rally. We would like to see all those who are interested in the proposed Anti-secret Alliance at the State meeting, that we may consult together as to what shall be done. Come one and all and let us show our faith by our works. The time has come when every friend of Christ, and every lover of his country should rally for the overthrow of the gigantic evil of secretism, else the church and the state will be ground to powder beneath the heel of the lodge. Up then to the conflict in behalf of a free country and a pure Christianity.

W. H. Ross, Cor. Sec,

Allegan, Feb. 14, 1883.

CONNECTICUT.

The Conuecticut Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, is hereby called to meet in Melodeon Hall, Hartford, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 20th and 21st, 1883, commencing with devotional exercises Tuesday at 2 o'clock P. M.

Let all the true friends of Christ come up to the meeting clothed with the "whole armor of God, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, taking the shield of faith and the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Praying always with all prayer and supplicatiou of the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints;" and for all God's ministers that they "may speak boldly as they ought to speak" in these days when so many are departing from the plain teachings of the word of God.

Come praying for brethren Barlow, Bailey, Davis, McCracken, and others who may speak, that their words may be only the utterances of the Holy Spirit, and that he may oe present in mighty power to convince the people of the subtle wickedness working through the lodge to the deciving of our young men into the belief that there is salvation in another than the name of Jesus.

THE LODGE LAID OPEN FOR THE FIRST TIME IN WASHINGTON.

On Wednesday evening of last week Bro. S. E. Starry worked the first degree in Masonry openly in M'Cauley's Hall, Washington City. It was an event worth noting in the history of that city as well as in our reform. When the disciples returned to Jesus with joy and wonder that even the devils were snbject to them, he rejoiced, for in the fact he already saw Satan falling like lightning from his seat of power over the nations. In this lecture and exposition we also see a token that the power of hell is yet falling, aud the day approaches when the angel with the great chain and the key of the bottomless pit shall shut therein the adversary of God and man.

Bro. Hinman writes briefly of this meeting:

"The hall, which is a nice one, had about 200 to 300 people of the very best class, many of them in sympathy with us; also some Masons and Knight Templars. We had perfect order. I distributed quite a lot of tracts but sold nothing. Bro. Starry did his work admirably, aud I made remarks. One of the officers of the lodge, an old minister from Vineland, N. J., at the close arose and said that he 'oncc went through the performance just as they had seen it, but was so disgusted that he had never gone near them again.' There was much cheering at this. I think an excellent impression was made, and considering the many other attractions for the people, it was a decided success. The Knights of Pythias were in session directly overhead, and several secret societies meet in the same building. The proprietor was very angry, and told us we could never get his hall again for such a purpose, though he had seeu the bills before the meeting."

FROM THE KANSAS AGENT.

Osage City, Kansas, Feb. 26th, 1883.

Dear Cynosure:—I start for home to-night. I am sick, and must rest and recruit. The Topeka Convention was a series of mistakes (some of them tricks, perhaps), and the weather was most unpropitious. Bro. J. S. T. Milligan came and gave me very welcome aid, but the couveution failed to be anythiug more than a country gathering, and a small one at that.

We were refused the hall we had engaged when it was almost too late to change, aud the Capital announced the wrong time for the opening of the meeting. All this worked against us, but we would still have had a good gathering from town and country if the weather had not proven so very bad. As it was, we organized the country quite thoroughly, and I have large hopes from the plan of work laid out. Mr. E. Colton, of Topeka, was selected as county agent. He is apparently a devoted and a resolute mau, and I would be glad to have you encourage him all you can. He is to scatter tracts, get subscribers to the Cynosure, sell books and arrange for meetings; and brethren Hampe and Cooper are to do the speaking.

I will be at home for some time, perhaps, as I am quite poorly now. I intended to have organized Osage county at this time, but find my strength is not sufficient. Yours in the bonds of Christian love, P. S. Feemster.

EN ROUTE TO JERICHO..

Sabetha, Kansas.

On Tuesday, the 20th of February, in response to au appointment made for me, I went to lecture near Oneida. While there, an old friend of mine, and a Mason, too, said to me: "Morgan should have had his throat cut, and so should any man who would expose Masonry." As a Mason he is somewhat "rusty," but he asserted that Masonry "could not be exposed." Whereupon I showed him Doesburg's exposition, which held him spellbound two hours or more. Then laying it on the sewing machine near him, he remarked: "That is the book I need to 'post up' on; it is all there." I remarked that it is a thorough exposition of all I knew of Masonry. He replied: "Yes, it is a good one." He wanted me to sell him that copy, but as it belongs to the library at Anti-secret Station I could not do so. However, he is determined to have one. If I had a few hundred copies of the Weed pamphlet, I could circulate them with good effect.

S. Dale, Esq., and his estimable wife, took me to the school-house behind a splendid team. On reaching the house, which is about two miles north of the above place, we found a goodly audience of both sexes. Quite a number were young people, but every one listened with the closest attention for two full hours. If a man cannot speak on this subject to an audience that is full of interest and is ready to cheer him while presenting the truth, he cannot speak on any.

A Royal Arch Mason who has examined Doesburg's exposition and pronounces it complete, asserted that "President Finney got into a woman scrape and the Masons turned him out, and then he retaliated by writing that book. He [Finney] was a Royal Arch Mason."

There are a goodly number in Oneida who would like to have me lecture there, I am told, and when it can be arranged for I shall do so. Geo. T. Dissette.

BRO. HINMAN'S LETTERS.

SOME DROPPED THREADS.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 26, 1883.

When I lectured at East Herrick, Bradford county, Pa., I met a man who had been recently converted to Christ. He told me with tears that what I said about Masonry was true from his personal knowledge, aud he hoped the Lord would help me in my work. He had taken the Master's degree. He said that he had reason to think that the Mollie Maguires were stronger than ever, and that they would control the mining region, and that on no account would they give testimony against each other.

In my article on the Cumberland Valley I made the mistake of saying that the first settlers were Germans. In fact they were Scotch Presbyterians. The Falling Spring church, of Chambersburg (Rev. Dr. Crawford's), was organized in 1736. The Scotch element is still an important factor.

Wheu Bro. Starry aud I left Chambersburg, Feb. 22, the revival in the King street church was still in progress. We had previously been to Fayetteville and lectured in the U. B. church, and on the evening of the 20th worked the Master's degree in the Reformed Presbyteriau church to a crowded house. Quite as many as were there were unable to gain admittance. Much credit is due to both these churches for kindly opening their houses of worship.

We reached Washington, D. C., at 7: 20 P. M. of the 22d, and found the streets all dark. It was a legal holiday, and so the lamps could not be lighted. We were kindly entertained by Bro. Dolau of the Sword, and the next day visited the two houses of Congress and other objects of interest, not forgetting the building of the N. C. A. at 215 Four and Half street, N. W.

In the evening we attended an Anti-masonic meeting at the house of Dr. Gross, 311 East Capital street. Among others we met Mr. H. Harrison of New York city, who has been from the first one of the staunchest of our supporters, and at whose hospitable home true reformers find a cordial welcome. Remarks were made by Messrs. Harrison, Starry, Grisham, Gross, Dolan, Palmer, and Hinman; also by Mrs. McPherson and Mrs. Reynolds. It was determined, if practicable, to have Bro. Starry work the Masonic degrees. It was a profitable meeting.

On Saturday arrangements were made for an illustrated lecture by Bro. Starry at M'Cauley's Hall on Capital Hill, on Wednesday, the 28th. On Sabbath went to Sabbath-school at 9:30 A. M. at the Foundry M. E. church. At its conclusion I distributed a few tracts to the Bible-class, but was waited on by those in authority and told that I must not distribute those tracts there, that they were "creating strife," etc. I went out to the sidewalk and continued to distribute to the congregation as they came. This is the church which President Hayes attended. It's pastor is a Mason. He has been frequently admonished by the members of his flock. One of them has recently renounced Masonry, one has been forbidden to distribute tracts, and others who had proposed to join the church fail to do so. Truly it is a time of trouble. There is more than one Elijah that troubles them.

At 11 attended Friends meeting, where all seemed to have true spititual freedom. In the afternoon attended a pleasant and profitable meeting at the Free Methodists. Both they and the Friends agreed to postpone their usual mid-week service for the sake of attending our reform meeting at M'Cauley's Hall. In the evening I went to the Hamlin M. E. church to hear Hon. and Rev. J. Hyatt Smith, but he failed to appear, and we had a fine address from a Miss Armstrong of Philadelphia. The prospects of our reform in this city were never brighter. Truly the Lord is with us, and the God of Jacob is our refuge.

CRIME AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Feb. 27th.—Some time since I called attention to the prevalent belief that some of the officers of the law in this city were in collusion with the criminals, and that these, who were the chosen guardians of property and the public peace, have deliberately planned, invited and shared in the profits of most enormous robberies and other crimes. The following from the Evening Star of the 26th shows these officers have been dismissed and arraigned before the courts and the charges sustained:

"The statement of Donohue, and others who have confessed, have been and can be so fully corroborated by unimpeachable circumstantial and positive testimony that there is no escape from the conclusion that Washington has for years past been at the mercy of one of the strongest and most corrupt combinations of criminals ever shown by the annals of crime. This lamentable result seems to be now positively established, and there is nothing left to be done but to meet the case as it stands and apply the quickest and most effective remedy in their reach."

"The accused ex-officials are not in a position now to assume a high moral ground and protest that the evidence against them is confined to confessed criminals. They have been overtaken by their own misdeeds, and, stripped of their badges, disgracefully expelled from office, they are exposed as the companions of thieves and sharers of stolen plunder. The public will look with anxiety for further developments, and await with impatience the course of justice."

It also appears that since the doing away with the detective system, there has been a diminution of crime and a greater facility in the execution of the law.

When we consider that both detectives and criminals are largely members of the Masonic order, sworn to conceal each others secrets, it is not strange that there should be such a combination of criminals. Some Masons are better than their principles; these are not. The Howgate robbery, the Star-Route steal and this detective conspiracy, show a terrible state of public morals and should make people not only blush but tremble for their country.

New England.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. Bailey, N. E. Sec'y.

Here is a specimen of the profound wisdom of the Knights of Pythias. The first letters of each sentence form the word "Samson," which is the name of the grip of the first rank. For an acrostic to put in the children's column of a country newspaper it would be too silly. Chancellor Commander—"Say what is this?" Master at Arms—"A good thing." Chan. Com.—"Most people would say so." Master at Arms—"Some would." Chan. Com.—"O, would they?" Master at Arms.—"No doubt."

Not the least of the evils of secret societies is the fact that they so far blind the minds of their members as to make it difficult for them to comprehend the simple doctrines of the Gospel, even when they come under the influence of the truth. We wonder sometimes at their dullness, but a careful examination reveals the fact that they are imbued with lodge ideas which confuse their minds.

Mrs. M. P. Haven sends us words of exhortation and encouragement. "Our sufficiency must be of God. 'Let us bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our Maker,' consecrating not only our all but the cause of reform also to him, ever remembering that God can and does employ 'worms to thresh mountains.' Let us be strong in the Lord and go forward."

Mr. Samuel A. Pratt furnishes us some very suggestive statistics of the use of tobacco in this county and the expenses for our paupers. During the year 1882 there were manufactured in Worcester county 4,827,000 cigars, and there were consumed 4,810,000. The average cost of these is 7½ cents, making a total cost of $360,750. In the same county the average number of paupers was 2,173, whose average expense to the public was $166 each. It will be seen that our money wasted on cigars alone would handsomely care for our poor.

CASTE IN NEW ENGLAND.

Frank K. Foster of Cambridge, Mass., in testifying before a United States Senate committee, is reported to have made some statements which, coming from the secretary of the "Massachusetts federation of trade and labor unions," are worthy of passing notice:

"Speaking of the moral, intellectual, physical condition of the printers as a class, he said the lines of 'caste' were growing more and more clearly defined each year, and that in New England, at least, the assumed worship of God has ceased to level all distinctions among men."

This is a witness to two facts: (1) That the spirit of "caste" is on the increase, and (2) that even our churches are tainted with this evil. In regard to the existence of caste this testimony accords well with the testimony of the young man from Yale College, who said that "caste" in college was so strong that even own brothers belonging to different classes could not have intercourse with each other without losing standing among his fellows. Is it worse than that even in India?

There may be a difference of opinion among men as to the extent of this evil and as to its general prevalence in the churches, but of the fact that it is on the increase there can hardly be a reasonable doubt. As to the cause or causes of this increase there may be a difference of opinion, but those who have studied the character and tendency of secret societies will not fail to hold them chiefly responsible. The idea of caste is a corner-stone of their structure. They all teach their members that they are a privileged class, enjoying certain rights and benefits which do not belong to the profane, while at the same time they introduce the principle of favoritism and become a set of conspirators bound together for the purposes of mutual agrandizement at the expense of all other classes.

A Mason recently in conversation acknowledged that a half-dozen Masons in a church could generally "run" it, because of their superior drill in secret tactics, and he defended such a course on the ground that it was best for the masses to be under the control of a select few. He said if the minister was also a Mason the work of controlling was so much the easier, and it was an advantage to have the church thus wisely supervised. This claim will perhaps explain why "the assumed worship of God has ceased to level all distinctions among men."

ODD FELLOWSHIP RELIEF.

"Sick benefits" are a leading office of the Odd-fellow's affiliation. If the order cannot make a good showing in this respect it must stand before us a most conspicuous failure in that which is its chief boast. From the Odd-fellows' Register we gather the following facts:

Maine spent for total relief $34,927.15, or an average of $2.77 per member. Massachusetts distributed $40,220.41, or $1.83 per member. Rhode Island distributed $21,559.13, or an average of $4.41 per member. Vermont spent $1,000, or 55 cents per member.

It will be seen that the average benefits per member for the four New England States is only $2.39 per member. This, in comparison with the annual dues generally paid, is out of all proportion, but if you add to the money paid into the lodge the loss of time in attending lodge meetings, often remaining till midnight, the expense of bouquets, pic-nics and parades, the loss of manhood in going through the silly ceremonies of the lodge and the evil influence of the ante-room smoking and vulgarity, the benefit derived is a pittance which might well be disregarded.

But from other figures we are able also to make another comparison to the great disadvantage of the lodge. In Massachusetts the receipts aggregate the enormous sum of $109,802.26, while for relief in various forms there was disbursed only $40,220.41, that is less than thirty-seven per cent of the receipts return in benefits. Here the Odd-fellows pay their lodge $1. for the sake of receiving thirty-seven cents when they are sick. Any respectable firm would be glad to undertake to fulfill such a contract. There is money in such an investment—money for the lodge, not for the members. That the business is profitable is manifest from the mad rush that is being made to get up new "orders", like corporations, to carry on the same business.

But we are able to push these figures a little further. In Massachusetts there were helped 1,244 "sick brothers" and 308 "widowed families." Supposing each of the widowed families to consist of two persons (a very low estimate) we have a relief for 1,860 persons which gives us an average of only $21.62 for each person, a sum which does not equal the single item of initiation into the lodge.

THE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

In many parts of the country this order is gaining ground, roping-in a class of young men who cannot be drawn into the orders whose records are now familiar to the public. Those who have learned that all secret societies are evil will not be easily deceived by any, but some who have not this knowledge need to examine for themselves each order.

The Knights of Pythias have existed in this country since 1864, having originated in Washington, D. C. Their ceremonies of initiation are, in turn, silly, absurd, horrible and wicked. There is nothing in the principles or secrets to commend them to men of honest purposes and Christian character.

In general, it may be said, the members and officers wear masks, and the latter wear robes during the ceremony of initiation. There is an altar in the middle of the lodge, on which, as in other secret orders, the Bible lies, covered by weapons of warfare, the emblems of the order. No use is made of the Bible except to swear candidates over and to aid in giving a mock solemnity to the heathenish ceremonies.

The candidate for initiation is divested of coat and vest and covered with a white robe, his eyes being securely bandaged. In this blindfolded condition he is led into the lodge, where the chief officer, called the Chancellor Commander, asks a series of questions of him to make his initiation as binding upon his conscience as possible. One of the questions is, "Do you believe in the existence of a Supreme Being?" This is a standing question in all secret orders, and marks their deistical character, for in none of them is there any confession of Christ or recognition of his revelation, yet Christians believe the confession of Christ is paramount to a vague, indefinite belief in a deity.

Another question propounded to bind beforehand the conscience of the candidate is this: "I ask you in the name of the order universal, what are we to expect from you in return?" To which the candidate must answer: "Obedience." From the Masons to the Fenians in Ireland all orders imply this law of obedience to the leaders of the order. Through bloodshed and death the human family, by the blessing of God, has fought its way through king-craft, out of serfdom, to a position of liberty, independence and equality, but ambitious tyrants must needs revive these institutions of the dark ages to accustom our people to unquestioned obedience to superiors as a preparation for a return to the glories of empire and kingdom. May God interpose to defeat the design.

The Prelate (yes, they have a Prelate,) administers the obligation, of which the following forms a part: "I further promise and declare that I will ever and always relieve a distressed brother; that I will warn him of any danger which I may know to threaten him and will fly to his succor and aid whenever and wherever I may be convinced by eye or ear that he is in need thereof."

This obligation is taken while kneeling over a coffin containing a human skeleton, in a dim light, surrounded by a band of men in masks and robes. Every preparation is made to impress the candidate with the binding nature of this obligation, and that he can never be released from it—it is perpetual. It will be noticed that in this order, as in others, the promise to "relieve" and "warn" are without limitation. It is not confined to common and natural acts of charity and humanity, but all circumstances are embraced. In politics, in trials at court for criminality, in secret plots for evil, in all circumstances appeals can be made and must be responded to.

To avoid any misunderstanding the Prelate immediately addresses the candidate as follows: "Stranger, you have taken upon yourself an obligation of great solemnity. It is perhaps needless for me to enjoin upon you the great necessity of your living up to, IN EACH AND EVERY PARTICULAR, ALL THE REQUIREMENTS THEREIN CONTAINED." The candidate is then instructed in secret modes of recognition by which he may appeal for help or respond to appeals, including a sign of distress, which he may use if arrested, or on trial before the court, to secure his release.

This barely describes the outline of the entry into the lodge, but it is enough to stamp the Knights of Pythias as deistical in religion, selfish in friendship, disgusting and shameful in initiatory ceremonies, dangerous in politics and the courts, and low and vulgar in their aims.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GOV. FOSTER'S WHISKY TAX.

Pulaski, O.

Editor Cynosure:—Governor Foster, in his message to the Ohio legislature, in speaking on the temperance question says: "I am clearly of the opinion that a simple law taxing the traffic at a uniform rate throughout the State, and making the premises whereon or whereupon the business is conducted liable for the tax, is clearly constitutional, will be found popular, can easily be executed, and will operate as a practical, effective and satisfactory measure of restraint; and, therefore, I recommend such a law."

As it was so clear to his mind, it is to be regretted that he did not attempt to make it clear to the minds of the people. Let us suppose a case: A man engaged in the business of horse stealing, and is making a comfortable living. Now suppose that the legislature, "as a practical, effective and satisfactory measure of restraint," should tax said business, say the price of one horse. Is it not plain to every school-boy, that to keep even he would have to steal one horse more? Or take the farmer, and put an additional burden of fifty or a hundred dollars on him in the shape of taxes, and then see him dig. Tobacco is taxed, and so is every man that sells it. Does that operate as a practical, effective and satisfactory measure of restraint upon its use?

He tells us that "it is a humiliating fact that in Ohio we have more than sixteen thousand places where this unrestrained traffic is carried on." How much less humiliating the fact will be when these places are all taxed, we are not informed.

He tells us that the enormity of the evil is admitted by all, and that the magnitude of the burden was never so great as now. But instead of asking the legislature to stand in the breach he suggests the propriety of setting up toll-gates. Nearly two thousand years ago it was held unlawful to put the price of blood into the treasury. But suppose we tax these sixteen thousand saloons $500 each, what then? Will it remove the temptation from our young men? Will any old toper be made dry? Of course not; no one expects it.

But perhaps some one will say, "It will put eight millions of dollars into our treasury, at least." Well, let us see how the figures will look. We will turn to the message: "The amount of the entire traffic will probably exceed $70,000,000 annually." But as this is all paid by the topers themselves we will not take it into the account at all. But he tells us that this "contributes but a little of the burden it imposes upon the public through the crime and pauperism it creates." So the figures stand:

Cost of whisky to the State	$630,000,000
Profit " "	8,000,000
Balance against whisky	$622,000,000

The price of pure whisky is ten times as much as it was twenty-five years ago. Are people soberer now than then? The Governor seems to think not. Then how does he expect to lessen the evil by taxation? Let him tax his 16,000 saloons $500 each, each toper would have to drink ten glasses where he only drinks nine now, and the tax would be more than made up; and the probabilities are that there is not one in a thousand but would be willing to do that. But just where the practical, effective and satisfactory restraint would come in we fail to see.

Yours for more light, J. G. Mattoon.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOLS OF LODGERY.

Weston, Mich., Feb. 26, 1883.

Dear Cynosure:—Though there is not much news of importance from this part of the field, I still desire to keep up my acquaintance with the workers in the noble cause of anti-secrecy reform. Among the four or five papers I take, there is none that I read with so much satisfaction and interest as I do the Cynosure. In its new departure I see marked improvements and advances. The New England work seems to me to be full of promise, and also the work in Washington; while the "tidings from the West" are full of cheer.

I was particularly struck with the force of the arguments presented in the article in the last number, entitled "Systematic Training in the Lodge System." The lodge system is a unit. One principle runs through them all. In order to catch the unwary and inexperienced it has been found necessary to bait the hook with some professed benevolent or reformatory object. About the first lure that is placed before the unsuspecting youth is the temperance question. All careful observers have seen that when a lodge of Good Templars has been started in any place, some Mason or Odd-fellow is placed at the head of it—generally a Mason. Now this is not a mere chance or happen so, but a part of a well-laid plan that is designed to lead to the trap at the further end of the lane—Freemasonry.

As an instance, let me cite a recent case in Adrian (Mich.) College. A lodge of Good Templars has just been organized there, and Prof. Walker, a Freemason, is made "Worthy Chief." This college was built by the Wesleyans, whose principles are opposed to secret societies, but at present it is under the control of the Protestant Methodist church, but draws its students of both sexes from families and communities not noted for lodge affinities. Hence the work of the dextrous fingers of the "Old Handmaid" in entangling the lives of the young sent there to obtain an education, in the meshes of secretism. The ostensible object is to promote the cause of temperance, but its real aim is to bias the young mind in favor of secret societies with the expectation that sooner or later the neophytes will find their way to the Masonic lodge, the mother of them all.

Not long since a funeral of a Royal Arch Mason took place here, which was celebrated with two kinds of religion, the Christian and Masonic. The impression left by the Masonic crowd was not a favorable one. There has been too much Anti-masonic light sown here to make such exhibitions popular.

Secret societies are dangerous in their tendencies, being opposed to the genius and spirit of our free institutions. They are a moral and political evil, and as such they should be resisted by every lover of his country and of his race. C. Quick.

SIMPLICITY.

"Oh, holy simplicity!" exclaimed the burning John Huss, when an old woman seemed to think that she was doing God service by heaping the fagots about him.

The Boston Congregationalist awakes from its sleep of apathy, indifference and self-interest; rolls over, and asks with great simplicity, What has got into the boys that so many steal money from their employers and pretend that they have been robbed in order to conceal the theft?

The reason is plain. It is because such papers as the Congregationalist, with their ponderous array of reverened contributors remain silent while the boys and the men of the country are being taught by the Masonic lodge that the arts of secrecy, slyness, and fraud are "ancient and honorable;" that they are to be concealed and never revealed; that the true grip of the lion's paw may raise one from the death of infamy, and secure him a ready admittance into the great lodge above, etc., etc.

The curiosity of the Congregationalist has been once before aroused in a similar manner. The occasion was on discovering that boys were frequently shooting each other with pistols. This was after that paper had been for some time inserting among its latest news from Zion advertisements of sure pop, first class pistols for sale.

The simplicity of the Congregationalist is very great indeed. Alas my Brother!

A CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

An old minister in eastern Illinois who has a good suggestion, which he will help to carry into effect shortly:

"Brethren and sisters of the reform, let us have an old-fashioned Christian conference through the Cynosure. Scattered as we are through all the States and Territories and even through the world, let us feel ourselves but one embodiment of the children of the Lord, and let us speak to each other in the most child-like Christian manner what the Holy Spirit impreses on our souls as of vital importance to put forward the work of God intrusted to our hands."

Bro. L. Raymo of Unionville, Putnam Co., Mo., has been for years one of the most untiring workers for the reform. He shall have two minutes to give some items; valuable and cheering:

"I had the privilege of attending a heathen funeral last Sunday for the first time. There were two set of civilized men practicing heathen rites. One set calling themselves 'Odd-Fellows,' had to stand to one side and keep mum; they had the privilege of marching past the grave and dropping their twigs. The other set calling themselves 'Freemasons,' seemed to be the 'bosses.' Well it is a grand thing for men calling themselves Christians to be mixed up in! There has been a little stirring among the dry bones of Unionville the past two or three weeks. The M. E. church has been holding a protracted meeting. The minister is an Odd-fellow and several of the members are Masons and Odd-fellows; but John Cavat, a former pastor, (now located) came to assist. He called John Manning of Laclede to help; both are holiness men. The latter said he had been a lodge man; had been a representative to the Grand Lodge at St. Louis and thought it a grand thing, but when he got saved from sin he got saved from the lodge. He told them they must break away from all their idols. I believe the leven of truth is working and Christ will be triumphant."

Bro. John Brown, of Volga City, Iowa, puts some sharp questions to the editor of the Standard, the Baptist organ, of this city:

"The Standard, speaking of 'the fearful revelations made in the witness-stand by the two who participated in the murder of Cavendish and Burke,' says, 'The wretches who turned Queen's evidence are as bad as any of the gang, and have added treachery to their other crimes.' That these wretches are as bad as any of the gang I have no doubt, but permit me to ask, Was it a crime for them to reveal the guilt of their accomplices, as the Standard implies? No doubt they were sworn to secrecy, but was such an oath obligatory? Whether was it best to keep or break such an oath? Can a person be said to be a subject of true repentance who would conceal the guilt of his fellow conspirators? Does his oath bind him to do so? What says the law of conscience, or the law of God?"

Our Chicago friend, "Senex," is moved by some remarks in defense of the resurrection in the same paper to address a word of reproof to some who profess Christianity while yet bound by the lodge:

"Christian, snared by the lodge, how is it with you? Lodgery pretends to be a supporter of religion, but have you not found it to be rather a subverter of the power of your Christianity and an efficient ally of the subtle, plausible enemy of mankind? The most irrational specimen of mankind in the world is he who denies the purifying power of the faith in the risen Redeemer, and the blessings which he has bestowed and is bestowing upon the world. And lodgery tries to conciliate and fellowship the enemies of Christ and his cause! How can you remain in such a 'fellowship?'"

"Vigilance," a Vermont correspondent, has not been observing the operations of secret lodges in vain, and makes a comparison which will be remembered by all who read it:

"Reader, what if you were to look around some day and find that the Episcopalians had quietly managed to get a controlling influence and direction in every school committee, in every church committee, in every newspaper office, in every farmer's club, in every railroad management, in every political committee, in every legislature, in every court of law, in Congress and out of Congress—would you not begin to suspect at last that power and privilege in this country are somewhat unequally divided; rather too much so for a Republican country? Well, please look around you in your own neighborhood and see if Freemasonry has not slyly got control of every interest which we have here mentioned? See if it does not lead unsuspecting society by the nose."

Elder Nathan Callender had much joy of his visit some weeks since in Willett, N. Y. Mrs. L. Greene, a friend whom he found there, gives us a sequel to his letter telling of his visit:

"In the quiet town of W—— our churches, two in number, are represented by a couple of young ministers of the modern type, whom Satan, the great deceiver of mankind, has deluded into the idea that in order to be successful in their work they must needs wear the Masonic garb. So the people, if subject to the powers that rule (I am not), must listen to instructors who hold the truth in unrighteousness, for while they hold up Christ as the Saviour they themselves are seeking after another god and are in bondage thereto. In the midst of these abominations my soul cries out for the living God, and the inquiry comes from my inmost soul, "How long, O Lord, how long shall these things be so?" Through these men the issue is forced upon us as a Christian people, and the question must be settled for God and the right. As for me, I shall dare to stand alone rather than give honor to such men. We have here many Christians, young in experience, whose minds have been agitated on this subject, and will no doubt ere long be found taking strong positions against this terrible evil."

Bro. J. A. Rose of Carl, Adams county, Iowa, lives in a neighborhood where there is promise of much good to the cause of our Redeemer:

"There are a number in these parts who are not willing longer to be subjects of the Secret Empire. We have an anti-secret society here at Perry Grove school-house, Adams county. We polled four votes for the American party last fall. The work seems to be waking up the people, yet with too many the impression is that we are in no danger."

SYLLOGISM FOR THE TELESCOPE.

Query. May a person holding a card from an Odd-Fellow or Freemason lodge join the U. B. church and be a legal member of the church, without expressing disapproval of the order?

Ans.—Some might do so and others might not. Some might not see the evil of secret societies. Expressing "disapproval of the order" is not a condition of membership."—Religious Telescope, Feb. 14.

It is the covenant of Masonry that makes a man a member of the Masonic order." (See Webb,s Monitor, pp. 24.)

"A demit from the lodge is a certificate of good standing in the order." (Mackey's Lex., Art. Demit.)

Therefore, until he disavows his covenant, every Mason is a Mason in good standing. The Religious Telescope says editorially (Feb. 14.) that a Mason holding a demit from his lodge may become a legal member of the U. B. church without any disavowal of his covenant. Therefore, a Mason in good standing may be a legal member of the U. B. church. Is that what Bro. Hott means?"

H. H. Hinman.

MASONIC OATHS VS. CIVIL OATHS.

The Dover (N. H.) Inquirer, of Jan. 4, 1883, in an obituary notice of Col. John D. Devin gives the following statement which tends to show that the Masonic oath is regarded by Masons as binding when it conflicts with the oath of fidelity to the civil government.

"Lieut. Devin reported at New York and was assigned to duty soon after as A. Q. M. of Bank's Expedition in the valley. In the retreat he was thrown from his horse and with a broken arm was captured by the enemy. To the officer in command, he gave the Masonic signal of distress, which was recognized and a guard was set over the building in which he was confined. On their retreating in turn, the officer came to Lieutenant Devin and removing the gaurd bid him a pleasant journey to his home and friends, and Lieut. Devin came safely to Washington, thanks to Masonic ties."

There is nothing in the voice of Masonry with its triangles, circles, compasses, aprons, squares, etc., which is anything like the voice of the True Shepherd. He who mistakes one for the other cannot be much of a Christian.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

Cleveland (O.) people are thinking about discontinuing the electric light on account of its high price. They have better light than before, but at four times the cost of the gas formerly employed.

Paper pulp strengthened with cotton or woolen fibres is now used to make a neat and sufficiently durable stocking, costing much less than the price of laundrying a pair of cotton or woolen stockings.

A freight wagon has been patented in Germany that can be drawn on rails or on ordiuary roads to the water's edge, when, by unscrewing four nuts, the body of the wagon is freed from the wheels, and can be towed to any distance, being thus transformed into a stout boat.

After a recent violent storm on the English coast, a quantity of saline matter was observed on windows at a distance inland. The deposit is believed to have been made by ocean spray, which in this case must have been blown by the wind at least sixty miles.

The London Times says that Dr. Candeze has recently proved the practicability of photographing landscapes from the window of a train moving at a rate of even fifty miles an hour. Wonderfully distinct views have been obtained.

Ordinary American railway cars weigh as follows: A sleeping-car of the usual pattern, about 66,990 pounds; a drawing-room car, 63,900 pounds; a passenger car, 55 feet long, 42-inch wheels, and four-wheel trucks, weighs 45,310 pounds.

During the year 1882, the Chicago and Northwestern transported 29,648 emigrants in Central Dakota. Emigrant movables to the amount of 138,340 tons also passed over the line for Central Dakota. Estimating the number of emigrants per car at forty, the Northwestern carried 749 carloads of emigrants, an average of about two carloads per day.

London contains fourteen strictly terminal railway stations, from which no fewer than 2202 trains depart daily, and nearly 1600 of these leave between the hours of 10 A. M. and 10 P. M. The largest number of departures from a single terminus is 320, after which come two stations, with 312 and 295 respectively. These figures are exclusive of the immense system supplying the city with local transit.

In opening the winter session lately, the rector of the University of Leipsic mentioned that out of twelve students who died last session, only four succumbed to natural causes. One fell in a duel, and seven had committed suicide. This, the Times correspondent at Berlin remarks, would bear out the statement of a recent compiler of social statistics, that the kingdom of Saxony is "the Chimborazo of suicide."

Suicide is becoming alarmingly frequent in the Prussian army, especially among the higher ranks. Not to mention other recent cases, a young cadet of sixteen shot himself the other day in the military college at Lichterfelde; and at a numerously-attended ball the other evening at the house of a staff officer in Spandau, a lieutenant suddenly drew a pistol and blew out his brains. A Prussian officer who lately went to Paris on a matrimonial errand, has put an end to himself in the same way. Deaths from duelling in Germany have also been frequent of late.

It is estimated that there are five times as many kinds of insects as there are species of all other living things put together. The oak alone gives shelter and support to 450 species of insects, and 200 kinds make their home in pine trees. In 1849, Alexander von Humboldt estimated that the number of species preserved in collections was between 150,000 and 170,000, but scientific men now say that there must be something like 750,000 species.

Mr. Thompson, chaplain of the southern Illinois penitentiary, estimates that out of 500 criminals under his observation 419 were without home influence at 18 years and under; 218 never had been in school, and only 32 learned to read and write in prison. Of their habits, he learned that 406 frequented saloons; 115 were drunk at the time their crime was committed; 246 gambled, and 208 carried concealed weapons. Over one-half (290) were under 25 years of age at the time of committing their first penitentiary crime.

Editors are not unfrequently blamed for taking liberties with articles from their correspondents. They sometimes run their pen across objectionable utterances, and these do not, of course, appear in print. Oftimes they are thanked afterwards by correspondents for the exercise of this prerogative; but not unfrequently wrath is thereby awakened and hurled at the offending head in the sanctum. The worst instance of unjustifiable indignation that we have heard of was that manifested against the editor of the German Reformed Messenger. An obituary notice had been sent for insertion in his paper. The editor changed a single sentence. The author was offended. The sentence which the editor corrected was the one which announced that an old mother in Israel had died of cholera infantum.—Christian Instructor.

This is a good natured world after all. Here are Herr Most in America and Louise Michel in England going about preaching promiscuous assassination and universal conflagration, and not a policeman in sight! Herr Most, although a man of small stature, seems to have an insatiable thirst for blood and an incipient capacity for murder which would have helped out Nero in his hours of satiety; and as for Louise Michel, does not everybody know that when she was a small child she wrung a viper's head off? Since that time she has been decapitating in imagination all manner of offensive people, including Gambetta and Thiers. Publishers who are looking for a salable work could not do better than to re-issue DeQuincey's "Murder as a Fine Art," with portraits of these two sanguinary apostles by way of a frontispiece. It illustrates the difference between a republican and a despotic form of government, that whereas under the latter the performance of these two people would excite alarm and set the detectives at work, under the former they simply become material for "Punch" and "Puck" and for witty newspaper paragraphs.—Christian Union.

According to a recent volume of travels not a single one of the aborigines of Van Dieman's Land is now living. There were once 12,000 natives of New Hebrides; now 2,000. Thirty years ago there were 50,000 Tongese; now not 12,000. The Marois are reduced from 100,000 to 40,000. The Marquesas Islanders and Sandwich Islanders have lost nine-tenths.

It is said that the results of colonization in South Africa by the English and Dutch are thus far similar, and that the African-American is the only inferior race that holds its own in contact with civilization.

Snow is a rare phenomenon in California. So much damage was done to the street-cars in Stockton, Cal., by snowballs thrown during a recent snow-storm that the company hauled off the cars at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The managers blamed the police for not protecting their property "when they had always been allowed to ride free," but one of them asked: "What could four policemen do to prevent 26,000 people from snow-balling?" The managers say their car-windows were broken, and the drivers attacked when it was impossible for them to defend themselves, and that from pleasantry the snowballing went to ice-balling and dangerous attacks long after the men of the company protested, and that it did not cease until the cars were drawn off.

THE CHURCHES AGAINST LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 1883.

THE LOGICAL RESULT

of lodge oaths and secret combinations as now appearing in Europe is presented at some length in this number of the Cynosure, which will be valuable on this account. Let the irresistible argument of President Finney on the 12th page be studied in connection. A number on the "Great Commoner," is in preparation, and will be a sheet to be read with deep interest.

THADDEUS STEVENS,

EYE TO EYE.

There are good men enough in the United Brethren church to redeem it from the lodge at its coming General Conference, if they are united, and there is hope that they may be so. The Richmond Star for February holds this decided language:

"On the subject of secrecy, the testimony of the United Brethren church is very great importance. Secretists know this. Their abettors in the church know this. Those treasonable to the anti-secrecy cause, in high or low places in the church, know this. A battle like that of Armageddon is to be fought for the prize. It is to put out this light, that secretists join with those in the church who would surrender for imagined wealth or popularity."

The Chambersburg paper speaks thus, same date:

"The church is not where it was once, its enemies and friends being judges. The time for humiliation, repentance and reform, has come, and those among us who will not recognize this duty are enemies of truth and righteousness."

When the watchmen begin to "see eye to eye" the "Lord is about to bring again Zion." The respected brethren who conduct these two papers can remember the time when neither of them could have used the plain, forcible and just words above cited, without offending multitudes who will now read those paragraphs with warm approbation.

Now let both of these papers advocate Rev. J. S. T. Milligan's proposed "National Council of Churches." Surely if Covenanters can go into such a convention, United Presbyterians, United Brethren, Wesleyans, and Free Methodists can; and if they consent, they will meet a host of Congregationalists, Baptists, with some Episcopalians, Episcopal Methodists and Assembly Presbyterians who already see that the secret lodge system is anti-Christ.

Let us go up to some Jerusalem about this matter; the same identical question which took "Paul and Barnabas and certain others with them," up to Jerusalem eighteen hundred years ago (see Acts 15th chapter) namely, Is salvation by ceremonies or by faith in Christ? Shall we ignore, tolerate or condemn Masonic oaths, worships, prayers, funerals, baptisms and ritual promises of salvation? An assembly of two or three thousand godly men and women about this matter would fall like a shower of sunbeams on the people of the United States.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

The first use of the new N. C. A. building.—The power of the movement.—The "Salary Grab" and its interpretation by Hon. E. B. Washburne.—How the new building will aid the cause.

WASHINGTON HEADQUARTERS, N. C. A.,
No. 215 4½ St., N. W., Feb. 28, '83.

This is the first letter written from our headquarters in this city. I am just seated in the first renovated room, and the workmen are employed on the building above, around and below me.

I cannot describe my emotions. I sit down here where thousands of eyes already turn, and where the thoughts of millions are to center. The Capitol on yonder hill, tall and comely in its proportions, which is thronged by crowds, increasing as the end of the Congressional session draws on, is the great national focus, not only of power and legislation, but of greed and ambition, to the multitudes whose lode-stones are caucuses and appropriation bills; their goal, promotion; their religion, ambition; and the dome of the Capitol the temple of their worship.

A few years since this city was the chief slave-mart of the world, and Howell Cobb scoffed at John Quincy Adams' petition for abolition in the District. "It would knock out the keystone of the arch of our Union." A few "fanatics" put a humble printing house here, and that printing house, soon after, gave law to that Capitol, so that no man could enter Congress or the White House who did not believe with Lincoln, "If slavery ain't wrong, nothing's wrong."

This unpretending No. 215, on 4½ street, is another National Era. It will give law to that proud Capitol. For if the lodge ain't wrong, then nothing's wrong. It neither worships the God nor obeys the laws of the United States to which that Capitol belongs.

In our great national agony Congress voted its members salaries of seven thousand five hundred dollars a year! E. B. Washburne, then, I think, our minister to France, commented thus on that vote:

"When we had eight dollars per day I saved something. When we had fixed salaries of $1,500 a year, I saved something more from my salary and mileage. When we were paid $3,000 dollars a year, I thought myself well-to-do. After that, a salary of $5,000 a year, put Congressmen above the vast majority of their constituents. Yet Messrs. Butler and Sprague of Rhode Island and others clamored for $10,000; and compromise placed the salary at $7,500. And I can conceive that members who keep four or five fast women, and who 'buck the tiger' [i. e. gamble] every night may find that their salary scarcely covers their expenses."

I quote Mr. Washburne from memory, but the above are nearly his words and exactly their meaning. Every additional thousand dollars paid to members of Congress above a reasonable support, swells the army of elegantly dressed women who disappear from these streets, no one knows where, when Congress rises.

Their constituents were outraged by the vote thus sharply criticised by Mr. Washburne, and, next year, salaries were put back to $5,000, where they now stand; and still our national capital approximates the state of one of old before it sunk,——"Omnia venalia Roman."

But what has this to do with No. 215?

Much every way. This house is purchased to give the country news from Washington, which is not strained through Masonic sieves; to put the platform of the American party before the American people; to extract the lodge-virus from every church in this city which does not wholly worship "the god of this world;" to uncover the "chambers of imagery,"—

"And pour in light o'er Pluto's dread abodes,
Abhorred by men and dreadful e'en to gods."

Nor will it require a majority of American voters to redeem this capital. If a strong vote can be given in November, 1884, by men who will never go back on God and truth, as in the fall of slavery, selfishness will complete what the fear of God begins. J. B.

Two ruffians, whom the profession of pugilism had brought into the company of men who should despise themselves for the fact, had a shooting scrape in one of our Chicago saloons last week. The badly wounded survivor is said to have recently acquired quite a reputation as an orator under these circumstances: A fellow thief died and was buried. His will was that there should be no religious services about his grave, but that two dozen bottles of wine should be brought and drunk about the grave, the last one being poured out upon the coffin. This hideous orgy should be followed by an oration by a companion. His wish was carried out to the letter and the resonant and flowery periods of the address were reproduced in the columns of the Tribune. But their likeness to the speech of the man who thinks nothing of the Bible but to revile its Author, and pick out what he pleases to call the "Mistakes of Moses," betrayed their parentage. We are informed on good authority that Robert G. Ingersoll of Washington, furnished the thugs their funeral speech. This is the kind of business which he has ever been forward to charge upon better men who love the God whose mercy he insults.

—Secretary Stoddard started for the East again on Friday morning, expecting to stop frequently on his way, and possibly visiting the Connecticut State Convention at Willimantic on the 20th inst.

—Rev. W. R. Roach, formerly of Palmyra, Wisconsin, has removed to Pickering in the Canadian province of Ontario. He expects to lecture occasionally in Canada, and the Cynosure can heartily recommend him as a faithful soldier of Christ, a successful pastor, and a well-informed speaker for the reform.

—Bro. Robert J. Williams, State lecturer for Minnesota, has ordered a quantity of books and tracts to be ready for the next meeting of the Martin County Christian Association, which meets on the 8th, 9th and 10th inst.

—The Washington papers print a jocular account of the Entered Apprentice public initiation in M'Cauley's Hall last week, and promise a higher degree soon. The exposure is called an "alleged" one, and the participants and the exercises are described in a vein, not malicious perhaps, but not at least such as would demand for them the respect of the people.

—"Was he murdered by Freemasons?" in poster type is the catch-penny heading of a story in one of the lowest of the sensational weeklies. The Morgan tragedy furnishes a text which is almost lost sight of even in the first installment, since the narrative proceeds upon facts furnished by the imagination of the writer, which is neither fertile nor profound. The only matter worth noting is the fact simply that the topic is thus recognized as one of wide and popular interest, and that the truth of the matter is strange enough for the purposes of fiction.

—Mrs. J. S. Collins, late of Washington City, is yet sojourning in Kansas with her husband, Dr. S. Collins, president of the Batavia Convention. She is employing her pen to good purpose in the Emporia papers. Some onee so ashamed of the cause he vindicates as to hide his name behind an assumed title, endeavors to defend the lodge against her vigorous objections. Her reply in the last Emporia Democrat thoroughly exposes the duplicity both of the lodge and its defender, who is said to be Rev. H. Mackay, the occupant of the Episcopal pulpit in Emporia, who succeded in making a disgraceful exhibition of himself at the State Convention, and has since been openly advocating the lodge, dancing, smoking, billiards, the theater and passion play in his pulpit.

BEACONSFIELD'S LODGES OF MASSACRE.

The remarkable language of the late British Prime Minister, that the governments of Europe had to deal with secret societies with wide-spread membership, masters that require unquestioning obedience, which can incite insurrection and produce massacre, is being verified with fearful reality. In Europe mine after mine of these conspirators are now being uncapped. Since the astounding revelations of Kavanagh and Carey in Dublin court, there has been discovered in Andalusia, Spain, secret societies of a socialistic character numbering 1,000 members, including persons of high standing in society, whose aim is to destroy the rights of property and exterminate the land owners of the middle class. At Xeres the hand of a similar organization is seen in letters demanding money from landlords, and the discovery upon arrested parties of documents clearly proving the connection of the prisoners with secret societies abroad. This society is known by a significant title—the "Black Hand"—which revives the memory of the robber bands that infested England during the last century. At Arcos, Spain, a chief, or organizer of lodges, was arrested last week, whose duty was to visit various towns and form branch societies. The government is taking active measures to root out the evil. Eleven of these anarchists in jail at Espera have confessed that they and 223 others were pledged to murder landlords and commit robbery and arson at the bidding of their leaders.

Over in Austria the trial of thirty members of a socialist society begins on Thursday of this week. The indictment charges them with connection with the Internationale and the bloody theories of Most, which that desperado has been mouthing about in the foreign quarters of our American cities. All of them are charged with treason, and one-half with murder or complicity therein.

At Prague, in Hungary, a secret society of miners has been unearthed, and members are on trial for conspiring to assassinate.

At Hildesheim, Hanover, the police have discovered a secret union of foreign laborers, and upon making arrests important papers were seized, doubtless implicating the band with like organizations in other parts of Europe, though the dispatch does not particularize.

At Brussels, and in the village of Gansharten in Belgium, papers have been seized and arrests made of members of other secret anarchist bands. In the latter place some of the conspirators were experimenting with dynamite, when an explosion took place in which several men were wounded, and it was discovered that a plot had been organized to murder the Czar at his coronation in Moscow in May.

From St. Petersburg comes a dispatch stating that letters have been received by the the authorities threatening to blow up the Kremlin at Moscow where the Czar is to be crowned. The strictest search has been made without revealing any preparation for the atrocious scheme, and careful watch will be maintained in memory of the great explosion in the dining-room of the Winter Palace, and the fatal bombs which finally tore out the life of Alexander I. upon the streets of St. Petersburg. His son, after two gloomy years have passed since his accession, has announced the formal coronation ceremonies, and the comparative lull in the Nihilist operations encourages the authorities to believe the order nearly suppressed, although the government promises of a constitution have been unfulfilled and the liberal and firm policy of Melikoff has been superseded by a repressive and reactionary ministry.

In connection with the societies which England seems at last to have by the throat, there is little of interest developed since the confession of Carey. The police have obtained information that the names of six men have already been enrolled to fill the gaps in the ranks of the "Irish Invincibles," made by the arrest of its members, and startling discoveries have been made in the quiet community of Rochdale, England, where the philanthropy of John Bright has established successful co-operative industries. Letters siezed at the lodgings of one John Walsh reveal the fact that 6,000 men are enrolled in the secret society he has been organizing in the North of England, and are amply provided with funds and revolvers. Lists of names of the chief members of the various secret societies and documents disclosing their extent were found. There was also correspondence with conspirators on the continent, and a photograph of the celebrated "No. 1" of the Dublin assassination band, establishing the identity of that character. Walsh was arrested at Havre, France, on the 1st inst. and his complicity with the Dublin conspirators is thought to be established. A man named Sheridan, connected with the Irish World of New York, has also been identified as one of the band, and his extradition has been asked by the British government.

Thus wide-spread, darkly undermining the foundations of peaceful society, bound by fierce oaths to do the bidding of unknown superiors, appear these secret orders, of which Lord Beaconsfield spoke with so deep a meaning. But is not the public too suspicious of these societies? Are they not simply "convivial" clubs, "benefit" societies, gatherings of honorable citizens for the private discussion of business or local politics? Are they, in fact, anything more dreadful than our excellent Masonic, Odd-fellow, Knights of Pythias, and other lodges? Let us see what the Dublin courts have revealed.

The men under arrest and on trial for their lives are thus sketched: One is a master builder of Dublin, an alderman of that city, ready to loan $500 at any time to the Dublin Brick-layers' Society to which he belonged. Once, when under arrest for suspected activity in favor of Irish republicanism, he was put for three weeks in solitary confinement because he let off a rocket from his cell on the anniversary of American independence. He is a temperate and shrewd business man. Another is a young and successful grocer, well educated by his own exertions and so well known and respected for honorable character that when arrested, under Mr. Foster's administration of Irish affairs, on suspicion, he was allowed bail in a nominal sum. Another grew up from the life of a waif, who, in inclement weather, was permitted by the kindness of an undertaker to sleep in a coffin, and came to be a respectable clerk. Another is a compositor; others are carpenters above the level of ordinary workmen; others are hackmen—none are known to be thieves or desperadoes. Such is the character of the Dublin prisoners—equals and superiors to the mass of lodge members in this country, whose honorable character is supposed to refute every objection against the orders.

These men, looked upon as honorable members of the Fenian society, were joined in a desperate plan to deliberately murder any and all whom their unknown superiors might command. Largely unknown to each other, they met by order and proceeded about their fearful work. One mild evening eight of them drove in two cabs to Phœnix Park, Dublin. One had with him his two little girls. Seven were posted in two bands by a frequented path and the eighth pointed out an approaching victim, who was unfortunately, accompanied by a friend. The two passed one band and were confronted by the other, and were enclosed amid gleaming daggers suddenly drawn. They made a brief, brave but ineffectual defense against the fierce thrusts of the assassins. They fell, and to make sure work the throat of one was cut. Wiping their knives upon the grass the conspirators fled in the waiting vehicles, and were undetected. Soon after, in obedience to another order, these honorable Fenians attacked a juryman and left him for dead. Soon after, as a judge of one of the courts was going home in the evening attended by a police guard, he was fiercely attacked by another of these esteemed citizens. Detectives barely escaped with their lives, and no officer of the British government dared appear in the Dublin streets without a guard. Such was the work the secret societies of Ireland attempted and accomplished. If the same results are not likely to follow when the same causes are in operation, let every freeman in America answer.

—Rev. C. H. Hobart, whose able and eloquent Thanksgiving discourse was printed in the Cynosure of Jan. 18th, is a young man, and pastor of the First Baptist church, Aurora. The association of Baptist churches to which he belongs includes such earnest and faithful men as Elder Freeman of Downer's Grove; Bro. F. M. Smith, a seceder, of Bristol; and Bro. E. W. Hicks of Shabbona, who frequently speaks clearly against the lodge evil in his monthly paper.

The following story is told of Joseph Cook: Meeting Prof. Park, of Andover, recently, the latter said to him "You went to school at Phillips Academy, and now you are more talked about than any of its teachers; you went to Yale, and you are more talked about than any of the Yale faculty; you came to our theological seminary, and you are more talked about than any of us; you lectured at Harvard, and are more talked about than any professor at Harvard." Cook replied calmly, "So was Guiteau!"

THE SITUATION.

By the munificence of Mr. Carpenter our work is in a position where it commands the respect of the best business men of Chicago, and can make its influence felt throughout the entire North and West, of which this is the acknowledged center of influences. The removal of the Cynosure to its own quarters and the changes made in its appearance, while maintaining its distinctive features, has been received as an omen of progress towards conquest and victory. Before "departing in peace to be forever with his Lord," Bro. Loomis by a timely bequest virtually established the anti-secrecy work in New England with a center at Worcester. His lead has been followed by others and the question pushed by the vigorous energies of Bro. Bailey and his well chosen helpers, until even conservative churches that sigh for "peace in our day" are compelled to at least take notice of the fact that the "waters are troubled." The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of a second struggle, with "spiritual and mighty weapons" to set the enslaved masses free from the bondage to the "Secret Empire" has been written. Bros. Leuty, Varney and many like minded, and liberal as the Lord has given them the stewardship of means, have kept the breath of life in our lecturers while they have gone every where "preaching the word," scattering tracts and casting the "leaven into the lump," until a point has been reached, where a standard must be set in the capital of our nation, or the prestige and power already gained be greatly impaired. The readers of the Cynosure have noted the situation, but a brief recapitulation with added facts will be of interest especially to those who have joined the ranks since last reports were submitted.

1. It is conceded by all so far as I have known that the location selected in Washington at 215, 4½ street, and less than three blocks from the Capitol is among the most desirable in the city for our use.

2. The men who have the ability and who are willing to aid the N. C. A in looking after its interest and taking care of its property are already on the ground, and at work with a will.

3. The property has been purchased for $6,875, and a warrantee deed executed to me by Vice Admiral Rowen, its former owner. The inside of the building was very much out of repair, and it will require from $600 to $700 to make the changes necessary and the repairs required. This work is being pushed and now approaches completion.

4. Two thousand dollars have been paid on the purchase, and my note given for the remainder at six per cent semi-annual interest, secured by an ordinary deed of trust on the premises.

5. Two gentlemen in Washington, who are thoroughly acquainted with the property and its relative value as compared with other property in the city, have offered to refund all money thus far expended and assume all future responsibilities as a business investment. So that I have no fear of loss. In my judgment it would be a great mistake to accept this offer and relinquish our hold at the capital, thus providentially placed within our reach as a safe business investment. Nor do I believe it would be sound business policy to pay $877.50 in semi-annual installments of interest. The only wise, sensible, Christian thing to be done in my judgment is to cancel the entire sum at once and and require of your agent a warrantee deed to the National Christian Association, which I am more than willing to execute the day my personal obligation to Vice-admiral Rowen is released.

6. President Blanchard, after visiting the premises and spending four days in the city interviewing several men of national reputation writes me in a private note, "No. 215, 4½ street, is destined at no distant date to be one of best known points in the city of Washington.

7. An old and honored citizen of the place who is competent, trusty and financially responsible for any pledge he gives has offered to take charge of our literature and open a Reform Tract and Book department, and if the Association deem it advisable to start a monthly there he will make accounts balance at the end of the year. You have already been introduced to our special Washington correspondent, and have your opinions of the ability, the grit and the grace of this accession to our corps of valued contributors.

8. There is no indication of a want of men or women who are willing to hazard the perils of this exposed position, for some dozen or fifteen have already applied for situations, some of whom would do very effective work, but I solemnly protest against burdening our funds with an additional tax so long as they must carry a $4,875.00 debt and make an annual payment of $292.50 interest.

9. When paid for, the premises would furnish accommodations equal to our present needs and bring in rents an income of $600 to $800 per year, while the advance in value of property along Pennsylvania Ave. in the vicinity would add every year to the invested funds of our movement. There are men who have already contributed liberally in our reform, who have not done all that they ought to do; of this they are the judges. Others have intimated a purpose to either donate or make provisions in their wills to help build the Lord's house over against the brazen walls of this modern Babylon. Brethren, would it not be well to act as your own executors and do at once and with your might what your hands find to do.

OBITUARY.

MOSES TAGGART.

Judge Moses Taggart, in the 84th year of his age, died at his home in Batavia, N. Y., on the 17th day of February, 1883.

The Batavia papers and his associates in the legal profession bear ample testimony to the high esteem in which he was held in his profession and in the community where he spent over sixty years of active business life; but the following touching and beautiful tribute to his amiable character and home influence reveals the man as he was, and will be read with interest by many who have never felt the pressure of his friendly grasp, or looked into his intelligent face:

Ere this, you have heard that my dear husband has left us. A great void has been created in our once pleasant and happy household, and we are very, very lonely. But while we are sad we are not destitute of comfort, for we have the sweet assurance that "our loss is his gain." I rejoice for him but sorrow for ourselves. We miss his genial face everywhere, and home scarcely seems like home without him. Will you not pray that I may be sustained and comforted, and enabled to be more efficient in the Master's service than ever before?

Respectfully and sincerely,
Mrs. Elizabeth Taggart.

Judge Taggart, it will be remembered, was personally acquainted with William Morgan for over three years, and mingled freely in those exciting scenes that followed his abduction by the Freemasons. He knew Mrs. Morgan and her children, and took the testimony given at the third inquest on the body found at Oak Orchard creek. When I went to Batavia to arrange for the erection of a monument he was among the first to enlist in the enterprise, and to his wise counsels and willing assistance in the consummation of that enterprise every friend is indebted. He was associated with Thurlow Weed, and although differing sometimes in their political views, there was a warm personal friendship between them. Letters in my possession from Judge Taggart to Mr. Weed, and Mr. Weed's replies, show a feeling of mutual respect and high esteem, and furnish conclusive evidence of the vigor of his mind and the clearness of his recollection, even of the little incidents of fifty years ago.

But Judge Taggart was not only opposed to the whole lodge system, in which he saw an element of great danger to governments, but he was equally pronounced in his opposition to intemperance. From his boyhood he had been a total abstainer from everything that would intoxicate, and was always ready to speak and work for the utter and entire prohibition of the liquor traffic. On several occasions he said to me that the secret temperance societies were the greatest hindrances with which the temperance cause had to contend, and that more than once the cause had been defeated in Batavia and western New York by their influence. He was not a man to be deceived by appearances and professions, but penetrated beyond the surface and had the courage to expose the hollow shams by which so many honest people are deceived and made to work in the interests of the saloons through the lodge, while supposing they are promoting the cause of temperance and reform. His work is done, and none who knew him will presume to say that it was not well done, and now that "he rests from his labors his works do follow him."

J. P. S.

—The members of the Genessee county bar adopted the following tribute of respect and esteem at a full meeting Feb. 20:

"Death has again invaded our numbers and taken the father of this bar from among us. Like a shock of grain fully ripe he has gone to his reward, according to his often expressed wish, 'in the harness.'

"Moses Taggart, who died at Batavia, N. Y., on the 17th day of February, 1883, has left a name and record worthy of emulation and respect. He was the oldest member of the bar in Genesee county, and the oldest lawyer in active practice in western New York. For more than fifty years as Counselor, County Judge of Genesee county, Judge of the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals of this State, he was engaged in active professional life, and attained a front rank as a safe and wise counselor, and an honest and industrious judge; and in the legal reports are found the records of many important cases argued by him as counsel, or decided by him as judge. As a member of the convention of 1846, that framed the Constitution of the State, he took an active part in the debates and deliberations of that distinguished body, and succeeded in introducing reforms in the organic law that were liberal, practical and beneficial. Other places of honor bestowed upon him were worthily conferred and honestly and ably filled. As a citizen, with pronounced opinions of his own upon which he acted, he was always liberal in according to others the same right he claimed for himself, of thinking and acting upon their convictions. As a neighbor he was genial, kind and considerate, charitable and just."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 1883.

THE LOGICAL RESULT

of lodge oaths and secret combinations as now appearing in Europe is presented at some length in this number of the Cynosure, which will be valuable on this account. Let the irresistible argument of President Finney on the 12th page be studied in connection. A number on the "Great Commoner," is in preparation, and will be a sheet to be read with deep interest.

THADDEUS STEVENS,

EYE TO EYE.

There are good men enough in the United Brethren church to redeem it from the lodge at its coming General Conference, if they are united, and there is hope that they may be so. The Richmond Star for February holds this decided language:

"On the subject of secrecy, the testimony of the United Brethren church is very great importance. Secretists know this. Their abettors in the church know this. Those treasonable to the anti-secrecy cause, in high or low places in the church, know this. A battle like that of Armageddon is to be fought for the prize. It is to put out this light, that secretists join with those in the church who would surrender for imagined wealth or popularity."

The Chambersburg paper speaks thus, same date:

"The church is not where it was once, its enemies and friends being judges. The time for humiliation, repentance and reform, has come, and those among us who will not recognize this duty are enemies of truth and righteousness."

When the watchmen begin to "see eye to eye" the "Lord is about to bring again Zion." The respected brethren who conduct these two papers can remember the time when neither of them could have used the plain, forcible and just words above cited, without offending multitudes who will now read those paragraphs with warm approbation.

Now let both of these papers advocate Rev. J. S. T. Milligan's proposed "National Council of Churches." Surely if Covenanters can go into such a convention, United Presbyterians, United Brethren, Wesleyans, and Free Methodists can; and if they consent, they will meet a host of Congregationalists, Baptists, with some Episcopalians, Episcopal Methodists and Assembly Presbyterians who already see that the secret lodge system is anti-Christ.

Let us go up to some Jerusalem about this matter; the same identical question which took "Paul and Barnabas and certain others with them," up to Jerusalem eighteen hundred years ago (see Acts 15th chapter) namely, Is salvation by ceremonies or by faith in Christ? Shall we ignore, tolerate or condemn Masonic oaths, worships, prayers, funerals, baptisms and ritual promises of salvation? An assembly of two or three thousand godly men and women about this matter would fall like a shower of sunbeams on the people of the United States.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

The first use of the new N. C. A. building.—The power of the movement.—The "Salary Grab" and its interpretation by Hon. E. B. Washburne.—How the new building will aid the cause.

WASHINGTON HEADQUARTERS, N. C. A.,
No. 215 4½ St., N. W., Feb. 28, '83.

This is the first letter written from our headquarters in this city. I am just seated in the first renovated room, and the workmen are employed on the building above, around and below me.

I cannot describe my emotions. I sit down here where thousands of eyes already turn, and where the thoughts of millions are to center. The Capitol on yonder hill, tall and comely in its proportions, which is thronged by crowds, increasing as the end of the Congressional session draws on, is the great national focus, not only of power and legislation, but of greed and ambition, to the multitudes whose lode-stones are caucuses and appropriation bills; their goal, promotion; their religion, ambition; and the dome of the Capitol the temple of their worship.

A few years since this city was the chief slave-mart of the world, and Howell Cobb scoffed at John Quincy Adams' petition for abolition in the District. "It would knock out the keystone of the arch of our Union." A few "fanatics" put a humble printing house here, and that printing house, soon after, gave law to that Capitol, so that no man could enter Congress or the White House who did not believe with Lincoln, "If slavery ain't wrong, nothing's wrong."

This unpretending No. 215, on 4½ street, is another National Era. It will give law to that proud Capitol. For if the lodge ain't wrong, then nothing's wrong. It neither worships the God nor obeys the laws of the United States to which that Capitol belongs.

In our great national agony Congress voted its members salaries of seven thousand five hundred dollars a year! E. B. Washburne, then, I think, our minister to France, commented thus on that vote:

"When we had eight dollars per day I saved something. When we had fixed salaries of $1,500 a year, I saved something more from my salary and mileage. When we were paid $3,000 dollars a year, I thought myself well-to-do. After that, a salary of $5,000 a year, put Congressmen above the vast majority of their coustituents. Yet Messrs. Butler and Sprague of Rhode Island and others clamored for $10,000; and compromise placed the salary at $7,500. And I can conceive that members who keep four or five fast women, and who 'buck the tiger' [i. e. gamble] every night may find that their salary scarcely covers their expenses."

I quote Mr. Washburne from memory, but the above are nearly his words and exactly their meaning. Every additional thousand dollars paid to members of Congress above a reasonable support, swells the army of elegantly dressed women who disappear from these streets, no one knows where, when Congress rises.

Their constituents were outraged by the vote thus sharply criticised by Mr. Washburne, and, next year, salaries were put back to $5,000, where they now stand; and still our national capital approximates the state of one of old before it sunk,——"Omnia venalia Roman."

But what has this to do with No. 215?

Much every way. This house is purchased to give the country news from Washington, which is not strained through Masonic sieves; to put the platform of the American party before the American people; to extract the lodge-virus from every church in this city which does not wholly worship "the god of this world;" to uncover the "chambers of imagery,"—

"And pour in light o'er Pluto's dread abodes,
Abhorred by men and dreadful e'en to gods."

Nor will it require a majority of American voters to redeem this capital. If a strong vote can be given in November, 1884, by men who will never go back on God and truth, as in the fall of slavery, selfishness will complete what the fear of God begins. J. B.

Two ruffians, whom the profession of pugilism had brought into the company of men who should despise themselves for the fact, had a shooting scrape in one of our Chicago saloons last week. The badly wounded survivor is said to have recently acquired quite a reputation as an orator under these circumstances: A fellow thief died and was buried. His will was that there should be no religious services about his grave, but that two dozen bottles of wine should be brought and drunk about the grave, the last one being poured out upon the coffin. This hideous orgy should be followed by an oration by a companion. His wish was carried out to the letter and the resonant and flowery periods of the address were reproduced in the columns of the Tribune. But their likeness to the speech of the man who thinks nothing of the Bible but to revile its Author, and pick out what he pleases to call the "Mistakes of Moses," betrayed their parentage. We are informed on good authority that Robert G. Ingersoll of Washington, furnished the thugs their funeral speech. This is the kind of business which he has ever been forward to charge upon better men who love the God whose mercy he insults.

—Secretary Stoddard started for the East again on Friday morning, expecting to stop frequently on his way, and possibly visiting the Connecticut State Convention at Willimantic on the 20th inst.

—Rev. W. R. Roach, formerly of Palmyra, Wisconsin, has removed to Pickering in the Canadian province of Ontario. He expects to lecture occasionally in Canada, and the Cynosure can heartily recommend him as a faithful soldier of Christ, a successful pastor, and a well-informed speaker for the reform.

—Bro. Robert J. Williams, State lecturer for Minnesota, has ordered a quantity of books and tracts to be ready for the next meeting of the Martin County Christian Association, which meets on the 8th, 9th and 10th inst.

—The Washington papers print a jocular account of the Entered Apprentice public initiation in M'Cauley's Hall last week, and promise a higher degree soon. The exposure is called an "alleged" one, and the participants and the exercises are described in a vein, not malicious perhaps, but not at least such as would demand for them the respect of the people.

—"Was he murdered by Freemasons?" in poster type is the catch-penny heading of a story in one of the lowest of the sensational weeklies. The Morgan tragedy furnishes a text which is almost lost sight of even in the first installment, since the narrative proceeds upon facts furnished by the imagination of the writer, which is neither fertile nor profound. The only matter worth noting is the fact simply that the topic is thus recognized as one of wide and popular interest, and that the truth of the matter is strange enough for the purposes of fiction.

—Mrs. J. S. Collins, late of Washington City, is yet sojourning in Kansas with her husband, Dr. S. Collins, president of the Batavia Convention. She is employing her pen to good purpose in the Emporia papers. Some onee so ashamed of the cause he vindicates as to hide his name behind an assumed title, endeavors to defend the lodge against her vigorous objections. Her reply in the last Emporia Democrat thoroughly exposes the duplicity both of the lodge and its defender, who is said to be Rev. H. Mackay, the occupant of the Episcopal pulpit in Emporia, who succeded in making a disgraceful exhibition of himself at the State Conveution, and has since been openly advocating the lodge, dancing, smoking, billiards, the theater and passion play in his pulpit.

BEACONSFIELD'S LODGES OF MASSACRE.

The remarkable language of the late British Prime Minister, that the governments of Europe had to deal with secret societies with wide-spread membership, masters that require unquestioning obedience, which can incite insurrection and produce massacre, is being verified with fearful reality. In Europe mine after mine of these conspirators are now being uncapped. Since the astounding revelations of Kavanagh and Carey in Dublin court, there has been discovered in Andalusia, Spain, secret societies of a socialistic character numbering 1,000 members, including persons of high standing in society, whose aim is to destroy the rights of property and exterminate the land owners of the middle class. At Xeres the hand of a similar organization is seen in letters demanding money from landlords, and the discovery upon arrested parties of documents clearly proving the connection of the prisoners with secret societies abroad. This society is known by a significant title—the "Black Hand"—which revives the memory of the robber bands that infested England during the last century. At Arcos, Spain, a chief, or organizer of lodges, was arrested last week, whose duty was to visit various towns and form branch societies. The government is taking active measures to root out the evil. Eleven of these anarchists in jail at Espera have confessed that they and 223 others were pledged to murder landlords and commit robbery and arson at the bidding of their leaders.

Over in Austria the trial of thirty members of a socialist society begins on Thursday of this week. The indictment charges them with connection with the Internationale and the bloody theories of Most, which that desperado has been mouthing about in the foreign quarters of our American cities. All of them are charged with treason, and one-half with murder or complicity therein.

At Prague, in Hungary, a secret society of miners has been unearthed, and members are on trial for conspiring to assassinate.

At Hildesheim, Hanover, the police have discovered a secret union of foreign laborers, and upon making arrests important papers were seized, doubtless implicating the band with like organizations in other parts of Europe, though the dispatch does not particularize.

At Brussels, and in the village of Gansharten in Belgium, papers have been seized and arrests made of members of other secret anarchist bands. In the latter place some of the conspirators were experimenting with dynamite, when an explosion took place in which several men were wounded, and it was discovered that a plot had been organized to murder the Czar at his coronation in Moscow in May.

From St. Petersburg comes a dispatch stating that letters have been received by the the authorities threatening to blow up the Kremlin at Moscow where the Czar is to be crowned. The strictest search has been made without revealing any preparation for the atrocious scheme, and careful watch will be maintained in memory of the great explosion in the dining-room of the Winter Palace, and the fatal bombs which finally tore out the life of Alexander I. upon the streets of St. Petersburg. His son, after two gloomy years have passed since his accession, has announced the formal coronation ceremouies, and the comparative lull in the Nihilist operations encourages the authorities to believe the order nearly suppressed, although the government promises of a constitution have been unfulfilled and the liberal and firm policy of Melikoff has been superseded by a repressive and reactionary ministry.

In connection with the societies which England seems at last to have by the throat, there is little of interest developed since the confession of Carey. The police have obtained information that the names of six men have already been enrolled to fill the gaps in the ranks of the "Irish Invincibles," made by the arrest of its members, and startling discoveries have been made in the quiet community of Rochdale, England, where the philanthropy of John Bright has established successful co-operative industries. Letters siezed at the lodgings of one John Walsh reveal the fact that 6,000 men are enrolled in the secret society he has been organizing in the North of England, and are amply provided with funds and revolvers. Lists of names of the chief members of the various secret societies and documents disclosing their extent were found. There was also correspondence with conspirators on the continent, and a photograph of the celebrated "No. 1" of the Dublin assassination band, establishing the identity of that character. Walsh was arrested at Havre, France, on the 1st inst. and his complieity with the Dublin conspirators is thought to be established. A man named Sheridan, connected with the Irish World of New York, has also been identified as one of the band, and his extradition has been asked by the British government.

Thus wide-spread, darkly undermining the foundations of peaceful society, bound by fierce oaths to do the bidding of unknown superiors, appear these secret orders, of which Lord Beaconsfield spoke with so deep a meaning. But is not the public too suspicious of these societies? Are they not simply "convivial" clubs, "benefit" societies, gatherings of honorable citizens for the private discussion of business or local politics? Are they, in fact, anything more dreadful than our excellent Masonic, Odd-fellow, Knights of Pythias, and other lodges? Let us see what the Dublin courts have revealed.

The men under arrest and on trial for their lives are thus sketched: One is a master builder of Dublin, an alderman of that city, ready to loan $500 at any time to the Dublin Brick-layers' Society to which he belonged. Once, when under arrest for suspected activity in favor of Irish republicanism, he was put for three weeks in solitary confinement because he let off a rocket from his cell on the anniversary of American independence. He is a temperate and shrewd business man. Another is a young and successful grocer, well educated by his own exertions and so well known and respected for honorable character that when arrested, under Mr. Foster's administration of Irish affairs, on suspicion, he was allowed bail in a nominal sum. Another grew up from the life of a waif, who, in inclement weather, was permitted by the kindness of an undertaker to sleep in a coffin, and came to be a respectable clerk. Another is a compositor; others are carpenters above the level of ordinary workmen; others are hackmen—none are known to be thieves or desperadoes. Such is the character of the Dublin prisoners—equals and superiors to the mass of lodge members in this country, whose honorable character is supposed to refute every objection against the orders.

These men, looked upon as honorable members of the Fenian society, were joined in a desperate plan to deliberately murder any and all whom their unknown superiors might command. Largely unknown to each other, they met by order and proceeded about their fearful work. One mild evening eight of them drove in two cabs to Phœnix Park, Dublin. One had with him his two little girls. Seven were posted in two bands by a frequented path and the eighth pointed out an approaching victim, who was unfortunately, accompanied by a friend. The two passed one band and were confronted by the other, and were enclosed amid gleaming daggers suddenly drawn. They made a brief, brave but ineffectual defense against the fierce thrusts of the assassins. They fell, and to make sure work the throat of one was cut. Wiping their knives upon the grass the conspirators fled in the waiting vehicles, and were undetected. Soon after, in obedience to another order, these honorable Fenians attacked a juryman and left him for dead. Soon after, as a judge of one of the courts was going home in the evening attended by a police guard, he was fiercely attacked by another of these esteemed citizens. Detectives barely escaped with their lives, and no officer of the British government dared appear in the Dublin streets without a guard. Such was the work the secret societies of Ireland attempted and accomplished. If the same results are not likely to follow when the same causes are in operation, let every freeman in America answer.

—Rev. C. H. Hobart, whose able and eloquent Thanksgiving discourse was printed in the Cynosure of Jan. 18th, is a young man, and pastor of the First Baptist church, Aurora. The association of Baptist churches to which he belongs includes such earnest and faithful men as Elder Freeman of Downer's Grove; Bro. F. M. Smith, a seceder, of Bristol; and Bro. E. W. Hicks of Shabbona, who frequently speaks clearly against the lodge evil in his monthly paper.

The following story is told of Joseph Cook: Meeting Prof. Park, of Andover, recently, the latter said to him "You went to school at Phillips Academy, and now you are more talked about than any of its teachers; you went to Yale, and you are more talked about than any of the Yale faculty; you came to our theological seminary, and you are more talked about than any of us; you lectured at Harvard, and are more talked about than any professor at Harvard." Cook replied calmly, "So was Guiteau!"

THE SITUATION.

By the munificence of Mr. Carpenter our work is in a position where it commands the respect of the best business men of Chicago, and can make its influence felt throughout the entire North and West, of which this is the acknowledged center of influences. The removal of the Cynosure to its own quarters and the changes made in its appearance, while maintaining its distinctive features, has been received as an omen of progress towards conquest and victory. Before "departing in peace to be forever with his Lord," Bro. Loomis by a timely bequest virtually established the anti-secrecy work in New England with a center at Worcester. His lead has been followed by others and the question pushed by the vigorous energies of Bro. Bailey and his well chosen helpers, until even conservative churches that sigh for "peace in our day" are compelled to at least take notice of the fact that the "waters are troubled." The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of a second struggle, with "spiritual and mighty weapons" to set the enslaved masses free from the bondage to the "Secret Empire" has been written. Bros. Leuty, Varney and many like minded, and liberal as the Lord has given them the stewardship of means, have kept the breath of life in our lecturers while they have gone every where "preaching the word," scattering tracts and casting the "leaven into the lump," until a point has been reached, where a standard must be set in the capital of our nation, or the prestige and power already gained be greatly impaired. The readers of the Cynosure have noted the situation, but a brief recapitulation with added facts will be of interest especially to those who have joined the ranks since last reports were submitted.

1. It is conceded by all so far as I have known that the location selected in Washington at 215, 4½ street, and less than three blocks from the Capitol is among the most desirable in the city for our use.

2. The men who have the ability and who are willing to aid the N. C. A in looking after its interest and taking care of its property are already on the ground, and at work with a will.

3. The property has been purchased for $6,875, and a warrantee deed executed to me by Vice Admiral Rowen, its former owner. The inside of the building was very much out of repair, and it will require from $600 to $700 to make the changes necessary and the repairs required. This work is being pushed and now approaches completion.

4. Two thousand dollars have been paid on the purchase, and my note given for the remainder at six per cent semi-annual interest, secured by an ordinary deed of trust on the premises.

5. Two gentlemen in Washington, who are thoroughly acquainted with the property and its relative value as compared with other property in the city, have offered to refund all money thus far expended and assume all future responsibilities as a business investment. So that I have no fear of loss. In my judgment it would be a great mistake to accept this offer and relinquish our hold at the capital, thus providentially placed within our reach as a safe business investment. Nor do I believe it would be sound business policy to pay $877.50 in semi-annual installments of interest. The only wise, sensible, Christian thing to be done in my judgment is to cancel the entire sum at once and and require of your agent a warrantee deed to the National Christian Association, which I am more than willing to execute the day my personal obligation to Vice-admiral Rowen is released.

6. President Blanchard, after visiting the premises and spending four days in the city interviewing several men of national reputation writes me in a private note, "No. 215, 4½ street, is destined at no distant date to be one of best known points in the city of Washington.

7. An old and honored citizen of the place who is competent, trusty and financially responsible for any pledge he gives has offered to take charge of our literature and open a Reform Tract and Book department, and if the Association deem it advisable to start a monthly there he will make accounts balance at the end of the year. You have already been introduced to our special Washington correspondent, and have your opinions of the ability, the grit and the grace of this accession to our corps of valued contributors.

8. There is no indication of a want of men or women who are willing to hazard the perils of this exposed position, for some dozen or fifteen have already applied for situations, some of whom would do very effective work, but I solemnly protest against burdening our funds with an additional tax so long as they must carry a $4,875.00 debt and make an annual payment of $292.50 interest.

9. When paid for, the premises would furnish accommodations equal to our present needs and bring in rents an income of $600 to $800 per year, while the advance in value of property along Pennsylvania Ave. in the vicinity would add every year to the invested funds of our movement. There are men who have already contributed liberally in our reform, who have not done all that they ought to do; of this they are the judges. Others have intimated a purpose to either donate or make provisions in their wills to help build the Lord's house over against the brazen walls of this modern Babylon. Brethren, would it not be well to act as your own executors and do at once and with your might what your hands find to do.

OBITUARY.

MOSES TAGGART.

Judge Moses Taggart, in the 84th year of his age, died at his home in Batavia, N. Y., on the 17th day of February, 1883.

The Batavia papers and his associates in the legal profession bear ample testimony to the high esteem in which he was held in his profession and in the community where he spent over sixty years of active business life; but the following touching and beautiful tribute to his amiable character and home influence reveals the man as he was, and will be read with interest by many who have never felt the pressure of his friendly grasp, or looked into his intelligent face:

His work is done, and none who knew him will presume to say that it was not well done, and now that "he rests from his labors his works do follow him."

J. P. S.

—The members of the Genessee county bar adopted the following tribute of respect and esteem at a full meeting Feb. 20:

"Death has again invaded our numbers and taken the father of this bar from among us. Like a shock of grain fully ripe he has gone to his reward, according to his often expressed wish, 'in the harness.'

"Moses Taggart, who died at Batavia, N. Y., on the 17th day of February, 1883, has left a name and record worthy of emulation and respect. He was the oldest member of the bar in Genesee county, and the oldest lawyer in active practice in western New York. For more than fifty years as Counselor, County Judge of Genesee county, Judge of the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals of this State, he was engaged in active professional life, and attained a front rank as a safe and wise counselor, and an honest and industrious judge; and in the legal reports are found the records of many important cases argued by him as counsel, or decided by him as judge. As a member of the convention of 1846, that framed the Constitution of the State, he took an active part in the debates and deliberations of that distinguished body, and succeeded in introducing reforms in the organic law that were liberal, practical and beneficial. Other places of honor bestowed upon him were worthily conferred and honestly and ably filled. As a citizen, with pronounced opinions of his own upon which he acted, he was always liberal in according to others the same right he claimed for himself, of thinking and acting upon their convictions. As a neighbor he was genial, kind and considerate, charitable and just."

The Home.

COMING HOME.

Like tired children, Lord, we come,
We turn our wandering footsteps home,
We scarce the narrow path can see;
Our strength is spent—we come to thee.

In busy life, with cares oppressed,
Longing and faint, we seek for rest,
And find it when, on bended knee,
For one brief hour, we come to Thee.

Slowly, with pain, we onward move;
Forsake us not, O Lord of Love!
The dawn is nigh! the shadows flee!
Father of Light! we come to Thee!

THE GREAT MOUNTAIN.

I do not shut my eyes to the obstacles with which the Gospel has to contend in China. I have spoken of of the opium traffic and of opium-smoking as constituting a gigantic barrier in the way of the evangelization of the Chinese. It is, however, only one of the many. There is the peculiar immobility of the Chinese as a people; their stolid conservatism; their intense reverence for antiquity and the teachings of the ancient sages; their extreme aversion to innovations of every kind; their national pride, and their supreme contempt for everything that is not of China and purely Chinese. The Chinese thank Heaven every day that they have been born in civilized China just as we thank God that we have been born in Christian England. This state of things is passing away: still it must be admitted that up to the present time it has constituted a main barrier to the introduction of any and every improvement.

There, again, is the paralyzed condition of the religious instinct in the Chinese mind. The absence of religious life and moral earnestness is a distinguishing characteristic of the nation as a nation. As a people they seem almost incapable of assimilating non-materialistic ideas. There does not appear to be any thing in their minds for religion to lay hold of. They have no thirsting for the spiritual, the heavenly and the divine; no longing for glory, immortality and eternal life. This feature in their character makes it difficult to draw their attention to the question of religion at all, and even when secured to make them feel that it is a matter of importance. It is not an easy task to regenerate a people so thoroughly materialistic and worldly as the Chinese are.

There, again, is the worship of deceased ancestors—the real religion of the Chinese. This is a gigantic obstacle to the progress of the Gospel in China. And there, again, is the vastness of the field, the immensity of the population, and a national life which has its roots down deep in millenniums gone by. We must not think of those hundreds of millions as so many units; but as welded together into one mighty nation, and bound by language, custom, education, religion and government. It is not the work of a day to move that mighty people; and a wise man will not expect to see great changes taking place in their moral, religious and social life, without many years of hard work and earnest crying to God.

These obstacles, and others such as these, rise up sometimes before my eyes like huge rocks, whose foundations are buried in the fathomless deep below, and whose summits are lost in impenetrable clouds above. How to scale them, I know not. How to compass them I know not. How to penetrate them I know not. But I do know that our Almighty Redeemer has said, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you." I believe that; and, believing that, I feel that I can return to China, and face the gigantic barriers, and say, "Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain; and he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it!"

TEN THOUSAND PER CENT.

Mr. Johnson dropped into the office of his friend Mr. Brown in a mood decidedly blue, occasioned by a business investment which had proved a failure. It was a little after business hours, but Mr. Brown was still in his office and alone. He laid down his pen, and greeted his friend with a familiar nod and cheerful, "How are you, Johnson?"

"Sour as an east wind," was the response, as he looked at the beaming countenance of his friend, whom he had known for many a year, and whose counsel he had sought many a time, and scarcely ever had been disappointed.

There appeared to be a little more than the usual brightness in Mr. Brown's face as he wheeled his chair around and bid his friend be seated in another. Mr. Johnson noticed it, and said: "What are you up to, Brown? Had a streak of luck, eh?"

"Oh, no, Johnson," he replied, "nothing unusual or new in particular. I was only thinking of a little investment I am just about making."

"I thought so," said Johnson; "and a good one, I'll be bound."

"I think so," was the reply. "What would you say to ten thousand per cent.?"

"Ten thousand per cent.! You are raving."

"Not a bit of it," said Brown. "And the very best of security—a regular royal pledge."

"Now I know you are crazy. Who ever heard of such a thing?"

"Crazy? Not a bit of it," said Mr. Brown, and he added: "This," wheeling around and laying his hand upon a paper on his desk, "is a cheque which I have just signed, and intend for a poor Western missionary whom I know, and have just heard is sick and in much need. The Scriptures say that, 'He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord.' But I was never awakened to the fact of what interest he pays until yesterday, when our preacher startled me by saying he had promised ten thousand per cent. I pricked up my ears at the statement, and waited curiously to hear the proof; and there it was, sure enough, in Matt. 19: 29: 'And every one that hath left houses, or brethren or sisters, or father or mother, or children, or lands for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred-fold and inherit eternal life.' I was struck at the sound of ten thousand per cent., but I figured it out, and found it correct. The preacher was very much in earnest as he declared the Lord's dividend. He was as enthusiastic as a stock-broker, only in an infinitely more noble cause. I was very much impressed at the time with the thought, and, in fact, have been ever since. It was in my mind when you came in. Not that I can lay claim for a moment to the spirit of self-sacrifice which the text quoted indicates, but my gift to the poor is a loan to the Lord, and I am not afraid but that I shall reap a good dividend."

"You take a worldly-wise view of the matter, don't you?" inquired Mr. Johnson.

"Perhaps I do; but it will bear it, although it is only one view of—" Here the office door opened, and the conversation was at an end; but Mr. Johnson went on his way comparing his own unlucky investment with the small one of Mr. Brown's, which had yielded so large a return in solid pleasure, and who could tell what per cent. was laid up for him in the Lord's treasury.—Sel.

A TOUCHING STORY OF A CITY'S CHARITIES.

Three or four years ago a poor school-master in Denmark, finding that life grew more bare and hopeless with every year, gathered up his wife and four children and came to this country in the faith, which he shared with all Europe, that here, if anywhere, the rainbow rests, and under it is the pot of gold for all the world. Our Dane was a good dull soul, with a profound belief in the half dozen text-books which he had taught for years, and in Jan, his oldest boy. Knowledge would bring money in America, and Jan was so clever? If he hoped to see the boy a great man, he was only as foolish as all other fathers. His wife was a notable housewife and could make a coarse kind of lace, for which doubtless, the Americans would pay well. Success was sure.

Krupp and his family landed in this city, and in a month found that with high prices and enforced idleness their little store of money was gone. Nobody in New York wanted their lace or their learning. Krupp had learned the trade of basket-weaving in his youth; he went back to it, and during that winter his wife and Jan haunted the ferries with their store of cheap mats and baskets, their sad, simple faces contrasting oddly with the shrewd, eager crowd that swept past them. In the spring Krupp's eyes began to burn at night. Then he could not see the willow splints clearly; before June came he was in total darkness. Jan, who was the chief hope of the family, because he had already learned some of the language and the prompt quick ways of the Americans, was kicked by a horse in Cortlandt street, one day, and hurt internally. He was carried home to his mother. They were in a garret then, near the wharves; it had only one window, but that looked out on the rushing water and on the ships sailing out to the ocean and back to Denmark. His mother put the boy in her own bed (the bed she had brought with her from home), bandaged him as best she could, and leaving his father with him, went out to sell the few mats that were left; for she had not a mouthful of food to give him. When she was on the street she cried; but she never shed a tear before Jan. She was a quiet, patient soul. After that the current of life with this family ran as it does with tens of thousands of such people in this city, steadily downward. The mats were all sold, then the poor little belongings they had brought from Denmark; last of all the bed on which Jan lay. They left the garret and with another family found shelter in a cellar where the green mould was thick on the walls. The schoolmaster went out sometimes and stood at the corner of the street with his hand held out; but few pennies dropped into it. There are so many blind beggars in New York! and the popular theory is that they are all imposters. Nobody could guess the bitterness and pride in the poor old man's soul. What if some of his old pupils should pass by and know that Herr Krupp was begging! When he thought of Jan at home, however, that did not seem to matter—nothing mattered any more! Jan lay swollen and helpless on a bundle of straw on the cellar floor. The baby and the other child were playing in the gutter outside, their mother was out all day washing, begging, picking cinders out of the ash barrels. She had no pride nor thought except to keep them alive. Many a night after a long day's work she would sit holding Jan in her arms till morning, that he might have a soft resting place for a little while.

Neither Krupp nor his wife could speak English, and did not know there was any help for them outside of their own efforts. At last a good angel came in the shape of a policeman or the corner grocer (God knows his own messengers, and few of them wear his livery). A few words spoken in the right quarter and the thing was done. Krupp and Jan were taken away in different directions. In a day or two his wife was allowed to see the schoolmaster, and found him in a dark, airy, comfortable room, well clothed and fed, he declared, "like the King." He had one of the best oculists in the city as his attendant, who discovered that the affection of his eyes was curable. He remained in the hospital until it was cured, and he went out into the world a man able for work. His mother found Jan in another large, beautiful house, where every comfort and appliance were present which money, science or tenderest care could give help. Perhaps the poor woman thought most of the soft white bed on which he lay, and the gentle, low-voiced woman in nurse's dress who was skillfully dressing his hurts. That touched the mother's heart. She went directly to her husband, and crying with joy told him Jan was coming back to them a big, strong boy. Her friends showed her where to place the two babies in a day nursery where they were cared for while she was at work earning money for them all. She earned little, but it was enough to carry the family down to a village in New Jersey, where they are living now comfortably and happy.

This is a pitiable story. But there is not one of the thousands of helpless men and women and little children in our hospitals to-day who have not as pathetic a story, could we but know it. There they are—lame, blind, diseased, incurables, depending on our charity to give them a chance for health and life. Shall we give it to them?—N. Y. Tribune.

JOHN PLOUGHMAN'S TALKS.

Self is always at home.
Water plants before they wither.
Soft words scald not the mouth.
Sunday is the summer of the week.
One tale is good till another is told.
Care makes a man old before his time.
That which covers thee discovers thee.
Mind the corner where life's road turns.
Christ saves sinners from being sinners.
Don't ask a great plaster for a small sore.
If you sow thorns, you will not reap roses.
Down with the nests, and the rooks will go.
Good stuff is often twisted into queer shapes.
Don't spare the butcher, and fee the doctor.
Have no friends you dare not bring home.
One man's fault should be another man's lesson.
Flowers smell sweet whether men are near or not.
He who gives before we ask, will give when we ask.
When prayers are strongest, mercies are nearest.
The goodness of news half lies in the hearer's ears.
It's no use mending the tank, when the water is gone.
Stand on your head, and the world will be upside down.

I have a pledge from Christ, have his note of hand, which is my support, my refuge, and heaven: and though the world should rage, to this security I cling. How reads it? "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." If Christ be with me, what shall I fear? If he is mine, all the powers of the earth to me are nothing more than the spider's web.—St. Chrysostom.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MAKE YOUR MOTHER HAPPY.

Children, make your mother happy;
Make her sing instead of sigh,
For the mournful hour of parting
May be very, very nigh.

Children, make your mother happy;
Many griefs she has to bear:
And she wearies 'neath her burdens,
Can you not these burdens share?

Children, make your mother happy:
Prompt obedience cheers the heart:
While a wilful disobedience
Pierces like a poisoned dart.

Children, make your mother happy;
On her brow the lines of care
Deepen daily, don't you see them?
While your own are smooth and fair.

Children, make your mother happy;
For beneath the coffin-lid,
All too soon her face so saint-like,
Shall forevermore be hid.

DIDN'T THINK.

Opening the door of a friend's house one day, I made my way through the entry to a small back court, where Ned, the only son, was crying bitterly.

"Ah, Ned, what is the matter?"

"Mother won't let me go fishing. Harry and Tom are going to the harbor, and I want to go." Here Ned kicked his toes angrily against the post to the great danger of his new boots.

"Whose little dog is this?" I asked, as a brown spaniel came bounding up the garden walk.

"It is mine," cried Ned, in altered tone. "Didn't you know I had one?"

No, indeed. What a fine fellow. Where did you get him, Ned?"

"Father bought him for me. He is so knowing, and I teach him many things. See him find my knife;" and Ned, wiping away his tears, threw his knife into the clover. "There Wag," said he, "now go and find my knife." Wag plunged into the grass, and after a great deal of smelling and wagging, he came triumphantly forth, and brought the knife to his young master.

"Give it to him," said Ned, pointing to me; and Wag laid it at my feet.

"This is a knife worth having," said I; "four blades."

"'Tis a real good one," said Ned; "father gave it to me on my birthday; and he gave me a splendid box of tools, too." Ned looked up brightly, and quite forgot his crying.

"Let me think," said I. "Was it this knife that you hurt your foot so with?"

Oh, no," cried Ned, "that was done with the axe; but I've got well now."

"I was afraid you would be laid up all the Spring."

"Well, it was mother's nursing, the doctor says. Mother and father took great care of me. It was lonely staying in the house so; but mother used to leave work and read to me, and father often stayed with me."

"I should think you had very kind parents, Ned." The boy looked down on the floor, and a slight pout puckered his lips. "I suppose there are none who have your interest and happiness so much at heart."

"But I want to go fishing," muttered Ned.

"And can't you trust them, Ned, and willingly agree to their wishes? You may not know the reason why they object to your going; but, from all your experience of their kindness and wisdom, are you not sure that they would not cross your wishes without good reason for doing so? And, surrounded as you are by so many proofs of their love, will you sit there and murmur and cry, and fill your heart with angry and stubborn thoughts, because of one little denial of your wants? Is not this a poor and ungrateful return for their kindness? It is little enough that a child can do for a parent, and that little he ought to do most cheerfully. I suppose the best return a child can make to parents is a cheerful obedience. How small that seems! And will you grudge giving that, Ned?"

Ned looked sober. Tears started in his eyes. "Oh, sir," said he, humbly, "I didn't think of all this—I didn't think of it."

"Didn't think" is at the bottom of a great deal of our ingratitude and murmuring against both our earthly parents and our Father who is in heaven.—Children's Friend.

IRON SHOD.

The safety of the mountain climber depends upon being well shod; therefore the Swiss guides wear heavy shoes with sharp spikes in the soles. On a bright July morning a famous man of science started with two gentlemen to ascend Pitz Morterasch, a steep and lofty snow mountain in Switzerland. Though experienced mountaineers they took with them Senni, the boldest guide in that district. After reaching the summit of Morterasch they started back and soon arrived at a steep slope covered with a thin snow. They were lashed together with a strong rope which was tied to each man's waist.

"Keep carefully in my steps, gentlemen," said Senni, "for a false step here might start the snow and send us down in an avalanche."

He had hardly spoken when the whole field of ice began to slide down the icy mountain side, carrying the unlucky climbers with it at a terrible pace. A steeper slope was before them, and at the end of it was a precipice. The three foremost men were almost buried in the whirling snow. Below them were the jaws of death. Everything depended on getting a foothold.

Senni shouted loudly, "Halt! halt!" and with desperate energy drove his iron-nailed boots into the firm ice beneath the snow. Within a few rods of the precipice Senni got a hold with his feet and was able to bring the party all up standing, when two seconds more would have swept them into the chasm.

The hair-breadth escape shows the value of being well shod when in dangerous places. The lesson is especially needed by the young. No boy is well prepared for rough climbing unless he is well shod with Christian principles. Sometimes temptation ices the track under him, and then he must plant his foot down with an iron heel or he is gone.

A poor boy of my acquaintance signed a pledge never to taste liquor. One day his rich employer invited him to dinner. There was wine on the table, but the lad was not ashamed to say:

"No, I thank you, sir; I never touch it."

Then came on a rich pudding, which the boy tasted and found there was brandy in it; so he quickly laid the tasted morsel back on his plate. The employer discovered that the boy had "pluck" enough to stand by his convictions, and he will never be afraid to trust him. He is a sure-footed boy.

God knows what steep places lie before us. He has provided the "shoes of iron and brass" for us to put on. They are truth and honesty and faith and courage and prayer. A clear conscience will keep the head cool. And up along the hard road there is a sign-board, on which is written in large bright letters, "He that walketh uprightly walketh surely."—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

TO POOR BOYS.

Never sit down despairingly and say, "It is impossible for me to rise in the world. I am only a poor boy; there is no chance for me."

Why, it is just such as you who have risen highest and become men whose names are known throughout the world, who thoroughly understood at the outset that their fortunes were in their own hands, and that hope and energy and effort were better than all the family influence in the world. Inherited wealth seems to be actually enervating. Talents too often lie disused in the hands of rich men's sons. What need of striving? they think; competence is theirs; and often such men squander the fortunes they have not earned, and lives that began in luxury end in beggary. "No living soul will ever give me a penny," seems to be about as wholesome a prophecy as a boy can read in the book of fate. Despair because you are poor! Why, that is the very reason that should bid you hope. The biographies of most great men, of most successful men will tell you that, if you but read them.

TRIPLET MAXIMS.

Three things to do—think, live and act.

Three things to govern—your temper, tongue and conduct.

Three things to cherish—virtue, wisdom and goodness.

Three things to love—courage, gentleness and affection.

Three things to contend for—honor, country and friends.

Three things to hate—cruelty, arrogance and ingratitude.

Three things to teach—truth, industry and contentment.

Three things to admire—intellect, dignity and gracefulness.

Three things to like—cordiality, goodness and cheerfulness.—Selected.

Said the Rev. Dr. Brown, at a revival meeting in Glasgow; "There is great need that bad men should be made good, and good men better. Yet if I had the choice of the two blessings, that a thousand persons should be converted to the low level of our ordinary piety, or that a thousand saints should be quickened to apostolic fervor and activity, I do not know but that, in the wide, comprehensive view, I should prefer the latter, because every one of these revived saints would be a centre of holy influence and holy life."

TEMPERANCE.

ANOTHER COUNTERBLAST.

A POISONOUS WEED.

Thomas B. Stillman of New York, a practical chemist quotes the following as a group of established scientific facts:

In a report to the Medico-Chirurgical Society of Liege by Dr. Lebon, the following conclusions are presented:

1. For every 100 grains of tobacco used, at least one tenth of a grain of nicotine is absorbed.

2. The diurnal quantity of tobacco consumed by an ordinary smoker is about 300 grains.

3. The effects of tobacco smoke are the same as those following the administration of nicotine.

4. The resinous liquid which condenses in a pipe is almost as poisonous as pure nicotine, and destroys the lives of animals rapidly.

5. The liquid condensed from the smoke in the mouth and lungs contains ammonia, nicotine, fats, resins and coloring matters. One drop of this speedily produces paralysis and death in young animals.

6. In men, small doses of tobacco smoke excite the intellectual faculties; repeated doses produce palpitations, disordered vision and decrease of memory.

Add to the above the following from the Daily Tribune of May 31, 1882:

Dr. Willard Parker, Jr., of No. 41 East Twelfth street sent a certificate to the Bureau of Vital Statistics yesterday stating that James J. Sullivan had died at No. 110 Henry street from "poisoning of the system by tobacco." Sullivan was only 26 years old. He had been employed as a book-keeper, and he had used tobacco so constantly that his system had become impregnated with nicotine.

We expect that many will sneer at these facts and light a fresh cigar to quiet the touch of nervousness which will involuntarily come to them, while for a moment they fear that "there is something in it." It is indeed a sad fact that this growing evil must strew its pathway with physical death before men will heed the facts, and science, and the pleadings of reform

POISONOUS TOBACCO SMOKE.

A series of experiments have been recently conducted by Herr Hissling of Bremen with a view of ascertaining the proportions of nicotine and other poisonous substances in the smoke of cigars. His paper in Dingler's Polytechnisches Journal gives a useful resume of the work of previous observers. He specifies as strongly poisonous constituents, carbonic oxide, sulphuretted hydrogen, prussic acid, picoline bases and nicotine. The first three occur however, in such small proportion, and their volatility is so great, that their share in the action of tobacco smoke on the system may be neglected. The picoline bases too are present in comparatively small quantities, so that the poisonous character of smoke may be almost exclusively attributed to the large proportion of nicotine present. The proportion of nicotine in the smoke depends, of course, essentially on the kind of tobacco; but the relative amount of nicotine which passes from a cigar into smoke depends chiefly on how far the cigar has been smoked, as the nicotine contents of the unsmoked part of a cigar is in inverse ratio to the size of this part; i. e., more nicotine the shorter the part. Evidently in a burning cigar the slowly advancing zone of glow drives before it the distillable matter, so that in the yet unburnt portion a constant accumulation of these take place. It would appear that in the case of cigars that are poor in nicotine more of this substance passes into smoke than in case of cigars with much nicotine; also that nicotine, notwithstanding its big boiling point, has remarkable volatility.

THE POET COLERIDGE AND TOBACCO.

On returning baffled from the first, in which I had vainly essayed to repeat the miracles of Orpheus with the Brummagem patriot, I dined with the tradesman who had introduced me to him. After dinner he importuned me to smoke a pipe with him and two or three illuminati of the same rank. I objected, both because I was engaged to spend the evening with the minister and his friends, and because I had never smoked except once or twice in my life time, and then it was herb tobacco mixed with Oronooko. On the assurance, however, that the tobacco was equally mild, and seeing, too, that it was of a yellow color (not forgetting the lamentable difficulty I have always experienced in saying no, and in abstaining from from what the people around me were doing), I took half a pipe, filling the lower part of the bowl with salt. I was soon, however, compelled to resign it, in consequence of a giddiness and distressful feeling in my eyes, which, as I had drank but a single glass of ale, must, I knew, have been the effect of the tobacco. Soon, after, deeming myself recovered, I sallied forth to my engagement, but the walk and the fresh air brought on all the symptoms again and I had scarcely entered the minister's drawing-room and opened a small packet of letters which he had received from Bristol for me, ere I sunk back on the sofa in a sort of swoon rather than sleep. Fortunately I had found just time enough to inform him of the confused state of my feelings and of the occasion. For here and thus I lay, my face like a wall that is white washing, deathly pale, and with the cold drops of perspiration running down it from my forehead, while one after another there dropped in the different gentlemen who had been invited to meet and spend the evening with me, to the number of from fifteen to twenty. As the poison of tobacco act but for a short time I at length awoke from insensibility and looked around on the party, my eyes dazzled by the candles which had been lighted in the interim.

American Politics.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with book, of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE VOTERS' REGISTER.

I heartily endorse this work. I vote for none but true Americans. We cast 23 ballots at the fall election, and expect to do better next time.—J. W. Modlin, Albion, Iowa.

I will vote for no one for office whom I know to be a Freemason. I have voted the American ticket, and shall again if I live, and no other.—M. Woodward, Adams Center, N. Y.

I am 86 years old and in good health, and hope I shall live two years more so that I can vote for your platform, for I like it extremely well.—James Barnes, Sr., Strawberry Point, Iowa.

AS THE LODGE-WIND BLOWS,

SO THE ELECTION GOES.

That the lodge has veered in favor of Sovereign Grand Inspector General Butler appears to us very evident, and that he, with Jefferson Davis for Vice-President, may be the Masonic candidate for the Presidency next year, is far within the limits of probability. This would be a graceful Masonic completion to the late unpleasantness between the two lodges, the Northern lodge and the Kuklux lodge. The two ends of the divergent line between them would be brought together in one ring, and fastened with the double clasp of Butler and Davis. Then would Masonic righteousness and peace kiss each other, and Masons be happy.

The farmers of the country must be prepared for this event. They may, perhaps, be persuaded by the lodge that the man who has done more than any one else to run up the tariff, is the best one to run it down. The one who has encouraged extravagant expenditures will be the best man to economize. Such is lodge rhetoric—to say one thing and do another.

But in all sober sadness, what can farmers ever expect from secret society men? I can understand how men should become infatuated after liquor; but how men in their senses can trust ring-men who resort to secret arts and practices, when men who act openly can hardly be trusted, is more than I can understand.

A CONSPIRACY AGAINST GOOD GOVERNMENT.

I quote the following from an able editorial in the Albany Evening Journal Extra, October 27, 1831: "An addition was made to the Master's oath, in the northern part of this State, a few years since, by Gov. Pitcher, who introduced it from Vermont. It was to the effect that, in voting for officers, a preference should be given to a Mason over another candidate of equal qualifications. Very respectable testimony of the fact was published very generally in the newspapers, about two years since, and has never, to the knowledge of the writer, been contradicted or questioned. It is admitted that this obligation, in terms, has not generally been administered (that is, in a Master's lodge), but it is insisted that if the principle be once admitted that men in our country may band together in secret conclave, for any purpose not known to the laws, and may bind themselves under obligations involving the penalty of death for their transgressions, they may as well pledge themselves to any new object, or purpose, as to those for which they have already associated. There is no limit to the extent of such associations, if they are allowed at all. The principle itself is radically wrong. But independent of any positive obligation, the very creation of such artificial ties of brotherhood, the strength which they acquire by frequent repetition and by the associations of the fraternity, necessarily produce a clannish attachment which will ordinarily exhibit itself in the most important concerns of life in bestowing business and patronage on a brother, and in elevating him to office and rank which will reflect back honor upon the order to which he belongs. The inevitable result, therefore, of such institutions is to give one class of citizens unequal and unjust advantages over those who are not of the favored order. And when we find this natural result hastened and strengthened by obligations, under the most awful penalties, to fly to the relief of a brother, to espouse his cause, whether right or wrong, and to conceal his crimes, have not the rest of the community a right to say to these exclusives, these privileged orders, 'we will not submit to your usurpations, and until you restore your fellow-citizens to equal rights and privileges with you, we will not give you our votes or trust you with public office.' To these remarks I fully subscribe. But I return to another clause of this oath. The candidate proceeds: 'Furthermore do I promise and swear, that a companion Royal Arch Mason's secrets, given me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, murder and treason not excepted.' Bernard says, in a foot-note: 'In some chapters this is administered, 'All the secrets of a companion, without exception.' Upon this clause I remark:

"1. That Freemasonry waxes worse and worse as you ascend from the lower to the higher degrees. It will be remembered that in the Master's oath murder and treason were excepted in the oath of secrecy. In this degree murder and treason are not excepted. Now, as all Masons who take the degrees above this have also taken this oath, it follows that all that army of Freemasons, composed of Royal Arch Masons, and all who have taken the degrees above this, are under the most solemn oath to conceal each other's crimes, without exception. And what an institution is this, to be allowed existence under any government, especially under a republican form of government? Is it safe to have such a set of men scattered broadcast over all the United States? Let us look this thing squarely in the face. It cannot be honestly denied that Royal Arch Masons take this oath. But a short time since a minister of the Gospel of my acquaintance was confronted with this oath, and he did not deny having taken it. Now, if all that vast army of Masons who have taken this oath intend to do as they swear to do, what must be the result? Scores and hundreds of thousands of men, scattered broadcast over the whole land, are pledged by the most solemn oath, and under the penalty of death, to conceal each other's crimes, without exception. Are such men to be safely intrusted with office, either in church or State? And must not a government be on the verge of ruin when such a conspiracy is allowed to multiply its numbers at such a frightful rate as it is doing, at this time, in this country? Will the people of the United States have the foolhardiness to ignore the crime and danger of this conspiracy against their liberty? Or will they good-naturedly assume that Freemasons mean no such thing? Why, then, is this oath? Will they, under the cover of mock charity, assume that these men will not cover up each other's crimes? What kind of charity is this? Is it charity to believe that a set of men will lie under oath, as all Freemasons above the degree of Fellow Craft must do, if they do not conceal each other's crimes? Again, what right have Freemasons, themselves, to complain of a want of charity in those who regard them as conspirators against good government? Why, what shall we do? If they do not repent of, and renounce, these oaths, we must either regard them as conspirators against government, or as men who will lie, under the solemnity of a most awful oath. The gentlemen must choose which horn of the dilemma they will take. On the one hand, they are sworn conspirators against the execution of the criminal laws; on the other, they are a class of men that do not regard the solemnity of an oath. This is the exact truth, and it is folly and madness to ignore it. Freemasons, therefore, have no right to complain of us, if we take them at their word, and believe that they mean to do what they have sworn they will do. They demand charity of us. Is it not charitable to believe that they intend to fulfill such solemn vows, made, and often repeated, under such terrible sanctions?"—Pres. C. G. Finney.

The man in Massachusetts who does not vote with whichever party he pleases in our opinion is a dunce, and does not realize the value of his vote, and is without manhood enough to assert his right; and no secret ballot will put him on any better footing than that which he now occupies.—Lowell Mail.

The Churches.

—Secretary Stoddard preached in the Baptist church at Wolcottville, Ind., on the Sabbath.

—Isaac Kretzinger of Decatur, Ill., an aged United Brethren minister who has given largely of his private funds for Westfield College, has taken the field as agent for the institution. He is a faithful man and a terror to the enemies of God in the lodge or out of it.

—Bishop E. B. Kephart, of the United Brethren Southwest district, reports a larger attendance at Hartsville University, Ind., than for some years previously.

—The American Missionary Association has made a grant of £2,000 (nearly $10,000) to the United Brethren Missionary Society, for the purpose of building a steamer for use on the west coast of Africa.

—The United Presbyterian says of the Egyptian mission of the church it represents: "It has never before been so promising. To read of Arabi Pasha committing his child to the care of our missionaries for education as he departed into exile, sounds like romance, but is a pleasant and interesting fact."

—The missionaries of the United Presbyterian church in India, composing the presbytery of Sialkot, at a late meeting adopted some important changes in the conduct of their ecclesiastical work. Seven permanent committees were appointed, with powers and duties analogous to the Boards of the American church. These are termed respectively, Evangelization, Publication, Education, Church Erection, Sabbath-schools, Christian Beneficence, and Statistics. Each committee consists of three persons, excepting Evangelization and Education, which comprise five each. An important paper was also adopted providing for the division of the field into districts for missionary superintendence, for the grouping of churches in pastoral charges, for the limitation of a session's or a superintendent's jurisdiction.

—Every open port in China is occupied as the headquarters of some mission, except Hoi-how, on the large and populous island of Hainan, and Pak-hoi, on the mainland at the western extremity of the province of Kwang-lung. The Church Missionary Society of England have arranged to open work at both these points.

—The revival meetings were continued in the College church, Wheaton, through last week with the aid of Bro. C. F. Hawley. A number of young people have manifested a change of heart amid the rejoicing of many friends.

—At the same time a precious work of grace is being experienced in the Wesleyan church of Wheaton under the pastoral labors of Prof. L. N. Stratton, assisted by the conference evangelist, Bro. G. P. Riley, who came to hold the quarterly meeting on the 25th ult., and has remained to forward the work of salvation.

—In the way of church extension in this country, it is stated that the Baptists have a church building fund of $250,000, and have erected 213 houses of worship; the American Congregational Union has a fund of $912,000; the Presbyterian Board of Church Erection has disbursed $1,035,000, and built 1,721 houses of worship, and the Methodists have erected 2,683. The Protestant Episcopal Church proposes to raise $1,000,000 as a church building fund.

—Mr. Ronayne will visit Iowa this week and will preach in Montrose next Lord's day, and during the following week. He then expects to visit Birmingham.

BRO. STARRY IN A HORNET'S NEST.

Hamline M. E. church is named after that good man, the late Bishop Hamline, who, in his day, withstood the lodge in the midst of a lodge-ridden people.

Bro. Starry attended the "Holiness" meeting of this church last evening, and gave his experience, the last part of which, his deliverance from Freemasonry, didn't seem to suit all the brethren. The pastor who led the meeting essayed to say, after Bro. Starry had spoken, that it was "a good experience," but told him in the church vestibule that he was "a perjured villain." A "young convert" shook his fist in Bro. Starry's face and called him "a liar." Of course other lodge devotees got nervous over the affair, especially as Bro. Starry freely distributed his "first degree" hand-bill, with appropriate cut, among them. Bro. Starry stood firm, answered them well, and glorified the Lord.

This is conceded to be the most spiritual of the Methodist churches in Washington, and the writer, who was connected with it for years, believes that it is really in a fairer condition than the others. (The Lord save the others!) There is an honest leaven in it, composed of those who measurably seek to be true to God, but who, of course, are "pressed down." The writer suffered persecution among this people, for righteousness' sake, discerning an evil spirit of hindrance, and now rejoices that one of the fraternity, of whose ways and principles he then knew but little, has been saved of God and sent to boldly confront that very evil spirit which grieved him so sorely.

It is but just to say that some of the members encouraged Bro. S., bidding him "God speed." The Lord willing, he works the "Entered Apprentice" degree in a hall this evening.

ILLUSTRATIVE NOTES.

"They were cut to the heart and they gnashed on him with their teeth." The Word of God proved in this case "sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit." But its hearers did not make the right use of its convictions. When the truth is brought thus plainly home to the individual conscience it is quite likely to awaken a tempest in the soul. There will be an awakening of wrath either against the person who has spoken the truth or the sins against which it was spoken. Let those who are offended by plain preaching consider whether the Spirit is not speaking to them as Stephen did to his hearers, "Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye."

"Being full of the Holy Ghost." Many sincere Christians are all their lifetime subject to bondage through fear of death. They are perplexed because they cannot now feel a readiness and willingness to depart. But our great concern should be, not are we ready to die, but are we ready to live? If we are living lives of faith upon the Son of God he will care for us in the dying hour. He will give dying grace when it is needed, but not till then.

"Saw Jesus standing." He is unusually represented as "sitting" on the right hand of God. There is, therefore, something very expressive in this single departure from the usual form of expression. "Standing" denotes his great watchfulness and readiness for activity in times of the church's persecutions. It denotes especially his readiness to welcome those who suffer for his cause.

"The Son of man standing on the right hand of God." We cannot to vividly realize that our glorified King still lives in our own nature. The greatest possible honor was conferred upon our world when the feet of an incarnate God trod its soil; and the greatest possible blessing was conferred upon man when he came down to the very midst of men and walked side by side with them; so the highest possible honor was conferred upon our race when the God-man was exalted to the throne of the Highest. Will it not be by virtue of this exaltation and believers' union to him that they will finally be made higher than the angels?

"They stopped their ears." Yet if they had allowed him to proceed they would soon have heard the good news of pardon proclaimed, even to them, through the blood of the crucified. They stop their ears upon that royal proclamation. Prisoners stop their ears upon the very message, and the only message which can give them hope. So do all who refuse to receive the Word into their hearts. Many allow their hearts to become so filled with thoughts of the world, with planning how they may minister to present desires that they will not hear the Gospel. The Jews were angry because Stephen had foretold the cessation of their long-cherished ritual. Too often we become angry because the Gospel lifts a voice against our long-cherished sins. Our excuse, if we are thus deaf to the Gospel, will be less than that of Stephen's murderers, for we have a fuller and clearer revelation.

"Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Who can question that the same mind was in Stephen that was in his master, Christ Jesus? His words carry us back at once to the time when Roman soldiers were driving the nails through Jesus' hands and feet, and when he cried, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." It was the same principle working in both hearts; in the disciple's case the principle being received from the Master, the source of all life and love. By the sight of heavenly glories our Lord prepared Stephen, not only to endure his own trials, but also to forgive those who were wronging him. Thoughts of the glorious heavenly inheritance should beget feelings of tenderest compassion for those who "stop their ears" against the Gospel, even though in their rage they persecute us.

"He fell asleep." This may seem a fitting metaphor by which to speak of the aged saint who, after life's long day of trials and labor lies down at evening-tide in the midst of loving friends and dies. But can we say that Stephen's death in the midst of this storm of fury and rage can be fitly compared to a sleep? The fact that a furious storm is raging without makes my safe entrance inty my home and my rest within its protecting walls all the sweeter. Who has not thanked God for shelter as he lay upon an easy couch and listened to the raging of a storm without? But Stephen had every assurance that he was now to be received into rest, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest;" where "nothing hurts nor destroys in God's holy mountain." The storm at sunset is no evidence that the sun shall not rise next morning in the midst of a clear sky. So can the Christian rest assured that, though it may be stormy in the evening of life, there will be a glorious and undisturbed rising in the morning of the resurrection. It was this thought that sustained Algernon Sidney on his way to the beheading block, and enabled him, after he had lain his head upon that block, and when the executioner asked him if he would rise again, to calmly reply, "Not until the resurrection. Strike on."

"Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word." Again God maketh the wrath of man to praise him. The fierce wind of persecution is allowed to blow against the kindling flame, but instead of putting it out it only makes it blaze the hotter. Or to change the figure, the wind carries the seeds of truth broadcast over the land, and soon there will be a rich harvest of souls in other portions of the world. The martyrdom of Stephen marked a new era in the progress of the Gospel. Not only were Christians scattered, but their faith in the power of their new religion must have been greatly increased. As saintly Rutherford once said, "Grace tried is more than grace; it is glory itself." But in the noble, Christ-like bearing of the first martyr the Christians themselves saw faith put to the severest test. And they saw how it came out of the furnace like the purest gold which has been tried.—The U. P. Bible Teacher.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

What other Scripture have we for proof that Jesus is at the right hand of God? What passage shows the power which he exercises there? Until what time is he to remain there before his again coming to earth? Until when is he to exercise dominion over all things? What is said in the Old Testament about consenting with those who plot the death of the innocent? How far did they who were scattered abroad by the persecution about Stephen travel abroad preaching the word? and what passage shows it?—The Scholar's Quarterly.

A PROMISE.

The time has expired in which we promised four numbers of the Cynosure for 10 cts., to Trial Subscribers. Several hundred have availed themselves of this opportunity and we are hoping to receive a sufficient increase in the list of annual subscriptions to justify the trial.

So many have written favorably that after consultation we have determined to extend the offer until the 22nd inst. We do this to give others an opportunity to get acquainted with our work, and especially with the Washington department. If yearly subscriptions received from Trial Subscribers should be sufficient to justify a further extension we shall be glad to extend the offer beyond the 22nd inst., otherwise we shall be compelled to close with that number. It is not for us but for you, friends, to say when this offer shall cease, by sending in subscribers—either your own or your neighbors.

Orders for books in the general trade are beginning to come in for which we are obliged. If you are going to order any thing published or sold in the trade of this city, please give us an opportunity to serve you and we will do our best to make it satisfactory and to you interest to order all books, tracts etc., from Head-quarters at 221 W. Madison St.

ONLY CATARRH!

Many thousands fully believe they or their friends are being hurried toward the grave by that terrible disease Consumption, and are being treated for that disease when they have only CATARRH in some of its many forms. We do not claim to cure Consumption, but fully believe from the results of our daily practice that we can save many who feel their case hopeless.

More Than 100,000 Die Every Year.

More than 100,000 die annually from Consumption in these United States, and a careful classification has revealed the startling fact that fully 50,000 of these cases were caused by Catarrh in the head, and had no known connection with hereditary causes. A large share of these cases might have been cured.

Danger Signals

Have you a cold in the head that does not get better? Have you an excessive secretion of mucus or matter in the nasal passages, which must either be blown from the nose, or drop back behind the palate, or hawked or snuffed backward to the throat? Are you troubled by hawking, spitting, weak and inflamed eyes, frequent soreness of the throat, ringing or roaring or other noises in the ears, more or less impairment of the hearing, loss of smell, memory impaired, dullness or dizziness of the head, dryness and heat of the nose? Have you lost all sense of smell? Have you pain in the chest, lungs or bowels? Have you a hacking cough? Have you dyspepsia? Have you liver complaint? Is your breath foul? IF SO YOU HAVE CATARRH. Some have all these symptoms, others only a part. The leading symptom of ordinary cases of Catarrh is increased secretion of mucus of yellow or greenish colored matter.

Foul breath is caused by the decomposing secretions exuded from festering ulcers far back in the head; sometimes the membrane covering the bones is eaten away, and the bones themselves gradually decay. Such cases are indeed objects of pity, as the stench from the corroding sores reveals the corruption within.

As every breath drawn into the lungs must pass over and become polluted by the secretions in the nasal passages it must necessarily follow that poisoning of the whole system gradually takes place, while the morbid matter that is swallowed during sleep passes into the stomach, enfeebles digestion, and often produces dyspepsia.

Catarrh is a Dangerous Disease, and should not be trifled with; care should be taken to look for the first indications, and cure them promptly. If your case is a bad one, affecting the throat and Bronchial tubes, producing tickling, coughing and an almost constant effort to clear the passages, with tough, vile phlegm in the glottis on getting up in the morning, which is hard to eject, and other plain symptoms that the disease is stealing into the lungs, it should be attended to promptly and thoroughly.

DO NOT PROCRASTINATE.

Thousands of sufferers have applied to me for relief. Many thousands more are waiting, fearful it would be an experiment that would only end in failure. Do not trifle away your opportunity. You may be sure that Catarrh takes no backward step. Your case may be daily growing beyond the reach of human aid. The statements of others who have found Child's Catarrh Specific the only certain sure cure should have weight and convince you of the hopefulness of your own case.

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO

Catarrh was considered an incurable disease. I had then suffered for fifteen years in a manner only known to those who have had this disease in some of its worst forms. My professional duties made exposure a necessity, and I was first attacked by a slight cold; terrible headaches, which could not be cured followed, with deafness and ringing in the ears, soreness of throat, disgusting nasal discharges, weak, inflamed eyes, hawking, raising of vile matter, black and sometimes bloody mucus, coughing, with great soreness of the lungs. The liver and stomach were polluted with the mass of diseased matter running from the head, until dyspepsia, indigestion, and liver complaint made me a wreck and incapacitated me from my professional duties and confined me to my bed. Compelled to resign my pastorate, and feeling that my end was near, in desperation I gave up the physicians and compounded my CATARRH SPECIFIC, and wrought upon myself a WONDERFUL CURE. Now, at the age of sixty-nine, I am wholly restored, can speak for hours with no difficulty, and never have had, in the whole fifteen years, the slightest return of the disease.

EVERY PHYSICIAN who has examined my specific says it is CERTAIN, AND THOROUGH, AND PERFECT.

T. P. CHILDS.

100.000 Catarrhal cases have applied to me for relief. Many thousands have received my Specific, and are cured. We deem it only fair that every one who wishes should have the opportunity to ascertain whether we are able to accomplish all we claim; and for this purpose we add a few of the many hundreds of unsolicited certificates which have been sent to us by grateful patients—as well as the addresses of some who have been successfully treated, almost any of whom will doubtless respond to any inquiry by letter, if accompanied by a stamp to pay postage. Having been cured themselves, they doubtless will be willing to let the afflicted know where they can find certain relief. We have thousands of these certificates from all classes—physicians, clergymen, lawyers, judges, merchants, bankers and business men.

I write to tell you that I am perfectly cured of Catarrh. O. P. WISE, Magnolia, Ark.

The catarrhal cough has entirely left me. I am well again. J. A. HULL, Cleveland, Ohio.

I would not take a farm for your Specific if it could not be replaced. J. P. ROBERTS, Chicago, Ill.

I would not take a thousand dollars for your inhalers. I am completely cured. G. J. MCKNIGHT, Cleveland, Ohio

My health is fully restored. The horrid and loathsome disease is all gone. My lungs feel all right MRS. W. D. LINCOLN, York, Nebr.

I am glad to say I found your medicine all that can be claimed for it. I am fully restored. S. H. SIGFRIED. Pottsville, Pa.

Your treatment has cured my daughter of Catarrh induced by a severe attack of measles. JOHN W. RILEY, U. S. Express Agent, Troy, O.

CHILD'S CATARRH SPECIFIC

Will effectually and permanently cure any case of Catarrh, no matter how desperate. The treatment is local as well as constitutional, and can only be obtained at Troy, Ohio. We especially desire to treat those who have tried other remedies without success.

Child's Treatment for Catarrh, and for diseases of the Bronchial Tubes, can be taken at home, with perfect ease and safety, by the patient. No expense need be entailed beyond the cost of the medicine. A full statement of method of home treatment and cost, will be sent on application. Address

FARM NOTES.

FARM WORK FOR MARCH.

Hiring Men.—The problem of hand labor is not an easy one for the farmer. On any farm where two or more hired men are needed during the growing season, it is usually best to have one man work by the year. In this way good help may be secured for a long term of years, and will also lead to a profitable planning of the labor for the whole year. The amount of work done during the winter can be largely increased, greatly to the relief of the workmen in the busy months of spring. The necessary wood for the household should be provided in winter, with a sufficient stock on hand, so that only well seasoned fuel need be used. It is a slipshod and unprofitable method that provides the wood fresh from the log on the day it is burned, besides being a fruitful source of bad breakfasts and worse tempers. There are scores of other jobs that may be done in winter, turning both man and team to good account.

Fences that have been laid by the winter storms should be rebuilt so soon as the ground will permit. Manure may be drawn out before the frost is out of the ground, and either put in small heaps or spread from the wagon. This work can be done with greater speed if there is snow upon the ground, and a sled can be used. It is especially convenient to use a sled in an orchard under the spreading branches of the trees. All surface stones may be taken from the fields so soon as the frost is out enough to set them loose.

Tools.—Every implement needed on the farm should be overhauled before the time for using them arrives. Sharpen all edge tools, and oil the various parts of the farm machinery. Look well to the bolts, that none may be missing when the day for using the implements is at hand. The little things of the farm are very important, and no one can hope to succeed without paying strict attention to them.—American Agriculturist for March.

LIVE STOCK NOTES.

Horses should come through the winter in good flesh, and be in fine trim for the hard work of spring. Horses' feet need special care at this time of slush and mud. When the horses are brought in from work, they should be rubbed down, and the feet and legs thoroughly dried. If left covered with mud, the skin may soon become diseased, and cracked heels or foot fever may result. Look well to the horses' feet.

Cows.—Any cow that is out of condition will need the best of care now. Warm bran slop, with a little ginger, is excellent. If the animal is poor and weak, there is danger of feeding largely of rich food. Calves infested with vermin are known by their rough coats. A mixture of lard and sulphur rubbed along the back, with a dose of a teaspoonful of sulphur and molasses once or twice a week, is effective.

Sheep.—Ewes should have dry and clean pens and yards, with a plenty of good, wholesome food. If the wool is falling, a few ounce doses of equal parts of sulphur and cream of tartar will relieve the irritation of the skin. Early lambs may be pushed forward with fresh cow's milk, given warm, a quarter of a pint to a meal. Do not run any risks in over-feeding.

Swine.—Breeding sows should be separated from other pigs, and provided with warm, dry pens, bedded with leaves or straw. A rail fastened to the wall, eight inches from the floor, will prevent the young pigs from being crushed. It is well to feed the sow some raw linseed oil a few days before the pigs are born.—American Agriculturist for March.

A LONG FAST.—About four months ago Mr. Adam C. Camper of Broad Creek Neck, Md., lost a sow weighing 300 pounds. On Saturday last Mr. Camper found her at his stack-yard wedged in tightly between straw-racks, alive and kicking. She had neither food nor water for four months, and only lost about ten pounds. After he got her out he offered her corn, but she wouldn't eat it until she got a drink of water. After drinking a bucket of water she ate five ears in the twinkling of an eye.—Boston Star.

THE CHILDREN'S GARDEN.

It need not be a large one. If possible it should be a light, easily worked, sandy soil; sow on it early in the spring three or four pounds of some good artificial fertilizer to the square rod, and spade or hoe or rake it into the soil. If the land had been plowed and prepared ready for the seed the autumn previous, so much the better. In this case it need not be spaded again in the spring. As soon as the frost is out of the ground and the first three or four inches of soil is dry enough to work, hoe it and rake it smooth, and then let the children sow, in rows wide enough apart to admit the use of a hoe, such hardy seeds as radish, lettuce, cabbage, cauliflower, carrots, parsnips, turnips, onions, beets, celery, cress, mustard, parsley, and spinach.

In the meantime it would be well for the children to sow some seeds in boxes in the house. Nothing is better for this purpose than a mixture of one half ordinary sandy soil and dry moss in equal parts by measure. Both the soil and the moss should be run through a sieve, not coarser than the one used for sifting coal ashes, and if finer all the better. You can get the dry moss from any nurseryman or market-gardener. There is plenty of it in the woods.

I make the boxes out of half-inch stuff, four inches deep and twelve inches wide, and just long enough to fit in the window. A tablespoonful of superphosphate to each box thoroughly mixed with the soil will be a great help. Fill the boxes full with the mixture of half soil and moss and then saturate it with hot water. As soon as the soil gets dry enough to work nicely make rows crosswise of the box about an inch apart. A pencil placed flat on the soil and pressed down an eighth of an inch deep makes a nice smooth drill. In these drill marks sow tomatoes, lettuce, egg plant, celery, cabbage and cauliflower, and such flower seeds as phlox, pansy, ten-week-stock, mignonette, aster and verbena.

After sowing the seed dust over it dry sifted moss a quarter of an inch deep. This is all that is necessary. If the soil was thoroughly saturated with warm water before sowing the seed no more water will be needed for several days. It is a common mistake to water too frequently. When you do water put on all that the soil will hold and then not water again till the surface soil or moss is quite dry. It is desirable to use warm water, say as warm as new milk. When the plants are fairly started, and before they begin to crowd each other, transplant them into other boxes.

I have known plants grown by the children in this way to be far larger and healthier than those in the hot-bed.—Jos. Harris.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF PRUNING.—In a French work on pruning, translated by Prof. Sargent, the following rule is given: "Their system is based on the fact that, as wood is alone formed by descending, elaborated sap, a wound made on a tree can only be recovered with healthy, new wood, when its entire circumference is brought into direct communication with the leaves by means of the layer of young and growing cells formed between the wood and the bark. To make this connection it is necessary to prune in such a manner that no portion of an amputated or dead branch shall be left on the trunk. The cut should always be made close to and perfectly even with the outline of the trunk, without regard to the size of the wound thus made. This is the essential rule in all pruning, and on its observance the success of the operation depends."

THINK BEFOREHAND.—The following from an exchange is precisely the advice we have frequently given our readers: "No man is fit to manage a farm who does not think beforehand what is best to do and which is the best way to do it. Work without thought, without plan, has been the blunder of many who pretend to be farmers. Raising crops without knowledge as to their cost, or thought as to whether they will sell or not, has sapped many a fortune. More forethought in the management of a farm is required than in most any other pursuit followed by man, and the forehanded farmer is always the one who counts the cost and closely calculates all matters that appertain to the farm; not that a farmer is necessarily obliged to make shifts and turns in order to succeed, but simply to count the cost."

—OR—

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen, $15.00.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

The Master's Carpet.

BY

E. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the order, together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Danghter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History and the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th; 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Graud Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.40. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozeu, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—During the sessions of the Forty-seventh Congress the total number of bills aud joint resolutions introduced in both houscs was 10,650. The reports of debates cover 10,715 pages of the Congressional Record, having a total of 16,000,000 words.

—Among the bills that failed to pass were these: The bill to extend the time of holding whisky in bond, to place General Grant upon the retired list, the river and harbor appropriation, the repeal of the preemption law, and the Fitz John Porter relief bill.

—Senator Davis resigned the presidency of the Senate on Saturday, and Mr. Edmunds of Vermont was elected to the position.

—Dissatisfaction prevails at Pittsburg over the tariff bill just passed. Mauufacturers of hoop-iron and wire-rods say their business has been killed; the pig and sheet-iron and steel men maintain that their industry has been greatly crippled, aud all agree that wages must be reduced.

—Early Sunday morning the steamer Yazoo struck an obstruction near Bonnet Carre, La., and sunk. The steamer St. John picked up sixteen persons, but sixteen others were drowned.

—The sunk lands in the St. Francis river region are submerged, and people are liviug iu the upper stories of their houses or floating about in boats or rafts. At New Madrid there is not a house but is inundated, and the same troubles also exist at Arkansas City.

—The grand jury at Milwaukee found a bill of indictment against Geo. Scheller, the saloon-keeper, for burning the Newhall House, after careful inquiry aud the examinatiou of 106 witnesses.

—The boiler in Hatton's box-factory at Westville, Ind., exploded Thursday morning, killiug the proprietor and Engineer Hillon, seriously wounding two other men and demolishing the building.

—Mary Burr, a servant, and three children perished in the burning of Peter Dennan's house at Montague, Mich., Tuesday.

—Norwich, Conn., was severely shaken by au earthquake Tuesday evening, and the amazemeut of the people was heightened by a dazzling meteor rushiug at nearly the same time across the sky.

—Mr. Fred H. Wines of Springfield, Ill., sent by Gov. Hamilton to investigate and report upon the state of affairs at Shawneetown, says the situation therc is terrible. There are between 500 and 600 houses iu towu, every one of which is under water. Only thirty are habitable, and those only in upper stories. More thau 100 houses have floated from their foundations. Five hundred pcople are receiving relief. One-half to two-thirds of Gallatin county is flooded. Fences are gone, corn is destroyed, stock have been drowned, and the people have been driven from their homes. Dysentery, pueumonia and malarial fevers prevail, and arc increasing.

—The floods havc caused serious loss of life at Helcua, Ark., while the suffering aud distress are said to be horrible. The water continucs to rise, and the plantations and bottom-lands are being deserted, the people seeking protection in the hills Lumber is being swept away by the thousaud feet, the losses being immense.

—Three paper bombs charged with powder were thrown recently before the Quirinal palace at Rome, at the Austrian Embassy to the Vatican, and into the court-yard of the Austrian embassador. No one was injured.

—Great distress prevails in the Gweedore sectiou of Donegal, Ireland, where the peoplc are subsisting on sea-weed for food. The children are emaciated from hunger, and almost every house contains persons dying slowly of starvation.

—Thc trial has begun in Prague, Hungary, of seven miners belonging to a secret socicty, whose object was to intimidate mining officials.

—A bill that has passed the Kansas Senate makes the keeping of faro-banks and other gambling houses a felony. The gamblers are trying by lobby measures to secure its defeat.

—It is believed the new letter postage rate—two, instead of three cents per half ounce—will go into effect Oct. 1 next.

THE NEW VOYAGE OF LIFE.

Few people but will realize the startling truth shown in the engraving accompanying the advertisement of Rev. T. P. Childs in this number of the Christian Cynosure. Truly our present civilization battles with disease from the cradle to the grave. Unseen daugers surround us on every side; a slight cold or cough neglected may bring us untold miseries; catarrh, bronchitis, consumption, with death in the near future.

To many it will be a matter of surprise that Catarrh is very frequently mistaken for Consumption, the symptoms in each being much alike, especially in the earlier stages. No one who recognizes in his own system, or who has friends or relatives with any of the symptoms so accurately described, should fail to send a statement of the case to Mr. Childs. There may be hope even in very desperate cases.

The discovery of his cure for catarrh has attracted great attention. Leading men everywhere publicly state that Childs' treatment has cured them or their families of catarrh or throat difficulties—among them clergymen, physicians, lawyers, merchants, bankers and business men. All who have personally investigated the facts are satisfied that Mr. Childs has discovered a certain, positive and permanent cure for catarrh, that when properly used never fails even in the most desperate cases.

Catarrh is generally many years in gaining a foothold in the system, and attacks so many parts of the body that it cannot be cured by any one remedy or by a single application. It requires remedies that will meet the disease wherever it is located and fight it inch by inch until a complete victory has been obtained. Rev. T. P. Childs has treated and cured thousands at their own homes, never having seen them. In a thoroughly honorable and characteristic manner he publishes the names and addresses of some he has cured, that any who desire may inquire of the patients themselves what Childs' Catarrh Specific has done for them. He gives his own experience after fifteen years of relief from the drcad disease. No doubt many of our subscribers will find their own cases stated with startling clearness.

None need feel any hesitancy in placing their case in Mr. Child's hands for treatment. We would call especial attention to the advertisement, and request a careful perusal of the facts as set forth.

Many who do not receive our paper would doubtless be very thankful, should our readers call the attention of such to the advertisement of Mr. Childs. Catarrh and Consumption are the twin enemies of thc race, and any means of relief is a heaven sent blessing. Childs Catarrh Specific may be relied on as an effective and certain cure, and you may recommend it to your friends with every confidence.

THE WATCH TOWER.

"The world is on the move—look about!"—The Liberty Singer.

The thorough "spriug-cleaniug" made by the late grand jury in Washington under the charge of Judge Wylie, presiding in the Star-ronte eases, has swept and garnished the detective department of that city. Before their discharge the jury brought in an additional twenty-one iudictments, beside their previous arduous and important work. The former detective force, with a single exception, have all been indicted, aud if a vigorous and faithful prosecution is maintained, it will be long before the thieves and burglars of the capital secure so valuable allies in the police department. Another aid, which time will prove to be invaluable, will be the establishment of the auxiliary reform office by the National Christian Association in the heart of the city. As a protest against lodge manipulations, which are at the bottom of the robber-detective alliance, it will put Freemasonry there upon its good behavior hereafter.

Western New York is not through furnishing sensations in lodgery. The other day the editor of a local paper in Cuba, Alleghany county, died and was buried. He was an infidel of the Ingersoll type and had long brooded over his departure from this life. He exacted a promise from his family that no Christian services should be allowed at his funeral. He was a member of the Knights of Honor and provided that this order should perform its religious rites on that occasion. His arrangement for the obsequies was followed to the letter at his burial at Towanda. Twenty-eight "Knights" in full regalia marched in the funeral procession to the grave singing the old war song, "Marching through Georgia." As the clods rattled on the coffin they again repeated the words of the song. The eortege moved away and as the mourners left the grounds they struck up the ditty, "Good-by, my love, good-by," to the horror of the sober citizens, though the spirit manifested by the singers and their composure through the whole strange performance showed that they did not partake of the common sentiment. In connection with the thief's funeral mentioned last week it appears that Ingersollism and lodgery make a fine compound when a solemn occasion is to be made the scene of disgraceful and disgusting orgies.

The representative deity of the elements, whose four hundred prophets Elijah slew at Carmel, is not forgotten in our day. The Canadian Wiggins, who has assumed to be a prophet of storms, has as little success in getting a response as the prophets of Baal when they wanted fire. The assurance with which he promulgated his opiuions and urged that governments arrange their affairs according to his whim, almost persuade the belief that he was in some sort of league with the "prince of the power of the air," who failed him at the last moment. But more singular is the superstition which has taken his predictions for granted. The fishermen of Gloucester, Mass., refused to embark until after the fatal 11th of March and lost $125,000 to their business. During the fine days last week the Onondaga Indians of New York cabled their houses to trees, and down in Missouri, it is said, one family prepared a dug-out and took refuge in it with a good stock of provisions. Reports, probably exaggerated, were rife of the prostration of the timid, and even that some had gone insane with dread. They may now recover at their leisure; and remember next time that He who holds the winds in His fist, who casts forth snow like morsels and rides upon the storm, yet has such care of His creatures that no sparrow falls without His notice.

The day of prayer for colleges we are told by some writers is growing in importance and interest year by year. There are some facts in respect to the day which demand from our whole people a profound consideration. It has been almost or quite a generation since Prof. Tyler wrote that wonderful book "Prayer for Colleges." Nothing like it has been published since, nor do we believe it will be said by those who observe the current of college life that such a book could now be written with the same spirit and zeal. The day of fasting and prayer for colleges used to be followed frequently by gracious revivals among the students; it is years since we have heard of such a gracious event. The reports that have been printed since the last anniversary of this day are not hopeful, at least so far as the old and well known institutions of the Eastern and Middle States are concerned. Amherst College, which was always regarded as a school of prophets fifty years ago sent over sixty per cent. of her graduates iuto the ministry, of the present class probably twelve per cent. will enter this work. From Priuceton, the home of Presbyterianism, the graduates who enter the ministry are about in the ratio of 15 to 207. Williams College in the decade 1840–50 sent about one-third of her graduates into the same work, from 1870-80 the proportion is one eighth. The alumni of Yale College for many years became preachers of the Word to about seventy per cent., now abont six or seven choose this labor. Harvard during the last ten years records but four per cent. of her graduates in the ministry. At the West among our young institutions the facts are more hopeful; but they fail to show that the interests of religion are becoming of more importance year by year. The cause of this decline is sought in the institutions themselves, whereas it will be found without doubt among the churches rather which have degraded the ministry to the level of other salaried professions, whose attractions are always superior from a mere business point of view.

The sermon of Prof. David Swing upon which a comment appears elsewhere, has beeu noticed by critics of a different theology, aud their comment so vindicates the course of the Cynosure in his case before those friends who have objected thereto, that it seems just to give the Music Hall preacher the benefit of the following encomium from the Radical Review, the Chicago organ of infidelity: "Messrs. Swing and Thomas, have been excluded from their respective churches for heresy. In former days their fellow Christiaus would have burned them alive; now they are not only uot burned for heresy but they thrive upon it, and actually make more money out of it, than they did out of orthodoxy. In pulpit popularity Mr. Swing is far ahead of all the rest, and his audiences are immense. His theology is rickety aud weak, but, like his congregation, it is always well dressed, with, perhaps, a trifle too much jewelry for severe taste; and there is a flavor of perfumery about it aristocratic and dear. It is cloudy too, but as the cloud is composed of incense, it is rather pleasant than otherwise. On Sunday, March 4th, Prof. Swing preached from the text, 'Search the Scriptnres for in them ye think ye have eternal life,' and told his congregation what the Scriptures were: 'The earth's religious fragments and atoms gathered up into a globe.' This is pretty, and certainly a great advance on the orthodox assertion that the Scriptures are the inspired word of God. Mr. Swing evidently ridicules the claim of Paul that 'all Scripture is given by inspiration of God;' and in drawing his congregation away from that ancient superstition he is certainly doing a good work—a work that no infidel could possibly do—because the people who listen to Swing would not give ear to an infidel, not even to Ingersoll. So long as Prof. Swing places the Bible on a level with other books, and claims no superiority for it but what its own intrinsic merits justify, he is welcome to cover it all over with flowery compliments. Stripped of its rhetoric, Prof. Swing's sermon is a satire on the Christian system, and its eloquent flatteries of its founder read like irony. It is a flat contradiction to the Bible itself, and is condemned by the text; for that reason the text was mutilated."

THE HOOD-WINK PARTLY LIFTED.

BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

In the palmy days of her republican institutions Vermont cast her entire electoral vote against the Masonic lodge. The lodge lay low until the storm of indignation was past, and the people had become occupied with other matters; then it slyly arose, stole into the back door, and took possession of the whole State, legislature and all. It has carried things with a high hand of late years. It makes no scruple in trampling upon constitutional law. It disgraced the State by choosing an unconstitutional elector, which had to be patched up by a special Congressional enactuent. Unconstitutional members are admitted to her legislative councils, and her law prohibiting the administration of secret obligations is treated with headstrong indifference and contempt. The State has been diverted from the Constitution to follow after the Masonic lodge. She has become perfectly hoodwinked, and tries to make herself believe that everything is lovely and divine, and that the Masonic tricks that are being played off around her are the highest efforts of statesmauship.

But at last there are some evidences manifest that the hoodwink has become somewhat displaced, so that she can see out with part of one eye, and discover the knavery to which she has been subjected. She begins to see the back-pay grabs; the Credit Mobilier swindles; the Indian war outrages; the Star-route frauds; the river-and-harbor jobs; the attempted franking privilege; the enormous pension lists; the rank political favoritism, etc., etc. She sees not a few men enjoying the aristocratic privilege of high pensions who, if they had their real deserts, would receive punishment iustead of favors.

And what must the Vermont farmer think when he finds that under Masonic management the State has been compelled to pay some ten millions of dollars as bounty to mercenary white recruits when she might have had, and should have had, negro regiments for no bounties at all? What must the farmer think, who, while wearing poor clothes; stinting his conveniences; paying high taxes, and seeing his farm declining in value year after year, is told that he has helped to pay ten millions of dollars; has delayed peace; piled up a huge debt, and is giviug immense undeserved pensions merely to gratify that aristocratic provision of Masonic law by which the negro is not entitled to admission to the lodge, aud ought not therefore to be reckoned as a man, and least of all as a soldier! What must he think when he finds that by following lodge-rule how very far off he has wandered from those republican principles and habits by which the State has always professed to be governed?

I repeat it; there is not a more important law upon the statute book of Vermont than that one which our honest fathers framed for the purpose of completing the destruction of the Masonic lodge. I mean the law for suppressing the administration of secret oaths. Yet, under the reign of the lodge, Vermont sends Freemasons, who exist only by the violation of this law, to her legislature and to Congress to represent her interests! There is not one of her delegation in Congress for the last twenty years but who has either actively or tacitly advocated the ruinous policy of subjecting her people to the unnecessary payment of ten millions of bounty money together with the concomitant measures of studied procrastination and fraudulent pensions. Hardly one if any of the Vermont delegation has ever revealed or denounced the frauds that have been going on in the bosom of the government. Some of them have actually participated in these frauds, and, sustained by the lodge, have an occasion to exult over their success, though to the ruin of those republican virtues for which the State was once distinguished.

There is nothing in common between the early Anti-masonic character of Vermont and the spirit which governs the Masonic lodge. The representative of the lodge must needs be an insincere, humorous, jocose, double-faced person, who is ever ready to make light of serious subjects, or be serious with light ones, without much regard to moral consistency or self-respect, while the representative of early Vermont character must be right the reverse of all this. And I think that the Vermont farmer is beginning to see this. Let him arouse to the full measure of early Vermont manhood; boldly throw off his hoodwink, and survey the scene in the open light of sincerity and truth, and he will see the shallow tricks and monstrous frauds that have been imposed upon him in the name of the republican character of his State.

Brattleboro, Vt.

NOT EVERY ONE.

BY REV. H. A. DAY.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Christ of course, saw all along down the future course of man, and knew it, as he had known the past. Of course he knew of the vast amount of "professing religion," which would characterize all ages, and more especially the last days of time. Of course he knew of the popular, aristocratic, Pharisaic, hypocritical formula of going through the "Lord, Lord" performance, which is characteristic of the nineteenth century. He knew of all this, or he never would have used the above words. One of the curses of our day is the great amount of religiousness which is possessed by the people. It is extremely popular to be religious—at certain times—that is, religiousness is a handy thing to have in the house; we need it when the preacher calls, and when we go to church, and when some one dies, and we wish to appear appropriately solemn; and we need it when the missionary agent calls, and we have nothing to give, that is, no silver or gold, but a little religiousness. A person cannot possibly be extremely popular to-day, without having learned a little churchly babble, with which to entertain churchly callers. "Mr. Smoothitover's sermon was so nice last Sabbath." "I do think he is perfectly splendid." "He's such a lovely speaker." "He seems so earnest, I feel sure he will do very much for our church," etc.

O where is the power that used to stir the soul? It is dying out. Brethren, let us invite the Holy Ghost to come down and hold our revivals for us. Then the people will be taught the plain unalterable truth as it is in Jesus. Then to say, Lord, Lord, will avail something. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." When the Holy Spirit is in the work it is genuine. Then "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." An effort to do good avails nothing without the Holy Spirit. O that all might see this in these days of indifference and formality! Christ finds no fault with any for saying Lord. He teaches us to cry day and night unto him. But to say it without the spirit of true worship, is to say it not for our own profit nor for the profit of anybody under the sun. The spirit of old time worship brought into the churches of to-day, would work disaster. The choir would lose their place, the preacher would lose his manuscript, and the flimsy, fussy worshipers in the pew would lose some of their "fixings" in the terrible havoc made by the Spirit of Christ in the houses of prayer, which in the majority of cases are mere "dens of thieves" robbing God of his glory, and the people of their money and their souls.

OUR SAMSON.

BY PROF. L. N. STRATTON.

Our country, like a rustic youth,
Has often been deceived;
Forced to plod in a garb uncouth,
With wrongs and crimes aggrieved.

He walks the dusty streets—a slave—
With low-bowed neck he toils;
To save himself a threatened grave
Gives Patronage its spoils.

But roused at times by horrid crimes
And wrongs he cannot bear,
He smites the base Philistine's pride
With the madness of despair.

And, like the youth on Timnath's road
Who rent the lion's maw,
Has slain a thousand enemies,
With a dumb brute's broken jaw.

How often have our people found,
That the sweetest honey flowed,
From lion skeletons of sin
Stuck down on life's high road.

The mighty Truth thus onward sped
Calls to its friends, "Arise!
Philistia's corn-fields shall turn red,
Against the midnight skies!"

Our gentle giant now is bound,
With ropes and withes of green,
So that his strength may thus be found,
And his secret power be seen.

He's taunted with the murderous cries,
Of armed "Knights" rushing on,
Who mock him till his blinded eyes
And strength alike are gone.

With sin-shorn might, this evil hour
He grinds at Gaza's mill—
The prey of paltry men of power,
Who seek their selfish will.

But the hastening doom sin surely meets
Like tidal waves comes on—
Cry it aloud in Gath's wild streets,
Preach it in Askelon!

The joys of earth, the hopes of time,
The crystal tide of years
Will speed the reign of Christ along
Unchecked by rising fears.

The black'ning clouds, the thick'ning storm
Will surely pass away,
As darkness, deep'ning toward the dawn,
Foretells the coming day.

Reform cries out with many tongues;
It points to grander goals;
It seeks to right the many wrongs
That ruin human souls.

The temple's gay festivities—
The mirth and dance and song,
May surge along the corridors
With the bacchanalian throng.

Mark! retribution follows fast—
Pride stalks and vaults in vain;
For Christless worships cannot last—
God's power will come again.

Beware when Samson blindly bends
To the pillars' deep laid base;
Then Mockery shall find its end
And Truth stand in its place.

The harpers struck forever dumb,
With the surging crowd shall die;
And Truth shall stand above and smile
With banners in the sky.

CHINESE NEW YEAR IN CALIFORNIA.

BY THOS. E. KENNEDY.

The cities and towns in California, unlike those of her sister States east of the Rockies, have a Chinese quarter, or what, in the vernacular, is called "Chinatown." In San Francisco, whole streets of the finest brick buildings, stores, hotels, boarding-houses, theaters and banks, are devoted to the Chinese trade. But outside of San Francisco, the Chinese quarter is composed for the most part, of rough, redwood shanties battened on the outside, and frequently lined and papered within.

Americans build around a hollow square; but the Chinese build a solid square, traversed by alleys from six to ten feet in width, and as winding and difficult to thread as the Cretan labyrinth. A diagram of the Chinese quarter resembles a railroad map of Illinois, with rows of contiguous houses between the tracks. As for the forty famed stinks of Cologne, they are faint aromatic odors, compared to the thousand noisome, revolting, conglomerate smells that stench the air of Chinatown.

In San Jose, it was New Year's night, 1883, according to the calendar of the Chinese—February the eighth, according to the calendar of the "Devils" (a term which these heathen apply to all foreigners)—when a small party of five, taking their several noses between thumb and finger, marched into Chinatown. New Year's is the time a Mongolian forgives his enemies and pays his debts. Any unfortunate Mongol who is unable or unwilling to honor his drafts upon this important occasion is immediately tabooed by good society and handed over to the inquisitors of one of the Six Companies.

The first place we entered was a store, eight by ten feet in size. Several white people had gone in before us, and as there were already three Chinamen and one woman and an almond-eyed boy within, when our party all got in two of us were still outside. Some sweet smelling Chinese lillies graced the counter; and ware of various kinds was hung on the walls or stored around the room.

We soon ascertained that the boy, who was engaged in eating sugar-cane, was nine years old; but the fly specks and cobwebs on the walls, were thirteen years old. There was new red cloth hung up over the door and in various places around the room; also portions, at least, of the pieces which had been hung up on each of the thirteen preceding New Year's. The room was very dingy and black looking, but the occupants were very bright and cheerful. The Chinese always keep open house on this day; so they offered us tea, in cups about the size used by large dolls. We passed it to the ladies, but, as they were strictly temperate, the "drink which cheers but does not inebriate" had to be poured back into the stone teapot, adorned with a Chinese dragon for a mouthpiece and a distorted crocodile for a handle, and the whole outfit placed upon the little shelf from which it was taken.

In the mean time, the Chinese woman had been closely examining and, childlike, fingering the silk dolman of one of the ladies; and the lady had been eyeing the silk padded, shirt-like garment, huge golden earrings and almost baby shoes, which the China-woman wore. All parties having satisfied their curiosity, we stepped out into the alley and a special police officer, who happened to be passing, politely conducted us to the Josh House.

Passing up a flight of stairs and through a series of zigzag halls, dimly lighted, we stood before the door of the sacred hall. It took several sharp raps by our guide, before a well-dressed Chinaman opened the door. He explained that he had only locked the door to keep the boys out, as they sometimes meddle with the sacred things, and that he had no intention of engaging in Fantdan or any other game of chance. This explanation seemed necessary, as the Chinese are notorious gamblers and always ready to violate the laws which forbid or curtail this Celestial pastime.

The Josh House was a small room of eighteen by twelve feet—large according to the manner in which the Chinaman measures space. In the west end of the room in a highly ornamented shrine was the Josh, having a smaller image on each side of him. This central idol was in the likeness of Confucius. Immediately before it was an oblong copper vessel filled with ashes in which were sticking the remains of various kinds of tapers and Josh-sticks which had been burned before the shrine. A passage-way two and one half feet in width separated the shrine from a stand on which stood several tall, slender vases used to hold large tapers or candles. Behind this stand was a table on which were several kinds of delicate viands, much prized on the shores of the Yellow sea, but unknown to the Anglo-Saxon's palate. On both sides of the table were settees for worshipers, and in a corner, in the opposite end of the room from the idol, were a gong, heart-shaped, and a drum covered with a hog-skin. Numerous mottoes were pasted upon the walls, but we did not care to read them. When we went out into the open air, the writer thought, In life we have eternal death, and in the midst of Christ-worship, devil-worship.

Retracing our steps and passing along the circuitous, zigzag alley, we came to a combined barber-shop and opium-den. Several Chinamen were just inhaling the noxious drug. When we looked in, the proprietor drew the curtain. Like another traffic among us, this also needs a screen door. We expected to see long lines of fire-crackers let down from the roofs of the houses, but the special police informed us that these were reserved until the next evening. We accordingly shook the leprous dust and brushed the vile smell from our clothes as best we could, and returned home more than thankful that ours was a Christian country and free.

SECRET SOCIETIES NOT OATH-BOUND.

BY GEO. F. WILLIAMS.

Some ecclesiastical and other bodies pass resolutions against oath-bound secret societies. If they will examine the matter a little they may see that the word "oath-bound", should be stricken out.

Active men are diligently engaged in the New England, and probably in other States, forming secret societies, not oath-bound, (it is said), called "The Royal Arcanum." At a recent meeting of one of their local "councils", just formed, the following officers were elected and installed:

Past Regent—a Mason.
Regent—a rector of an Episcopal (mission) church, a Universalist and a Mason.
Vice Regent—a Mason.
Orator—I think not a Mason.
Chaplain— do do
Collector— do do
Secretary—a Mason.
Treasurer—not a Mason.
Guide— do do
Warden— do do
Sentry—I do not know.
Two Trustees—one, and I think both, not Masons.

It is thus seen that all the ruling officers, and the officer who has charge of the records and correspondence, are Masons. When we know what a few Masons can do in a church—an open society—it is plain that in a secret society, where every important office is held by Masons, that which is done will be wholly controlled by Masonry. The names of the ruling officers are suggestive. "Regent" is the emphatic word in every one. Regents in the Oxford University are graduate instructors. These regents in the Councils of the "Royal Arcanum," are graduates in Masonry, having taken at least the Master's degree. They are able therefore, (and doubtless willing) to instruct the non-Mason members of the Council in regard to the many advantages (?) of Masonry—the highest department in this university of secrecy. The Council given above, as an example, it is reasonable to suppose is a fair sample of all.

The minor secret societies have served to secure recruits for Masonry. Some of them have lost their power to do this, and new ones must be formed. Masonry is the central fortress; the minor societies have served as outworks—some of them very powerful. But when a powerful foe begins to assault vigorously, the outworks must be cared for—the old strengthened and new ones extended beyond. The hosts of the Lord Jesus are beginning to attack Masonry with more vigor and success, and therefore Satan urges the strengthening and extension of the outworks of Masonry—his pet piece of engineering to operate against the churches of Christ, since it has been able to get inside, and in many places there to entrench itself and persecute those who seek to cast it out. Christ's soldiers need to attack the outworks that are making, as well as those made, and the central fortress—Masonry.

Putnam, Conn.

"Masonry is as Good a Religion as I Want".—So carrion is as good meat as a crow wants. While we pity the taste of the bird, we are convinced that the crow is satisfied with his rotten rations because he eats it, and grows fat on it. Right here the analogy between the vulture and the man ends. Man cannot live by a false religion. Though he choose it, it will kill him. Masonry may be as good a religion as some men desire, or want, but by no means such as they need. Whisky is the drink that men want but it will kill them all the same. So with Masonry and any other false religion, the more men want them, the deeper and more fatal the malady. "Masonry" say some "if lived up to is a good enough religion for me." No one ever yet lived up—rather down—to Masonry. It is worse, intrinsically, than the worst of men. It is not good enough for the worst men in it. It may fit their tastes and they may be satisfied with its main features. The Pharisees and the Sadducees were satisfied with the systems they practiced, so were the Ephesians with the worship of Diana; but none of these were good enough religions for their subjects. The one religion given to man through Christ, is just good enough—none too good for man. N. C.

The Decay of Religious Sentiment.—A writer on this subject in the American Church Review for January 1883, attributes the decay to several causes, but makes no allusion to the lodges as the most potent cause of this decay. A writer might as well attribute the growth of religious sentiment among the Israelites after leaving Egypt to any other cause than the Mosaic institution, as to attribute the decay of religious sentiment in the United States to any other cause than secret lodge. The Mosaic institutions were designed to establish a pure religion; the Masonic lodge was designed to destroy it.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST ENOUGH.

BY REV. E. P. GRAVES, EVANGELIST.

My reasons for giving a few brief pages on secret societies are, that I may present some hints to Christians who belong to them, and guard others in Christian usefulness who do not belong to them. I have no disposition to raise opposition to secret societies by way of controversy or unkindness. But having long felt that it was unwise for a Christian to belong to them, I wish to state some reasons why I have arrived at this conclusion. These I wish to urge upon the candid and prayerful consideration of my brethren. There are societies doubtless which are organized for secular and wicked purposes. Of course no Christian would think of joining such; others, such as Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, and temperance societies, and those of a kindred character, have for their object works of philanthropy and reform and deeds of benevolence. That such acts and purposes are commendable wherever manifest none can deny. But where is the proper place for moral action, influence and labor for the Christian? Jesus says to his disciples,, "Ye are the light of the world," "the salt of the earth. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." This doctrine of our Lord reveals to the Christian what he is in himself, what he is to the world, and what position he is to occupy to have his influence known and felt, and to this threefold end God has given a visible church to the world. Whatever variance there may be about the outward works, by way of ordinances and church polity, there is but one evident design of the Holy One in giving this organization to mankind. It is to establish and spread holiness.

The church, then, is God's system of organized holiness. Its work is emphatically that of reform and philanthropy in every possible way. Do we want education advanced? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want temperance enforced? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want the sick and those in prison visited? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want the widows and orphans helped and cared for? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want the poor fed and clothed? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want political government upheld on principles of hallowed goodness? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want plagues and scourges held back by prayer and fasting? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want the institutions of Sabbath preserved in quiet and blessing? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want the marriage relation kept in its divinely-given purity? Look to the church of Christ? Do we want soldiers soothed and comforted in time of war? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want profanity, gambling, horse-racing, fornication, and all other kindred evils checked in their course of sin and death? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want warning against the dangers of losing the soul? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want to know God's true and only way of saving souls and of evangelizing the world? Look to the church of Christ. Do we want heaven opened? Look to the church of Christ. With such an exalted institution as this you are now converted, my Christian brother; and what better or other relation could you ask? And surely there is work and blessing enough in it for you.

The church of Christ has in it all the elements of reform this world needs. If it be said, she does not fulfill her mission fully and faithfully in taking care of the sick, the orphan and the poor, and in prosecuting the work of temperance reform, I would urge you to enlarge your devotion and consecration for her improvement and perfection. Do this instead of letting down your standard and dividing your moral strength, by uniting yourself with an institution that makes no pretensions to the promotion of gospel holiness. You have but one life to live. You will soon be in eternity, and you cannot afford to form such alliances as a basis of moral action.

There are important bearings which Christian men ought to seriously regard in this matter, the bonds of these societies often injure the moral liberty which their members should enjoy with their families. In many of them the wife and children cannot join with their husband and father, neither can they know all the transactions of the lodge into which he enters. This puts on him bonds he never ought to wear, and has a tendency to wean him from the position of love and oneness he ought to hold in the bosom of his family. Besides this, there is an indirect influence in these alliances to chill piety. This may be unintentional, but nevertheless true. I have known many men who, before connecting themselves with a secret society, were pious and devoted in religious experience, but after forming such affinity, they soon relapsed into professional indifference, and lost their religious interest. And though devoted to lodge meetings every week until a late hour of the night, could find time no more to attend the prayer meeting. This course is not infrequent among Christians, who become members of these secret orders, and is traceable directly to their influence. Besides this, again and again, I heard members of some secret societies say, "My church is enough;" and "if I am a good Mason I shall be saved," etc. Now this society, in many of its first degrees, has no semblance to teach Christ and blood to save men. How, then, can the followers of Jesus allow themselves to belong to a society that thus in its very nature falsely leads immortal souls?

Another thing I wish to mention and to call to the attention of brethren that I love. Some of these societies, and those to which many ministers and church officers belong, frequently get up balls and dances. Claiming to be no more than worldly institutions, of course they have the right so to do. But do not the Christian members of the body necessarily feel the grievance and blighting influences of these unhallowed practices, which they could not for a moment sanction in the churches to which they minister.

It seems to me that this is too much of mixing of the church and the world in moral designs, impulses, and forces, which we have consecrated to Christ. I say these things as a minister of grace, in the light of what I know, of the inner circle of secret society experience. Therefore, I wish to entreat Christian men, if you would be useful promote holiness, save sinners, and stand untrammeled in every possible work of Christlike reform, do not join a secret society. Perhaps some ministers and laymen who are now "unequally yoked together with unbelievers," will ask, "How can I relieve myself of this relation?" I answer, step down and out at once. But do it in love toward those you leave, and for the one purpose of standing for Christ in the perfect law of liberty. "Whatsoever you do, do all to the glory of God."—India Methodist Watchman, Bombay.

ALBERT PIKE'S INDIAN WAR.

Albert Pike, "Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander" of the 33d degree of the Southern Jurisdiction U. S. A., has his house and office on the same block with that of the new building of the N. C. A. It is right over against it, and they stand as two opposing batteries in the great moral conflict. The following from the Council Fire of Washington shows how Mr. Pike's influence has affected the welfare of the civilized Indians:

"For seven months past the newspapers have continued reports of troubles among the Creeks. * * * Capt. Dan'l. Chiders of the Creeks, is in Washington, and called at the office of the Council Fire and gave the following explanation:

'When the war between the South and the U. S. began, Gen. Albert Pike of Arkansas, visited Indian Territory for the purpose of making a treaty on behalf of the rebel government. He found those who owned slaves, chiefly half-breeds, in sympathy with the South, and with these he secured a treaty; but the full blood Indians were mostly loyal to the U. S. They said, We have made treaties with the United States, in which we bind ourselves not to go to war against the Government. We have no treaty with this new government you tell us about. The United States is our father, you are a stranger. We cannot fight for strangers against our father. We don't want anything to do with this quarrel.

'The Creeks were divided and became foes to each other. The men who made the treaty with Gen. Pike were furnished arms and ammunition by him, and made war on their loyal brethren.

The loyal Creeks whipped the rebels, but after that the rebel Indians were re-enforced by troops from Texas, the loyalists were whipped and driven out of their country up into Kansas. The young men all went into the Union army, leaving the old men, women and children in tents furnished by the Government. After the war was over these Creeks went back to their ruined homes and were kindly received by their defeated rebel brethren. The tribe was reunited and elected a chief in the old way. The loyal party were found to be in the majority, the others submitted; but after a while the educated Creeks, chiefly half-breeds, got up a government like that of the white people. Under this new government the chief is elected by ballot. The uneducated Indians do not understand this plan, and the educated half-breeds manage the election so as to elect their candidate. The full bloods think they are cheated. At the late election the candidates were Samuel Chicote and Spiechc. It is claimed that the latter was elected while the former was counted in."

Thus we see how the one bad man could destroy the peace of a people and bring lasting alienation, and crime and war, the greatest of crimes.

HEATHENIZING THE HEATHEN.

An exchange, which is in most profound sympathy and fellowship with secret societies, goes into something like ecstacies over the fact that so many secret societies are being organized in heathen lands, carried there, we suppose, by the missionaries. It is our opinion that such missionaries in the organization of secret societies, are heathenizing the heathen rather than Christianizing them. Such missionaries better come back until they have learned out of a book which we have read somewhat, and are wont to believe that, "Everyone that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to to the light lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." "In secret have I said nothing." The missionaries who carry a gospel of organized secretism to the heathen, carry anything but the gospel of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, The churches that educate their missionaries in the lore of secretism, and thus taught send them forth, need missionaries sent among them to enlighten their darkness. A church that does not know better than to attempt to give gospel sanction to the secret societies that curse our land, is "In darkness even until now," and has need itself to learn what are the first principles of revealed truth. We doubt not that there are many intelligent heathens who know better than to believe in the silly, sickening abominations that some of our churches sanction and fellowship. A few of them sent back on the vessels that send out such missionaries, to labor among our secret society-ridden churches, might not be amiss. Certainly an intelligent heathen ought to know better in relation to such societies, than many of our churches practice.—Wesleyan.

THE REFORM CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS OF KENTUCKY.

Dear Friends of Reform:—I know that you are interested in our work here in Kentucky, and "God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love, which ye have shewed toward his name, in that ye have ministered" to us, humble workers in this great field, and have so made it possible for us to stay. I think, however, that many of you lack much definite information concerning this work, and hence this letter. Bro. Fee has given you a general idea of the field. I'll speak of those places in which I am especially interested. These are Camp Nelson, Cabin Creek, and Bethesda.

LOCATION.

Camp Nelson is in central Kentucky, 100 miles south of Cincinnati, in the "Blue Grass country." Cabin Creek is in northeastern Kentucky, in Lewis county, in the edge of the hill country, near the Ohio river, about 70 miles from Cincinnati, and 102 miles from Camp Nelson. Bethesda meeting-house is in the "Blue Grass country," near the Ohio, 25 miles west of Cabin Creek, in Bracken county.

The Cabin Creek and Bethesda churches were established by Bro. Fee long before the war, as undenominational, anti-slavery churches. They are also opposed to intemperance and secret societies. The Camp Nelson church, formed later, takes the same stand.

In July, '81, I went to Camp Nelson and stayed there through the fall, taking charge of the church and school at that place, and also having charge of the Bethesda and Cabin Creek churches, which I visited monthly. The Cabin Creek people manifesting a strong desire for a school, we moved there in December, '81, to see what could be done there in the matter of building up a school for God, leaving the school at Camp Nelson in charge of a competent assistant. We taught till the last of May, '82, at Cabin Creek, using for a school-house the old church-house, and living in a temporary box house. Meantime the friends of the school had subscribed encouragingly for the purchase of a site and the erection of a school building, and it was determined to go on with the enterprise, trusting for additional means to complete what we believed God prompted us to begin. We've gone on about as far as we can without more help, and are looking, hoping, and asking for the necessary aid.

WILL IT PAY?

You'd like to know that before you invest funds, and of course you ought to have good information on this point. Well, let's talk a bit about

THE PEOPLE.

The people of the hills and mountains, people of eastern Kentucky, were intensely loyal during the war, furnishing 37 per cent more than their quota to the Union armies. They did not hold slaves as a rule, and did not sympathize with the slave-holding oligarchy, and in return they were ostracized by the slave-holders of the Blue Grass country. As already intimated, they are mostly white. They are capable of large improvement and hopeful development, but they are very ignorant, and sadly in need of real religion. They have much apparent reverence for God and his book, but genuine piety is very rare among them; machine religion is the rule; superstition, vice, and lawlessness flourish. Lately one of our nearest neighbors was shot dead in cold blood. Murders are frequent. The colored people are superstitious, ignorant, and very often immoral. A large proportion of colored preachers are guilty of gross immorality, especially intemperance and licentiousness. Both white and black need a pure gospel—a real gospel, and with it, Christian education. The common schools are wretchedly lacking in efficiency for good, with no prospect of improvement.

But while you'll readily agree that these people need a pure gospel and the advantages of Christian education, yet when a location for a school is to be decided upon you will properly ask,

WHY CHOOSE CABIN CREEK?

1st. Because it is located in the edge of the hill country and so can be readily reached by the white people of the hills, and is at the same time very near the Blue Grass country, and so is easily accessible by the colored folks of that region. Berea College, 120 miles southwest, is similarly situated, and its situation has proved to be a great advantage to it.

2nd. Because it is readily accessible, and, at the same time, free from the corrupting influences peculiar to towns and cities.

3rd, Because at this place, long ago, Bro. Fee fought long and hard for freedom and right, and there is already here a considerable sentiment against caste, intemperance and secretism.

4th. Because we've already made a start to build a school here. We know of no better place for the purpose; we must locate somewhere, if at all.

In the deed by which our land is conveyed to us, the school is pledged to maintain an undenominational position, to teach Christian morals as well as science, and to stand against caste, intemperance (tobacco-using included), and secret societies. This is greatly advanced ground, especially for Kentucky; will you help us maintain it?

We've planned to build this summer a school-building 35x50, two stories high, to be used for assembly and recitation rooms, and for a home for teachers. Without help we cannot build. We need $1,000, besides what we can raise here, or have already raised. I've tried to present the case simply and honestly. I shall be pleased to correspond with any of you who may wish further information. And now, friends, brethren, if any of you have money that ought to be used for this work, send it on. No one gets any commission on such money; every dollar goes straight to the mark. I shall wait your answer anxiously. May our God direct us. Yours for his cause,

J. F. Browne.

MICHIGAN STATE MEETING.

It is proposed, the Lord willing, to hold the next State meeting in Grand Rapids, beginning on the 17th of April. An effort will be made to secure able speakers and a degree worker, and we are exceedingly anxious that every friend of the reform should be present. Let there be a grand rally. We would like to see all those who are interested in the proposed Anti-secret Alliance at the State meeting, that we may consult together as to what shall be done. Come one and all and let us show our faith by our works. The time has come when every friend of Christ, and every lover of his country should rally for the overthrow of the gigantic evil of secretism, else the church and the state will be ground to powder beneath the heel of the lodge. Up then to the conflict in behalf of a free country and a pure Christianity.

CONNECTICUT.

The Connecticut Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, is hereby called to meet in Melodeon Hall, Hartford, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 20th and 21st, 1883, commencing with devotional exercises Tuesday at 2 o'clock P. M.

Let all the true friends of Christ come up to the meeting clothed with the "whole armor of God, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, taking the shield of faith and the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Praying always with all prayer and supplication of the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints;" and for all God's ministers that they "may speak boldly as they ought to speak" in these days when so many are departing from the plain teachings of the word of God.

Come praying for brethren Barlow, Bailey, Davis, McCracken, and others who may speak, that their words may be only the utterances of the Holy Spirit, and that he may be present in mighty power to convince the people of the subtle wickedness working through the lodge to the deceiving of our young men into the belief that there is salvation in another than the name of Jesus.

THE GENERAL SECRETARY'S LETTER.

Kendallville, Ind., Mar. 6, 1883.

I have met with success and found many warm friends on my present trip. I saw Bro. Leuty at Ligonier on Saturday, in better health and spirits than when I have met him previously for some time. I had the pleasure of paying him $300, in compliance with business arrangements previously made, and was happy to learn that our brother's business tact has, by the blessing of God, placed his funds in such shape that he has an annual income of $1,200 for any purpose he may choose. I mention these facts, as fears have been expressed in that locality, especially by craftsmen, that the old gentleman would have to draw on the resources of lodge brethren through the poor house. I hope the purturbed "Hiramites" and "Linkites" who read this will feel relieved, and save Noble county the expense of sending any more inspectors from Albion to Ligonier to enquire into Father Leuty's mental status.

At Wolcottville, on Saturday evening, I was agreeably surprised to meet Mr. T. Hudson and wife from Kalamazoo, Michigan, and Mr. E. Wolcott from Western, Iowa, at the pleasant home of their mother and sister, where genuine reformers always find sympathy and encouragement. Miss Abby Woleott is one of our most active and successful evangelists. In conjunction with Bro. Bowers and a few others like minded she has, by personal conference and the judicious distribution of our literature, modified the sentiment of the town and indeed of the whole community, on the question of secret societies. On Sabbath morning Bro. Blanchard, over forty years pastor in the Baptist church, invited me to occupy the pulpit; which I did, speaking with some liberty on the impossibility of a heaven for the pure without a hell in which to imprison the spirits of the corrupt and vicious departed.

On Monday Bro. Phillip Bowers accompanied me to the home of Mr. John Witmore, who has faithfully and with scrupulous honesty administered on the estate of our late brother and fellow-helper, Richard Green. From Mr. Witmore I learned that sister Green's affairs were in a prosperous condition, and that he was prepared to carry out the wishes of the deceased, if sister Green so ordered. I called at the house of a number of Bro. Green's old friends and brethren in the church, and it was the uniform opinion that after paying the obligation there would be ample means remaining to meet all her wants. After some delay I found sister Green visiting at the home of an old neighbor and friend, in her usual health and spirits; without waiting for me to mention my business she said, "I want to carry out the wish of my dear husband;" and asked me how the legal form could be complied with. When I explained to her, she gave me an order on her agent for the whole amount, and renewed her subscription to the Cynosure for one year. I called this A. M. on Mr. John Witmore, who honored the order and promptly paid over $104, the principal and one year's interest. In this, as in many other and similar instances, I have endeavored to keep a conscience void of offence towards God and man, and I feel a degree of satisfaction that no amount of money can possibly purchase. In some instances I have felt justified and even compelled to be stern and meet what to me appeared avarice, with vigorous measures, but never have I knowingly, nor will I ever be party to extorting from any one a penny needed for their comfortable maintainance. I know that a dishonest dollar is the heaviest weight that any man can carry in his pocket or his business, for if it does not sink him in time it will weigh him down at the "Judgment," which is but a step in advance of any of us. It is refreshing to meet such devoted women as sister Green, and the solicitude of the Wesleyan brethren with whom Bro. Green walked in loving fellowship for more than a quarter of a century to have his reasonable wishes complied with, is a noble tribute of respect and esteem to the departed. May God reward them.

1: 45 P. M.—The train is just announced thirty-five minutes late to Ligonier, where, by appointment, I am to meet Bro. Lenty and accompany him to Chicago. I had purposed to look up five items of business this side of Elyria, O., and to spend next Sabbath with our venerable Bro. J. A. Bingham, but duty seems to call for a return with Bro. Leuty, to whom our cause is so deeply indebted, and so I forego my contemplated trip for a few days and may peep into the office of the Cynosure, and possibly spend a few hours with my dear children and loved ones at Wheaton. So it is ever; "man proposes, God disposes." Happy is the man who can be the willing clay in the Potter's hand.

FROM NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Here in our part of Kansas, Nemaha and Brown counties with Sabetha as headquarters, brothers Coleman, G. T. Dissette and myself have been holding meetings all over the country in the different school houses. Bro. Dissette being a seceding Master Mason of superior talent, he is listened to by the masses with great attention and good effect. He having been a well-drilled Master Mason and now a straightforward Christian, people will hear him and believe. He is punching Hiram out of his hole with a sharp stick and rapping him over the head with the setting maul of God's truth till he will soon be used up. The more we talk on the subject the more hungry are the people to hear. He and the writer spoke to a very respectable, attentive audience on last night for two hours or more and when done they wanted us to leave them another appointment and we did so. So it is everywhere we go; the people are waking up generally. God is moving; and now let all the lovers of truth bestir themselves and "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

We will suggest a plan of operation for the whole United States; there is not a school district in the country that has not some talent in it, and that has men and women opposed to the lodge. Now send for the Christian Cynosure and a selection of books, and post up; then make your appointments in the school-houses and commence talking to the people. Let not one droue be in all the hive, and let all Christians pray the blessing of God upon the effort, and be assured he will stand by his truth —"it shall not return unto him void, but will accomplish that whereunto he has sent it."

I do believe if all truc followers of Christ will put their hand in Christ's hand and follow as he leads; we will, through his grace and strength be led to a complete victory over "the Beast and his image" in less than ten years. Faith in God is our only hope, friends. Let us take courage and remember that when the armies of the living God compassed Jericho their weapons were simply rams' horns. They passed round the city seven times at the command of the same God we profess to adore and trust, aud they blew the rams' horns which symbolized the truth of God in its power and effect; the result was the strong walls of solid operative Masonry fell flat upon the ground. Just so with speculative Masonry: if we trust in the same God and faithfully blow the trumpets of God's truth against its strong walls they will also fall in like manner.

JOHN THOMPSON.

NORTHWESTERN INDIANA VISITED.

PERU, Ind., March 9th.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just closed a course of lectures in Laporte and Miami counties and have had a pleasant time so far as audiences, attention and weather is concerned. At Union Mills had about sixty Masons and Odd-Fellows to hear me, and I can give them praise for behaving well, and they are the first of the fraternity in the State to contribute. I had the satisfaction of having the co-operation and hospitality of brethren L. Carpenter and James Wing and their excelleut families. In Miami county I still have the constant help of our indefatigable worker, Isaac Crane; and although, like the rest of us, he meets with head winds, but bravely meets them and rows for shore. His motto is, "Land ahead." Twenty such men in the State could increase my work ten-fold by arrangiug for lectures. I am in much better health than dnring the past summer and fall. I am ready for any reasonable amount of work in any part of the State the friends may call for. Respectfully,

S. L. COOK.

VINDICATED.

WASHINGTON, March 5, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The enclosed article from the National Republican of to-day is a reply to a very abusive communication which appeared in that paper of the 2d. It charged Mr. Starry with perjury and falsehood, and the N. C. A. with lying and hypocrisy, and gently consigned us to the "lake which burneth with fire and brimstone."

CHRISTIANITY AND MASONRY.

In your issue of March 2, your correspondent "M." speaks of me with great severity. I desire a brief reply. The National Christian Association was chartered in 1874, and has among its objects to "expose, withstand, and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved, the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption." Now, whether this is an infamous business, and whether Mr. Starry is a "perjurer" or a "liar" depends upon whether Freemasoury is a good institution, but especially whether Mr. Starry broke any covenant or violated an obligation. To all who have carefully considered this matter he did not. Every Mason is assured previous to his initiation that his Masonic covenant shall not interfere with his moral, his civil, or his religious obligations. Now in the opinion of William Wirt (a R. A. Mason), J. Q. Adams, Daniel Webster, William H. Seward, Millard Fillmore, John C. Spencer, Thad. Stevens and a host of others who were eminent for piety, patriotism and learning, the covenants of Masonry do interfere with moral, civil and religions obligations, and hence are void, because obtained through misrepresentation. Mr. Starry believes that he has no right to conceal what William Wirt called "a conspiracy against God and humanity." I esteem it an honor to represent an association which has for its object to oppose an institution which William H. Seward and others declared "tramplers on every government that it cannot control." H. H. HINMAN.

HAIL MASONRY, DIVINE!!

WHEATON, Mar. 12, 1883.

Perhaps no where is the divinity of Freemasonry more clearly illustrated to the benighted and profane world, than on the occasion of a Masonic funeral. Here infidels, saloon-keepers, sensualists, and professed Christians gather to pay tribute to their common "brother." I chanced, with Bro. R. L. Park, last Sabbath to witness one of these funerals.

We were expecting to distribute tracts in Turner from house to house; but much to our surprise on arriving we learned the Masons were to have a grand funeral.

The person over whom the ceremonies took place was an engineer; killed by the explosion of a locomotive at Rochelle last Friday. At the time of his death he was in good standing in two organizations, the Engineers' Insurance and the Masonic. The procession formed at the Masonic Hall (which by the way is a small wooden building) and proceeded to march to the home of the deceased. There were about fifty Masons and perhaps as many engineers. Some in the front ranks were smoking cigars,—of course everything in Masonry is merely symbolic. When they arrived at the house, some of the most prominent entered, and in about a half hour came out with the remains. Then all marched to the grave-yard and proceeded with the usual ceremonies.

As I beheld their Christless mockery, I could not help but exclaim with the Psalmist, "O ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my (God's) glory into shame? How long will ye love vanity, and seek after leasing. Psa. 4:2. They spoke of the glorious brotherhood, of the God of love (who remembers that we are but dust), the one who cares for the widow and orphan.

At the close of the exercise, Bro. Park and myself stationed ourselves near the gate and handed out tracts as rapidly as we could. Some of the Wheaton Masons seemed a little bashful,—the innocent are often bashful. Many having received them, one returned for more. All seemed anxious to see what the next show was to be, whether circus, theatre or Masonry. May God speed the right. W. B. STODDARD.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.

Dea. Ebenezer Smith, of New Hampshire, has been out to several religious meetings distributing tracts. He now proposes to make a liberal use of Thurlow Weed's letter.

Bro. E. M. Curtiss, of Connecticut, is still planning and working to inform the people of the evils of secrecy. He has just ordered some literature to be sent to persons whom he hopes to benefit.

The report of the "Irregular Masonry" movement is being generally published by the papers. It is said the regular Masons are very indignant, but there is nothing they can do to check the movement.

The "Irregulars" are conferring thirty degrees for fifteen dollars. The next step will be to give them away.

FAITHFUL WORDS FROM JOSEPH COOK.

WORCESTER, MASS., Mar. 5, 1883.

Joseph Cook's prelude last Monday was a more practical arraignment of some glaring faults among our churches than we usually find in print. Other men may have said equally true things, but other men have not had the hearing of the people to the same extent. We cannot rejoice in the sad truths portrayed but we do rejoice because, being truths, they are so well spoken. Here is a sample of his incisive utterances: "The church for the times will reach the whole population. John Wesley said once, 'Beware how you invite rich men into your churches until you are sure they are Christians. Beware how you manage your churches in such a way that rich men will become a necessity to you. If your church buildings are so luxurious that you need an enormous income, wealthy men will be a necessity to you and they will rule you and then you must soon bid farewell to Methodist discipline, and, perhaps to Methodist doctrine.' A wiser thing was never said. A more unpopular thing, perhaps, could hardly be repeated at this hour, but the truth is * * there are a great many luxurious churches, especially in the wealthiest societies of cities, who do not want poor men as members. When a revival occurs, the question concerning many converts is not, 'Are they soundly Christian?' but 'How much are they worth?' 'What is their social standing?'"

Such utterances may seem too sweeping to some, but a limited observation leads me to believe that Worcester and Boston, at least, can sit for the picture drawn. "On the floor of God's house he is tallest who is nearest to God."

Persons interested in the kingdom of heaven will find pleasure in reading the following snatches: "The church for the times will emphasize the hidden half of Christian unity; will ascertain what hinders individuals from accepting Christianity; will teach church members to give a reason for the faith that is in them; will prepare for revivals; will protect the fruit of revivals; will make religion a personal matter."

It is certain that there are grave faults in the present administration of religious work, and that the duty is laid upon all who are devoted to the interests of Christ's kingdom to look closely to their methods and aims.

Ex-Governor St. John had a most enthusiastic reception in Boston and conducted himself in a manner creditable to the great cause which he represents. Distinguished temperance advocates united to do him honor, and the assembly is said to have risen to a height of enthusiasm not common to Boston dignity. At a meeting in Worcester, over which our temperance mayor, Mr. Hildreth, presided, there was a large attendance and a demonstrative reception of the ex-Governor's speech. I have heard few speeches in New England so powerfully effective as his.

Not the least noticeable feature of the address was the constant Christian sentiment to which he gave utterance. We could not fail to be impressed with the speaker's evident honesty and sincerity. "Men, don't play cards. I never knew any good to come of card-playing," was a sample remark interjected in the midst of an effective description of a young man whose ruin commenced with card-playing in a saloon and ended with a murder in the same saloon.

Just now the Masonic fraternity is greatly exercised over a formidable rebellion in the camp. Five members of the Supreme Council were expelled recently but they did not acquiesce cheerfully in their fate and proceeded to inaugurate a movement of their own. They have set up a new jurisdiction and are conferring the degrees from the third to the thirty-third in a single evening and charging only $15! Their speculation is successful and the older lodges are very indignant. Word is sent forth from New Haven, where the new council is operating, that "great indignation prevails among higher degree Masons here and elsewhere in the State"

In Connecticut the Grand Lodge recognizes these new Masons up to the third degree but beyond that they propose to scare them out if possible. In Massachusetts the new work is wholly repudiated and anybody having anything to do with them forfeits all his rights and privileges.

It will not be long before it will generally be understood that the N. C. A. can furnish 33° for $2 and save all expense of regalia, besides the disgrace of initiation!

Mr. Spaulding is now making a tour of southern Connecticut with the intention of reaching Hartford for the State convention. He will work also in the vicinity of Hartford before the meeting.

Bro. O. C. Bailey goes to Spencer Wednesday night where he has arranged for a lecture and from there he will go to Connecticut to work in some of the larger towns near Hartford until the opening of the convention.

We learn also that Elder Barlow has gone to Litchfield county, hoping to lecture on the reform.

We are much gratified at the prospect of having President J. Blanchard at the Connecticut convention. There are old men among our friends who may never again have an opportunity to see the man whose pen has so often delighted them in the columns of the Cynosure.

Let no friend be absent from the Connecticut meeting. We owe it to the cause to be present. I am looking for an extra good meeting and for results which will delight our hearts. E. D. BAILEY.

—Joseph Cook, in a late lecture, spoke on Christian missions, presenting "the most important facts which exhibit our present duty towards the Christian missions throughout the world." There are, he said, three hundred millions of women now on this planet who have only the Buddhist hope of being born again as men instead of toads or snakes. There are eighty millions of women in Moslem harems. There are uncounted millions of men and women and children growing up in the most degraded superstitions, and suffering in mind, body and estate from inherited pagan customs. In the name of mere philanthropy and secular prudence Christian missions ought to receive a support, immediate, abundant, permanent, unflinching. His Buddhist figures are undoubtedly too large—not larger than much respected authorities give, but obtained by the illegitimate method of counting all the inhabitants of Japan, China, etc., as Buddhists. Still, the facts are sad enough, with whatever needful revision. He said that the Christian churches of the world should be satisfied with nothing less than sending out one ordained missionary for every 50,000 of the accessible pagan population of the world; and no church ought to call itself thoroughly aggressive and evangelical that does not expend for the support of missions at least one dollar for every five it expends on itself. At present the size of the accessible population of the world is increasing out of all proportion to the increasing missionary funds and laborers.

11. Acts 7: 54-60: 8: 1-4.—The First Christian Martyr.—"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life" (Rev. 2: 10).

ODD-FELLOWS, NOTICE!

An advertising leaflet is in circulation calling attention to "A Guide to the Unwritten Work" from which we take the following extract:

A GUIDE TO THE UNWRITTEN WORK.

This book is made necessary from the fact that there is now in circulation what is claimed to be "Correct Exposition of the Order." This exposition is being sent all over the country, and members of the order are making it a text-book, for the purpose of gaining a perfect knowledge of the various charges, lectures, and other information which is essential to a well posted Odd-fellow.

We have only to say that it is unquestionably wrong for members of the order to purchase, or have in their possession, a book which claims to publish to the world at large the secrets of the order.

In presenting "The Guide to the Unwritten Work" to the fraternity, we feel assured that no Odd-fellow who consults it can make a mistake, or be deceived by those who have obtained their information from the exposition.

The characters are easily understood by any member who has heard the work, and it is impossible for any person to decipher the work beyond the degree he has obtained; therefore the book is perfectly safe in the hands of any person, as far as exposing the secrets of the order is concerned.

The Key to the work is very simple, and is as follows: The first letter of each word is given to represent the word.

This book should be in the possession of every lodge as a protection from imposters who have gained a knowledge of the order through the exposition, and in the hands of every member also, as an assistant to perfect themselves in the unwritten work. Members who are taking the degrees would find it an indispensible help. It is virtually a Grand Instructor; one that you can always have in your possession, ready at all times to exemplify the unwritten work.

To prevent the possibility of loss in transit through the mails, we have concluded to register all books ordered, and we guarantee the safe delivery of every book.

From the above statements we must confess we have no need of it as long as the "unwritten work" is credited with being so well "written" in the exposition.

This undoubtedly is on a competitive line with the "Correct Exposition of the Order," but we feel assured that the latter will win, because it is not in cipher, and hence much easier to the average Odd. Now we hope the brethren will not be duped into buying a "blind guide" when an open one can be obtained for half its cost. Besides, this "blind guide" is going to work untold damage to the craft by augmenting what it is intended to destroy; for there are plenty of Antis who are unprincipled enough to get this "blind guide," and comparing the "Correct Exposition" with it, will prove the "exposition" "correct," and the Scriptures will be fulfilled. If the blind lead the blind they will both fall in the ditch. We are in favor of the craft posting themselves, but why buy a "guide" to a correct written work? We must be true to the order though we offend the publishers. We fear the scheme is for money, instead of serving the interests of benevolence."

Priest and People.—The ancient Jews had a saying that "So long as there is a diadem on the head of a priest, there is a crown on the head of every man. Remove the diadem from the head of the high-priest, and you take away the crown from the head of all the people."

In the same way it can be said, so long as there is the Masonic hood-wink on the eyes of clergymen, the eyes of the people will be morally blind. Take away the hood-wink from the clergyman, and the people will be restored to their sight. Every man will then have a crown of independence upon his head, and be a royal priest, knowing right from wrong.

Correspondence.

"THEIR OWN BUSINESS."

Detroit, Mich.

The last Advance (Feb. 22,) contains these words, concerning Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship: "We should be far from raising any cry against them so long as they attend to their own business."

Now will the Advance be so kind as to tell us what is "the business" of these societies that he calls "their own?" Their roll call summons to the front hundreds of thousands of men! Pray, Bro. Advance, what is their business? If you do not know for sure what it is, are you sure that no cry should be raised against them. And if you do know, from the thousands who have left them of the present men on earth, do you not know that as a public teacher you ought to raise a cry against them? After seven years earnest inquiry and study John Q. Adams declared that one of these institutions is "a conspiracy of the few against the equal rights of the many." So said Dr. Colver and Pres. Finney who had been Masons. Their business therefore is to perpetuate, strengthen and extend this conspiracy against which you, O Advance, have no cry to utter." Why, you might as well and as properly announce to the world that you have no cry to utter against rattlesnakes, so long as they attend to their own business; or against swindlers or blasphemers or his brimstone majesty himself,—so long as these attend to their own business! I protest that by the demonstration of logic there is no escape from this inference.

Let these hateful combinations alone in their wickedness! Then let all sin alone. A society that introduces its proselytes into its august presence with their pantaloons off, ropes around their necks and blinders over their eyes; and that administers ent throat oaths not to tell outsiders of their nakedness and shame; that compells them on bended knees to hear mock prayers; that promises a heaven without a Christ; that places the precious and the vile on a common level, here and hereafter; that quadruples the dose as the miserable dupes advance along the crumbling brink of final damnation, be let alone by a Christian paper! May the dear Lord in pity open the eyes of the editor who ignores one of the most flagrant abominations of the age we live in to see their own sin, as well as the sin of secret oath-bound conspiracies.

C. C. Foote.

ANOTHER WORD FOR THE ADVANCE TO PONDER.

Wheaton College, Feb. 7, 1883.

Editor Cynosure:—The new editor of the Advance has spoken, and his speech is like to that of one who should condemn utterly the flower and yet approve the fruit, or bid to cherish the tree and yet destroy as poisonous both flower and fruit.

After commending the effort to destroy college secret societies, the good editor seems to imply that the great effort to maintain them is limited to "some persons" who "are determined that our State Universities shall foster, if not maintain, secret societies." He ought to know that a large number of the Christian colleges of the land are absolutely under the hoofs of these dark institutions of which he says, "It would not take much argument or quotation from history to show.....that they are very silly and useless, or very dangerous in our colleges," and that very little, even less than in the State Universities, has been done to have it otherwise.

He refers to the effort to starve Perdue University into supporting these secret orders, and says: "The people of Indiana ought to look to it that their representatives are not controlled by any secret organization whatever." After thus plainly hinting that there are other secret orders besides the ones in question that do, or at least may, influence legislation, he proceeds to approve of the two principal ones, which are the parents of the whole family, as follows: "The Freemasons, Odd-fellows, and other secret organizations have as good a right in this country as any other voluntary association."

Shades of our patriot sires! What shall we look for next when our highest public teachers tell us that the very institutions that they themselves characterize as "silly and useless, or very dangerous in any college," which same with others, they plainly intimate are, or may be, used to control the representatives of the people and, of course, defeat their wishes and destroy their rights, "have as good a right in this country" as the church, the direct effect of whose teachings is to make men careful of the rights of others and obedient to the laws.

He further says, "We should be far from raising any cry against them so long as they attend to their own business, but whenever they undertake to control legislation there ought to be a very swift and effective protest." When the oracle had declared that there was no wiser man than Socrates, that philosopher, after carefully testing the statement, concluded that it meant this: That Socrates was wiser than other men because what he did not know he did not think that he knew.

It may be that our editor knows what is "the business" of an institution that is constructed in layers, each less than the other, and piled above it until you go up thirty-three degrees, and yet each lower one is sworn to obey without question the one above it; and all sworn to deceive any outsider as to its real business. There is an old fashioned book which, by the way, expressly forbids the very kind of swearing by which these several strata are sought to be separated from each other, and all, from outsiders. This says "by their fruits ye shall know them." If we thus test this mighty, mysterious power that works (as did not the Christian's Master) in secret, and assures all outsiders, whom it calls profane cowans, that they can know nothing of its business, we may find unmistakable facts going to show that effects like those observed in the Indiana legislature constitute a part of that mysterious business. The members of these secret orders are but a very small fraction of all the voters in the country, and yet in the way of their "business" they manage to hold three-fourths of all the offices. The legislature of Indiana is an exception to the bodies of its kind if it is not packed, by a small minority of the voters of that State, with their fellows, the fore-sworn subjects of this secret empire, whose business they know themselves sworn to do, not the business of those who elected them.

But we are told these are not political organizations. He has studied the workings of civic organizations to but little purpose who does not know that they all become political when they can, by so doing, effect their particular ends or purposes, and that their temptation, and therefore their tendency to become so, are increased in proportion as their methods of working are removed from the observation of, and responsibility to, the masses. The Advance editor has come to see "men as trees walking;" let us pray that he may yet come to see that institutions the loyalty of the mass of whose members, if they keep oaths which they recognize as binding, hangs suspended upon the word of one man, or, at most, a very few men, have not as good right to the protection of government as others that have no such obligations. O. F. Lumry.

UNDERMINING FAITH.

Prof. Swing delivered a rather remarkable sermon on the 4th of March from the text "Search the Scriptures for in them ye think ye have eternal life."

He virtually declares large portions of Scripture to be of pagan origin; and affirming that eminent Christian scholars have cast doubt upon parts of the sacred volume, he looks abroad upon pagan teachings apparently regarding his favorites Socrates and Plato and other teachers as entitled, in due time, to have their true teachings bound up in the world's great bible. Meantime, however, the Bible as it stands is an excellent book made up of the floating atoms of the teachings of the past religions of the world, having attracted the best of each to itself, and like the sun, forms the revolving centre of attraction for the scattered thoughts of man concerning his religious duties. But let the Christian keep Jesus before him as the best life of faith to be imitated, and accept all other teachings, pagan or otherwise, which may be found to harmonize with Christ's character and teachings. For there is enough left of divine in the Bible to lead men aright even although it must have lost much that might have been valuable if man has been 10,000 or 15,000 years upon the earth!

We have not found in this discourse any encouragement to, nor recognition of, the great truth that "God spake to the fathers by the prophets and in these last days by the Son, the heir of all things, and by whom he shall judge the world." We find no allusion to the claim of Scripture as having been "given by inspiration of God," and hence to its absolute authority over man; but rather it is an outcome of benevolence from the "God of Nature," and that Moses and those prophets who wrote of Jesus were merely common or uncommon men like those of former generations; and that even Jesus is only a good man worthy of imitation and highest esteem, whose teachings being true, can't be improved upon, and are an end of thought morally, as two and two being four are an end to that fact in numbers. Yes, Christ gave the highest formula of piety so that "if you think" of love, or of intercession, or of forgiveness, or of a second existence, Christ taught them all, and he said, "I am the resurrection and the life." The Bible of the world is perhaps as finished as it will be! Curiosity prompts us to ask for more, but the "God of Nature" does not attempt to dispel all mystery. There will, however, be improved interpretations of the great masters who flourished in the time of Christ!

The "itching ears" were, we should think, abundantly tickled by such a grand display of philosophical eloquence over the atomic remnants of the ancient paganisms centralized into the modern Bible. How wise we are to appreciate these gems and relics so highly! How comforting to the devotees of ancient Masonry! But while we value these relics of past religions when burnished up so brightly by Jesus Christ, let us still be on the look out for improvements, not that two and two can ever make five, nor that we can ever discover anything better than to love God and our neighbor, but we can have new tunes over the old octaves, and "The Holy Scriptures will in passing eras receive new interpretations and new ornaments from the human mind as it shall advance in power and love, but this mighty decoration shall uprise upon the foundation laid by those masters who reached their zenith of power in the period of Christ."

And thus he closed. But where was the "Eternal Life" of the text set forth? Oh for that simple gospel which is the power of God unto salvation as taught by the fishermen of Galilee or the apostle Paul! Oh for a finger to point to the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world! Oh for some one to preach "Jesus and the Resurrection!" Also for the "tinkling brass and sounding "cimbals" and high sounding words of such popular teachers! Do they not undermine the faith that our Bible is inspired of God, and do they not substitute the pleasant play of fancy and imagination for that faith and trust and peace of God in the heart which reposes in the spotless Son of God as the only name given under heaven whereby mankind must be saved? Clear as Professor Swing's head may be on metaphysical, scientific, or historical questions, his testimony seems quite deficient in that heart warmth which is found by the repentant sinner who sees in Christ that Saviour in whom he is complete and who of God is made unto him "wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption." T. H.

MASONIC GLOSSARY.

[Found in "Scottish Rite, Masonry," p. 582.]

It may be interesting to many readers of the Cynosure to know that in the system of Masonry, adapted to the upper-tendom of the craft, including professors, clergymen, D.D's. and L.L. D's., many of the most common words in our language have to be used with a special and outlandish meaning. A glossary is therefore needed of some thirty words to guide these sapients how to ask for coffee, wine, whisky, mustard, etc. A few examples are quoted:

"Barrel—Decanter or bottle."
"Black powder—Coffee."
"Black flour—Pepper, black."
"Cannon—Glass or cup."
"Cement—Mustard."
"Fire—To drink."
"Fulminating powder—Beer, ale," etc.
"Powder—Any liquid."
"Red powder—Wine."
"Sand—Salt."
"Strong powder—Spirituous liquor."
"Shovel- Spoon."
"Trowel—Spoon."
"White powder—Water."
"Work shop—Table."

Is not this the 33rd degree of foolery? This is elite Masonry. The summit of the sublime ancient accepted Scottish Rite. These magnates are above using any vulgarity. Cowans could pronounce mustard and feel and give no shock to refined society, but a 33-degree "sapiens" must say "cement." But the grave reasons for this change of the sense of words. Suppose one of these sublimes should want wine or spirituous liquor, then he could say "red powder" or "strong powder." He could also call for a decanter or a bottle by asking for a "barrel." After a six-hour revel, such as these knights of the decanter are used to, the "white powder" would be in good demand to quench the 33-degree fever. Surely a minister of the gospel must feel his cloth in such an exalted conclave. Such ministers need the D.D. as their divinity does need the doctor. Nathan Callender.

HAND IN HAND.

Bro. E. J. Clemens, of Clayville, N. Y., who has known from personal insight something of the lodge affairs beyond the tyler:

"I love the Cynosure and the cause of the reform. I fairly devour the contents of the paper, and read with intense anxiety the reports of the brethren in the field. I shall rejoice to see Masonry come down and will use my influence to the utmost to aid the reform. I scatter tracts, my paper and books, all I can, and back them up with my own testimony, having worn the cable-tow and been made a fool of generally for nothing but to be a stool pigeon to catch the unwary. But I am able now to do more good than if I had never seen the inside."

A Kansas sister, Mrs. J. C. J., marked the words, "Are Women turned Cowards?" in a late editorial on the temperance work of the woman's unions and the insinuating policy of the secret lodges to gain every advantage through the temperance movement. She replies:

"No; but we have been standing afar off weeping while men were crucifying Christ afresh. But he will rise again more glorious than ever. We have three cheering words, 'Be of good courage.' The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner. We will not keep silence. We shall not build and another inhabit. We shall not plant and another eat. Our labor will not be in vain. 'I will hear, saith the Lord.' 'We are perplexed but not in despair.' We have the same spirit of faith. We believe and therefore speak; 'knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus.' Dear sisters of Kansas, rejoice in hope, be patient in tribulation, continue instant in prayer. O God strengthen our hands. Like Esther, we will see our people free from bondage. Haman (Freemasonry) will be hanged on the gallows he has prepared for Mordecai."

Another daughter of Kansas, yet, we should judge, a school girl at Sabetha, gives this as an experience in the search for knowledge, manifesting a humble but landable ambition:

"I do not agree with the poet that we should 'Drink deep or touch not the Pierian Spring;' for some may never have the opportunities for obtaining an education that others have. Shallow draughts may intoxicate the brain when it is shallow, but I think a shallow draught is better than none at all. When he spoke of drinking deep, he must have had a very faint idea of the infinity of knowledge. He certainly could not have realized how shallow a draught could be taken by the most favored. Some may have but one talent, yet I do not consider it a sufficient reason for laying it away in a napkin. Let us rather improve our opportunities for self-culture, and make some corner of the world a little brighter and better for our living, though we may never take our places among earth's great ones."

A Wheaton student has been examining the reasons for objecting to the lodge and speaks thus of the result:

"I think that the following propositions can not be successfully refuted, namely, that Freemasonry is a false religion, it defeats justice, it destroys the spirituality of the church, it debases men, it robs families and kills the soul. To be a false religion there must be a true one, and the true religion is made manifest by divine revelation. This same religion distinctly says, 'He that entereth not by the door into the sheep fold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.' Now the only door to the sheep fold is Christ, and if we attempt to get in by way of Freemasonry, or any other than the straight way, we are held in the light of thieves and robbers.

The French Freemasons are to be commended for the honesty of their present position in issuing an order to strike the name of God from their ritual. This unscreens the atheistic and idolatrous curse, and presents it in its true light. It is a noticable fact that the church of today contains very few young men. This is accounted for by the large percentage of young men who are lured into the secret societies. A certain town in Massachusetts whose churches had not a single young man among their members, yet mustered five hundred young men to march in a procession of Knight Templars. This illustrates the dreadful power of secret organizations."

Bro. D. Van Deventer, of Delavan, Ill., writes as though having once borne the galling yoke of the lodge. He makes an appeal to a brother in the flesh, who is yet entangled in that bondage, which should bring to a serious consideration of this evil:

"When you and I were made Masons we were taught lies for truth, and fiction for historical facts. Before we took the obligation we were assured it would not conflict with our duties as Christians or citizens. I have not found it so. Speculative Masonry, which is now only 166 years old, has denied Christ as being too much of a sectarian, and teaches salvation by the use of the gavel and the recognition of a Supreme Being, whose being is undefined and undefinable from a Masonic standpoint; hence, its religious character is simply idolatrous and unchristian. Can you, my brother (I never can again), bow in mock religious service, giving aid and comfort both with money and influence to the worship of a plurality of gods? How can you, as a Christian, belong to a band of men that make prominent in all their lodges "the point within a circle," which has its religious origin in the dark dens of heathen idolatry, and was an object of worship! As to the binding character of the oath, I presume it is true that most Masons take the obligation on the assurance that it will not conflict with his duties as a Christian or a citizen. This assurance being false, it nullifies the obligation, and if some master of a lodge should say, "perjured villian," I would retort by saying, Lying villian! You lied to get the hoodwink over my eyes and the cable-tow around my body, that I might be compelled to bow and worship at the shrine of an unknown god, or adore the substitute for the last member of Osiris with its additional vulgarity. You taught me lies for truth and falsehood for historical fact till I was sick and disgusted. If there is one useful truth that is purely Masonic, either social, moral, historical or scientific, taught in the Masonic lodge, calculated to make one wiser or better, I fail to remember it. If, on the other hand, they are wicked and dishonest in their teachings, setting forth error for truth (which I now know they do), then the sooner they are exposed as false teachers the better it will be for the world."

FARM NOTES FOR THE SEASON.

Correcting Sour Soils.—The following interesting facts relating to the correcting of sour soils will be of more than usual interest just now. The capabilities of soils and their improvement are receiving more attention than heretofore. This interest will, undoubtedly, be kept up, if for no other reason than that as population increases, more will be expected from the land.

In some portions of Northern Ohio, great injury was done to the land by mixing the subsoil with the surface soil in plowing. In one instance, in a large fertile field where the soil was a black, fine, silicious mould, in many places where "cat swamps" had existed, the plow pierced deposits of bog iron ore and oxide of manganese, which were broken up and mingled with the soil. Afterwards the attept was made to re-seed this field to cultivated grasses, but repeated trials were unsuccessful, and the grass would not grow. The only crop was field sorrel. Chemistry suggested the application of lime and ashes; and one belt across the field was treated with lime and another with ashes. The field was again seeded. A heavy crop of grass came on the two belts, while the rest remained sorrel. The remainder was covered with lime, and all the sorrel disappeared. This was over twenty years ago, and the field has remained very productive ever since.

Neatness about the Farm.—There is a decided improvement to be noticed in the degree of tidiness around farm houses now-a-days. The lawn, of more or less extent, is often seen with flowering shrubs and blooming plants, enclosed by a tight fence to make safe from fowls and larger depredators.

It is by attending to little matters like these that content comes to the wife and children. There is something to take the attention from their daily work; something to give them pleasure. Good walks leading to the house should be made during the summer or fall. A few evergreen and other trees planted at intervals of a few rods, would further add to the appearance, in fact boulevarding the front of your farm; it would be pleasanter for pedestrians than having to walk on a dusty or perhaps a muddy road. It would also enhance the value of the property in case of sale. How pretty the boulevards look on the main avenues of our cities; the roads in front or along your farms can be made to look just as pretty, and at the cost of only a little trouble.

Use Ripe Plump Grains for Seed.—Last year a Michigan farmer sowed the plumpest and fairest grains, carefully selected from his choicest Clawson wheat, and now, the second season, has harvested an acre which for size and evenness he never saw equalled. That grown from average seed of the same variety, in the same kind of soil, lacks much of the uniformity which characterizes the other field." There is nothing wonderful in this report. Every observing farmer knows that the best and ripest and plumpest seed always produces the largest crop. It is to be regretted that any farmer should be so careless or shiftless as to sow inferior or foul seed, when, by the exercise of a little care, he could secure the best, and thereby largely increase his crop.—Kansas Farmer.

A Whitewash Equal to Paint.—The following receipe for whitewash, sent out of the Treasury Department to all the light-house keepers, makes an article that answers on wood, brick or stone nearly as well as oil paint, and is much cheaper. Slack half a bushel of unslacked lime with boiling water, keeping it covered during the process. Strain it and add a peck of salt, dissolve in warm water, three pounds of ground rice put into boiling water and boiled to a thin paste, half a pound of powdered Spanish whiting and a pound of clear glue, dissolved in warm water; mix these well together, and let the mixture stand for several days. Keep the wash thus prepared in a kettle or portable furnace and when used put it in hot with either painters' or whitewash brushes.

Whitewash that will Stick and Wash.—We find in a German paper a formula for a wash which can be applied to lime walls and afterward become waterproof, so as to bear washing. Resenschek, of Munich, mixes together the powder from three parts silicious rock (quartz), three parts broken marble and sandstone; also two parts of burned porcelain clay, two parts freshly-slacked lime, still warm. In this way a wash is made which forms a silicate if often wetted, and becomes after a time almost like stone. The four constituents mixed together give the ground-color, to which any pigment that can be used with lime is added. It is applied quite thickly to the wall or other surface, let dry one day, and the next day frequently cover with water, which makes it water-proof.

This wash can be cleansed with water without losing any of its color; on the contrary, each time it gets harder, so that it can be brushed, while its porosity makes it look soft. The wash, or calcimine, can be used for ordinary purposes as well as for the finest painting. A so-called fresco surface can be prepared with it in the dry way.

Wheat-growing Maxims.—Somebody has been at the trouble of condensing a great deal of information about wheat-growing, as follows, in very small compass, and somebody else has set it afloat without giving credit to the author:

1. The best soil for wheat is rich clay loam.
2. Wheat likes a good, deep, soft bed.
3. Clover turned under makes just such a bed.
4. The best seed is oily, heavy, plump and clean.
5. About two inches is the best depth for sowing the seed.
6. The drill puts in the seed better and cheaper than broadcasting.
7. From the middle of September to the last of October is the best time for sowing.
8. Drilled, one bushel of seed per acre; if sown broadcast, two bushels per acre.
9. One heavy rolling after sowing does much good.
10. For flour, cut when the grain begins to harden; for seed, not until it is hardened.

Clay Soils.—A writer in an exchange, who has farmed a clay soil very successfully, among other things, says:

"Fall wheat does remarkably well on our soil; better than I have seen produced on any other, often yielding as much as forty bushels per acre, and of good quality. This year I have raised fifteen acress of oats on an old farm near me, which yielded an average of thirty-five bushels per acre. I had ninety square rods planted to potatoes, from which I dug sixty-one bushels of potatoes, fifty-one bushels of which were large enough for market, and were worth $1.25 per bushel. My corn mostly was on new breaking, and the yield was shortened by the extreme dry weather."

Cultivating too much Land.—The farmer who has more land than he can profitably look after, should not be slow in parting with some of it. There is no greater clog to a man than to have an incessant call for some work to be done which he feels he cannot do. There is no question but that fifty acres is often more profitable to a man than one hundred.

The overflowing of the Mississippi is forcing the planters along its courses to work less land, and it will likely be to their profit to do so. A large number of planters have been curtailed of their resources of labor. The destruction of stock, and demoralization, as well as lessened amount and numbers of laborers, force him to employ what means are left, so that they have to be utalized to the best possible extent. The better cultivation the small acres will receive will certainly result in better crops, and will practically demonstrate to the workers which of the two plans is the best to follow.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1883.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

WASHINGTON HEADQUARTERS, N. C. A., }
No. 215 4½ St., N. W., Mar. 5, '83. }

The Cynosure readers will be anxious to know the "who" as well as the "what" of our Washington movement; for buildings and corporations have no souls. MEN are what make a movement.

MR. MILTON FORD,

who superintends and sees to every thing about renovating the building where I write, was born in New York but reared in Trumbull county, Ohio. Like the writer he learned to drive oxen on a farm; and, like Garfield, he went from his father's farm to the Ohio canal. When only 21, he had got into business in the forest county of Warren in Pennsylvania, where lumber was floated down the Allegheny river by water but propelled by whisky. When the "Four-days' meetings," inaugurated by the Finney revivals, had come into fashion, Mr. Ford, who had a general belief in the Bible, but no personal religion, was induced to attend one of those revival meetings held by evangelists, who at that day, "went everywhere preaching the Word." He was converted to Christ. He had laid in plenty of liquor for the "spring trade." No one objected. Every store sold it. But he, unconsciously to himself, began to wish his customers would not call for it. And after some while, his uneasiness all the while increasing, he took the matter to God in prayer; and, with no word or advice from any one, constructed a cold water platform for himself, on which he has stood ever since.

He was an Abolitionist by his moral nature. When the war broke out Mr. Ford offered to enlist, but was rejected, though hale and able-bodied, because he was fifty-eight years old. When Lee started North he literally left his hoe standing in the field and set out for Meade's army. He went to the colonel of the regiment, who was his neighbor, and receiving a gun took his place in the ranks, too late to reach the battle of Gettysburg, but went on with Lee's pursuers. Lee's was an able retreat. He entrenched with great skill and covered his rear with two thousand determined men who kept his camp-fires burning while his main army fled in the night where forced marches could not possibly overtake them.

His campaign over, Mr. Ford returned to his family and home.

Now it was his boys' turn. The youngest had become of military age and both enlisted. Their father would gladly have gone with them. The younger, Albert, was shot the second day's battle of the Wilderness. Charles, the elder, was taken prisoner; kept for a time at Bellisle, and transferred to Salisbury, whence he brought away his life, after six horrid months in that place. Before his full recovery he was ordered again into the ranks. Albert was dead; Charles was the only son left. Mr. Ford accompanied his boy to camp near Annapolis. He obtained leave to march by his son's side, carry his knapsack and gun and lie down on the ground at night by his side. There are a few instances recorded in history, one even among Indians, where a father has offered to die in place of a son. This marching and countermarching by the side of his sick son forcibly brought some of those instances to mind, also some not dissimilar passages in my own history while in the Rocky mountains with my own son Charles. It reminds one of that love which is stronger than death. Mr. Ford's son Charles still lives.

The book "Jachin and Boaz" whose author was found dead with his throat cut and tongue torn out in the streets of London, was published some ten or fifteen years after stone-masonry was turned into a false religion at the Apple-tree tavern in London, in 1717. John Wesley says in his "Journal" that he read it somewhere about 1740. This book was put out semi-clandestinely in this country, and a copy strayed into the woods of Cuyahoga county, Ohio, and fell into the hands of Mr. Ford, who was not yet of age, with the charge to return it carefully, as Freemasons destroyed every copy they could seize, no matter who owned it. The book, which I saw many years ago, is a correct expose of Masonry as far as it goes. Awhile after reading it Mr. Ford made the sign of an Entered Apprentice to a Mason, who instantly responded, so that Mr. Ford knew that the book was correct. And when, soon after, Morgan's exposition, abduction and death occurred, he was already convinced, and voted and acted as an Anti-mason.

When he came to Washington, as a consistent Christian man, he and his faithful and firm wife, joined their respective churches. Mr. Ford united with the First Presbyterian church where he is still a respected member. On becoming acquainted with Secretary Stoddard he embarked in this Washington enterprize with a zeal and judgment which are admirable. He gives his time and toil without stint to the renovation of the building. He will donate money if a hall is built. Without being a partizan he has taken a profound interest in American politics and Congressional action, and seems, in short, raised up and qualified to help "lay the foundations of many generations." He is orthodox without bigotry; no worshiper of familiar spirits, though such worshipers abound here; and he is charitable to the erring though no errorist himself. "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

THE ROMAN QUESTION.

We learn from Harper's Weekly that the New York House of Refuge, after sixty years of peaceful unsectarian usefulness, is likely to be entered by Catholic priests; and that the poor children who are brought up by their parents in crime, "are to be made to follow the religion of their parents."

It is the opinion of that able sheet (Harper's) that, —"the rapid growth and great influence of the Roman Catholic charities, schools, colleges, convents, churches and asylums is one of the chief dangers of our political future. They are wholly undemocratic. They teach the dullest form of European conservatism and the love of rank, caste and barbaric titles and dignities, robes and decorations, that are dying out in Europe itself. Within their mediæval depths, there is no room for republicanism, yet they are fed by enormous subsidies from a republican people." And the Weekly goes on to give the "enormous" sums paid yearly by republicans for the overthrow of republicanism.

Yet what shall we do? If we put opposition to the Papacy into our political platform, the Roman Catholic masses cannot be made to distinguish between "the Catholic church," which stood nearly five centuries before there was any Papacy, and the Papacy itself, which disfigures and debases it. Nay! even the Society of Jesus, which now runs the Romish church, has been suppressed by "infallible" Popes and never had an existence till the church which it defiles had stood fifteen hundred years! Yet the unreading, superstitious masses, bewitched by the sorceries which Ignatius Loyola learned by night in the cave of Enresa, now mistake the new or "the Holy Catholic church," for the church itself. And the reading, thinking Catholics, hopeless of struggling against the masses, are borne along by their current.

Besides, the mass of the Protestant churches are penetrated and falsified by the infiltration of human traditions and rites, and so presents a disgusting and mottled front. And their "progressive theology" has "pitched toward Sodom." On the contrary the clearest, soundest conceptions of Christian doctrine are contained in Roman Catholic writers like Prof. Claudio Jannet of the Roman Catholic University of Paris. That strong writer says: "The whole order of society is based by Christianity on God and his Son and revelation; while Freemasonry bases morals itself on national reason, which France, at least, has tried and failed." The whole work of Prof. Jannet is worthy of translation and study.

The Independent Catholic churches, springing up in Italy, Canada and the United States, and the whole communes in France which welcome Protestant preaching, all betray an unrest of mind in the Romish communion; and show that electric light is penetrating through the Jesuit covering, down to the toiling, believing, sincere masses, who must, if we believe the Scriptures,

"Arouse from their slumbers
And hail the new day."

J. B.

ATTENTION, SIR KNIGHTS!

A cry of distress and fearful foreboding comes from "Right Eminent B. B. Lee, Grand Commander of Knights Templar of California." Dread apprehensions of a repetition of the disgraceful orgies and malignant swindles of 1880, by the conclave at Chicago haunt his dreams and torment his waking hours. In the January Voice of Masonry he utters a wail of deep significance, and then beseechingly adds: "Why should we attempt a grand display; overcrowd our city, and permit our business men to fleece the strangers within our gates? Why should we seek all this and be compelled to hang our heads in sorrow, as did those valiant Knights of Chicago."

It is vain to talk of groundless fears with the history and memory of Chicago's high carnival still fresh in our minds. It is needless to speak of Clark street "bucket shops" reveling in their business during the stay of "our magnanimous order;" a simple reference to the Tribune of Aug. 22, 1880, for an account of the sales of intoxicating liquor is sufficient. Says the Tribune: "One large establishment on Monroe street sold an average of over $1,000 a day, for four days, over the counter, and $1,500 in one day in the wholesale department, to Templars. Their branch establishments report an increase over regular business of nearly $500 for the same period." The same paper reports an aggregate of over $1,000,000 in sales of liquor during the conclave.

With these facts staring him in the face and with a personal knowledge obtained on the ground, the Grand Commander of our chivalrous order may well take the alarm. Every temperance and chaste member, for such there must be in "our noble order," must extend his heartfelt sympathies to a brother whose jurisdiction is in imminent danger of being scourged with such a fearful calamity. And now we ask, "Is there no help for the widow's son?" Can "the noble and magnanimous order," composed of valiant men who have vowed to "defend the Christian religion with their swords," and have sealed their oath by "drinking pure wine from a human skull," do nothing in response to this piteous cry of distress. It is true you vow to "protect destitute widows and innocent virgins," but is there no possibillity by which the broad and philanthropic mantle of your prodigious charity may by some means be extended in response to the cries of an agonized brother? To break your solemn vow would be awful, but is there no relief under the "covenant?"

ANNUAL MEETING IN JUNE, 1883.

Reforms are like ships in the polar seas, that have to be pushed out through narrow channels into open water, or be crushed by surrounding icebergs. A few brave men must do the work. It is not always pleasant but it must be done or the crew frozen and cargo lost. The anti-secrecy reform is still in the straits of unpopularity but headed toward the open sea and making some progress in that direction. The constitution of the National Christian Association requires that there shall be a meeting on the third Thursday in June each year to look over work before us and provide for the year to come. The time is approaching and as there is an unusual amount of business that will require careful attention, friends should begin to think, plan and pray over the matter and arrange their business so as to be present. There should be a larger attendance than ever before, and ample time taken to look carefully into the important transactions of the past and give the work a strong push toward the open sea ahead.

THE POTOMAC FRUIT-GROWERS.

Some years ago a "Potomac Fruit Growers Association" was organized which held an annual summer excursion and picnic at a pleasant retreat down the Potomac. It became so popular that two steamboats have been required to carry the fruit growers and amateurs who made up the crowd. This Association, of which our Mr. Ford is treasurer, held a monthly meeting near our head-quarters night before last; and as the Cynosure is interested in all the social forces working in our national capital, the following from the Daily Critic will not be over-looked:

"Notwithstanding the storm last evening, the Potomac Fruit Growers' Association held their regular monthly meeting at the residence of Dr. E. P. Howland, 211 4½ street N. W. His large parlors were filled, the president, Mr. H. B. Moulton, in the chair, and in the absence of the secretary Dr. Howland was appointed in his stead. After remarks by the president advocating the adoption of instruction in the mechanical and useful arts into our system of public education, Dr. Howland was introduced and made a very interesting address upon the subject of the cause of animal and vegetable decay. Mr. Smith gave a very interesting recitation, also Dr. N. Frank White gave several very fine selections. The Rev. Dr. Blanchard, president of Wheaton College, Ill., made a very interesting and instructive address, particularly referring to his travels in the northwestern part of our country. These meetings are deservedly popular, and always interesting, but never more so than upon this occasion. The next meeting will be held at the residence of Colonel William H. Chase."

— Father Leuty, whose generous donations to the National Christian Association and the Wesleyan denomination will embalm his memory while either exist, made a visit of several days in Chicago and Wheaton last week. He had but just returned from Syracuse where he has been arranging his business interests, and passed on from here to Clarence, Iowa, expecting to also visit Kansas before his return. The proposition of Secretary Stoddard, to put his name upon the Washington building, is a mark of esteem in every way deserved.

—Bro. Hinman writes again from Baltimore, whither he went from Washington on Wednesday last. He has great hope for this city since he has found several colored churches which seem ready to receive the truth. He was quite unwell at the time of writing but hopes to be ready for work again in a day or two.

—Bro. S. E. Starry called at the Cynosure office on his return to Iowa from Washington, bearing words of cheer from the brethren in that city. He stopped also at Wheaton to take a view of the town and people. Having rented his farm and, hoping to enter the field permanently, he wishes to locate his family pleasantly. His call at Wheaton was in view of this purpose.

—A private note from Bro. Dresser of Lindenwood, Ill., says that Daniel Countryman, so long and well known in connection with our reform, is in a very low state, so that he cannot speak above a whisper and cannot be removed from his bed. He is yet very hopeful and full of faith in his risen Saviour.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard, eldest son of the General Secretary, who has become known to many of the Cynosure readers at the book stands at the Galesburg and Batavia National Conventions, has begun a colporteur work in Northern Illinois. If in any community friends would be glad of his assistance in visiting households circulating literature, etc., let them send him word at this office.

—Pres. E. B. White of Perdue University, Lafayette, Indiana, has replied to the insulting action of the State legislature, when voting an appropriation for the University, by resigning. This step was almost forced upon him, but it should be regretted by every true citizen of the State and remembered at the ballot box.

—The Cynosure welcomed to its rooms last week Elder S. Knapp of Joliet, brethren Rhodes of Esmen and Stone of Morrison, Ill.; S. E Starry of Clarence, Iowa; Father Leuty of Ligonier, Ind.; John Dorcas of Shiloh, Iowa; Rev: C. H. Hobart of Aurora; and a number of friends who reside in Chicago and vicinity among them Mr. Carpenter who visited the office on his second venture upon the street since arising from a sick bed.

—Elder H. S. Limbocker, of Manhattan, Kansas, sends us an interesting item from the Morgan times:

"An elderly Christian gentleman in this place by the name of Castle told me his older brother was a Mason at the time of the Morgan murder, and was one of the number that was detailed to fire Miller's printing office in Batavia. He left the lodge immediately, and is now dead. This gentleman was in Oberlin in the time of President Finney's first battles against secretism there."

—Through a friend in this city Rev. Mr. Power of Washington City has directed to the Cynosure a reply to our first Washington letter from Mr. Bowes. Mr. Power is entitled to a correction in respect to his attendance at the Masonic Veteran Association banquet. He attended it is true as a Mason, although Albert Pike himself was at the head of the table, but left when the wine came in; and he also objects to the terms "uproarious time." As a temperance man he could not participate longer, although the only protest of which we are aware is his withdrawal. He must remember that his relations to the late President Garfield place him in a peculiar position before the whole country, and though as chaplain of the House, his temptations may be great at public banquets, yet it would greatly rejoice multitudes of those whose good wishes he may well esteem, should his testimony be more emphatic against the drinking habit at such times. As he was absent during the latter part of this banquet, Mr. Bowes' information of the "uproarious time" from the press report is still entitled to some credit. Mr. Power thinks the Cynosure as much responsible as the Masons for the French ball in a building owned by a Masonic Hall Association, chartered by Congress after that body had twice refused (in 1844 and 1851) to charter the lodge itself, but obtained recognition in law by this disguise. We hardly agree with him.

THE NEXT STEP TO BE TAKEN.

From the first I apprehended vigorous opposition to the introduction of the anti-lodge work in Washington In some things I have been happily disappointed. There are more friends and a better spirit on the part of the city press than I had anticipated. It is very evident that the field is not only important, but a hopeful one. Judiciously managed, it will not be wanting in practical results, and that, too, at an early day. Our mission, as it seems to me, is to build up and display the truth, and make the lodge system of deception and fraud doubly hateful in its appearance by contrast. Set the two side by side and turn on the light, and the man who would deliberately choose the abominations, despotism and idolatry of Baal's religion and government before the "Bride of Christ" and a free Republic, must be totally depraved and irretrievably lost to even shame or self-interest. Erect a tower, light a beacon on its summit, and multitudes will flock around it; some from the caverns of the lodge will repent and, like other sinners, renounce their sins and labor as young and zealous converts. If we begin right and keep right we may expect a glorious revival in Washington to spread through the whole land. But the foundation must be laid on bed-rock if we would make sure of success. Build up from the bottom is the one safe rule, and in this case the first point is standing room. Unless our cause is entrenched and fortified upon ground where the Government is bound to redeem its "warrantee" of possession and protection to peaceful and law-abiding occupants, it will suffer serious loss. Bro. Starry's ejection from the hall hired to expose the third degree of Freemasonry in, is ominous of what may be expected when the issue is fairly joined. Timidity or positive aversion, backed by the secret empire, will close every public hall in Washington that is not founded in anti-secrecy, against a candid and truthful expose of the "things that are done of them in secret." Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, Milton Ford, and other observing, judicious men saw this, and declined to embark in a "skirmish," but were desirous to aid in making a permanent stand, and cordially and ably sustain the effort to establish quarters at the capital from which to move out upon the whole country. Others who have carefully considered the matter entertain the same views, and there is a wonderful unaminity among our most successful and far-seeing friends.

Let us have a home for our principles and a place to advocate them in Washington is the unanimous voice of those whose expressions on the subject have reached me. There is one way to do it, and that is just the same way as you obtain property for any other purpose, viz.: buy and pay for it. The first has already been done. The property is bought, but it will not stay bought unless it is paid for, any more than your own house, farm, or factory will remain in your quiet, peaceful possession under mortgage. This is the next thing to do. Your organ is now established at headquarters, and its circulation is gradually but steadily increasing. It is finding new friends and gaining a recognition among the first-class weeklies in the country. Brothers Kellogg and Phillips are constantly at the office, and each excels in his department, and I propose to devote my efforts mainly for a time to secure the money to cancel the mortgage and establishing a depository at Washington. In this work I desire your co-operation and support. By a united effort the work can very soon be done and no one burdened. Please make it a matter of conscience and a subject of prayer. Do not wait for me to write or call on you personally. Your treasurer, Bro. W. I. Phillips, to whom all offerings should be sent, has opened an account with the Washington department, and will report receipt monthly or more frequently if desired. It seems to me that Paul's language (2 Cor. 16: 9) is specially applicable to the present situation: "For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." Shall we accept the opportunity, and have we the courage to meet the "many adversaries" and the wisdom to enter the "great door and effectual" thus providentially opened before us? God and our country awaits the reply.

A SORE TROUBLE IN THE RANKS OF THE ENEMY.

But lately attention was called to the numerous young men of ambitious habits and not over-scrupulous morals who were pressing on into the Knight Templar and higher degrees of Masonry. The profit gained was the promise of a free ride to California. But the Yankees of Connecticut are ahead with a scheme that will out-sell wooden nutmegs. Under the title "Irregular Masonry—From the Third to the Thirty-second Degree in one Night for $15. The papers are publishing the following disdatch from New Haven. The only irregularity anybody can possibly discover with guerrilla Masons is, that they do their work with promptness and dispatch, and charge a price more in proportion to the value of the stuff they cram into their initiates. The account which is widely published reads:

"A dispatch from New Haven, Conn., to the Boston Herald says that great indignation prevails among higher degree Masons here and elsewhere in the State, because of the doings of an irregular Masonic organization that has been conferring degrees up to the 33d, despite the fact that it is not recognized by the highest Masonic authority in the land. The irregular organization is headed by five advanced Masons who were recently expelled from the supreme council to which they belonged, because they had assumed power that did not pertain to them. These Quinnipiac bodies, as they are called, started in New York State a year or two ago, and soon gained a foothold in this city, and then spread to Massachusetts. Said a prominent Mason here: 'They confer the degrees from the 3d to the 32d in an evening or two for about $15, while to go through the regular bodies takes about two months, and costs $100. I don't know why these seceders are acting as they are, except that some have grievances against the regularly constituted authority. Others want to get the higher degrees as cheaply and quickly as they can, and others, again, see no hope of gaining the coveted 33d degree by remaining with us, and so they branched out and formed this organization. We recognize them so far as the three blue lodge degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellowcraft and Master Mason is concerned, but after that the Quinnipiac bodies go on and confer degrees on their own hook that are recognized by no true Masons. In Massachusetts, however, the grand lodge of the State has declared that anyone who shall have anything to do with those Quinnipiac bodies shall forfeit all the rights and privileges of a Mason, which would throw the member out of the blue lodge. We shall come to that yet here and in New York. These bogus bodies are recognized by no supreme council at all, while our bodies are fully recognized by the twenty-two supreme councils of the world.' The speaker went on to say that Masons, young in the order, should be warned against joining these bodies. Upon enquiry, however, the reporter learned that quite a number of men, prominent as citizens, if not as Freemasons, had become identified with the Quinnipiac bodies, and that they were constantly growing, notwithstanding the anathemas of the so-called regular bodies."

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

Few American writers have attained the world-wide popularity of Washington Irving. Though he has been now dead nearly a quarter of a century, the infinite grace, the melting pathos and delicate humor have never been equalled. It is with an emotion of gratitude that we have a promise of his entire works, in tasteful binding, convenient size and good print, and all for prices that must command immediate attention. Such is the Elzevir edition begun by John B. Alden of New York. The first two volumes have already appeared—"Crayon Papers" and "The Alhambra." Of the books themselves, so long known, nothing need be said; and it is enough for the mechanical work of the volumes to say that they compare well with the contents. The several styles, plain cloth, half Russia and gilt, are all furnished at exceedingly low rate.

The Faith Missionary enters its second volume with all the outward appearances of success. It occupies a field untouched, so far as we are aware, by any other journal. We can heartily endorse the recommendation of Hon. James Monroe in an address in the First Church, Oberlin, in which he says: "A blacksmith in this town publishes a Christian Missionary magazine, for which I am a subscriber, and which I have no hesitation in saying is one of the most interesting of the periodicals I receive. Its ability, its Christian spirit, and its general make-up are all very commendable. I don't know when the blacksmith prepares his magazine, for whenever I pass his shop I hear his hammer resounding on the anvil, and when I pass by the open door I see the sparks fly under his blows; but that he does prepare it I know."

AGRICULTURAL.

Vick's beautiful monthly opens to the spring like a June rose to the sun. None read its pages in vain.

Purdy's Fruit Recorder, if it lacks somewhat in convenient arrangement, is bristling with facts and experiences which will show their effect in many gardens this spring.

—Seed catalogues are over abundant this year, and demonstrate how the agricultural tastes of Americans are being usefully developed. Among the number of reliable seed-growers, Joseph Harris holds a high rank, having for years been correspondent and editor of agricultural journals. He makes a grand offer to boys and girls who aim to begin useful lives, and agrees to sell them seeds in quantity or by assortment at 25 per cent. reduction, to encourage them to begin early the useful labor of gardening. Send to him at Rochester, N. Y., for his catalogue.

NOTES.

—J. B. Green, author of the "History of the English People," is dead.

London Truth calls attention to the fact that in the last year 789 religious works were published in England, while only 420 novels were produced.

—Houghton, Mifflin & Co. announce the "Autobiography of Thurlow Weed," edited by his daughter, another "Memoir of Thurlow Weed" by Thurlow Weed Barnes, the grandson of the politician.

—Charles Scribner's Sons are about to issue, in two octavo volumes, with maps and portraits, Smith's Life of Lord Lawrence, which will be a history of the great Indian Mutiny of 1857. The intense interest with which the whole civilized world watched that memorable struggle will be revived by this publication.

Readers of William Cullen Bryant's poetry will readily remember the many verses addressed to his wife, who died in 1866. In addition to those that have been published, one dated "Roslyn, 1873," was found after Mrs. Bryant's death, uncorrected and unfinished, which recall her memory in a very tender way. It will be printed in the March Century.

—The elegant catalogue of the Ryegate Granite Works of Mr. R. F. Carter, South Ryegate, Vt., is ready for the public. It contains more interesting facts respecting the materials for monumental work, with a sketch of the establishment of Mr. Carter. It is sufficient recommendation to our readers to say that Mr. Carter constructed the Morgan monument at Batavia.

THE HOME.

WHO MAY ABIDE THE DAY OF HIS COMING?

Christian! Dost thou fear my coming,
Art thou ready for the hour,
Wilt thou shrink before my shining,
Glorious in that day of power?

Saviour! I am ready, waiting,
Calmly waiting for the hour;
Watching for that glorious shining,
Watching for that day of power,
Sure of shelter, glorious King
"'Neath the shadow of thy wing."

Christian! Dost thou fear my coming,
Art thou pure and clean as snow,
Wouldst thou I delay my shining,
Whilst to cleanse thee thou dost go?

Saviour! I am ready, waiting,
Calmly waiting for the hour,
Watching for that glorious shining,
Watching for that day of power;
I need not cleansing in thy sight,
Washed by thy blood, I'm fair and bright.

Christian! Dost thou fear my coming,
Are thy garments pure and white,
Wilt thou tremble at my shining?
Dread the question of the light?

Saviour! I am ready, waiting,
Calmly waiting for the hour,
Watching for the glorious shining,
Watching for that day of power;
Clothed in orient robes from far,
Thy righteous works my garments are.

Christian! know I'm quickly coming!
Keep thy garments pure and white,
Keep thee clean before my shining,
Seek the shadow from the light.

Saviour! I am ready, waiting,
Calmly waiting for that hour,
Watching for that glorious shining,
Watching for that day of power,
Fearing thee not, my Saviour now,
Nor loving more—nor knowing how.

IS THE WORLD GETTING BETTER?

To ask this question is to answer it. No intelligent reader of the Bible needs to be told that the world cannot get better. It would be just as Scriptural to speak of human nature getting better, when we know that in it dwelleth no good thing, and that it is enmity against God, not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be, (Rom. 7: 18; 8: 7). The manifestations of its inherent and unchangeable hostility to God in Christ, the only God who exists, may vary at different times and under different circumstances; but one might as well expect to gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles, as to expect it to yield anything in love with true holiness, or acceptable to Him who has said. "Ye must be born again."

Precisely so it is with the world; and pulpit and platform orators who are constantly harping upon the world getting better little know, perhaps, how flatly they are contradicting the plainest testimonies of the inspired writings. These positively assert that "the whole world lieth in the wicked one," (1 John 5: 19). Is that getting better which lies on the black bosom of the devil, and is held fast in his polluting arms? He is called "the prince of this world," and "the god of this world;" is that getting better over which he maintains complete supremacy? All Christians were once dead, and once "walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," (Eph. 2: 1, 2): Is that getting better which forms the sphere of the spiritually dead, the obedient slaves of Satan?

But it is also written that the Lord Jesus Christ "gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world," (Gal. 1: 4). Did he die to deliver us from that which is getting better? "Be not conformed to this world," (Rom. 12: 2). Be not conformed to that which is getting better? "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world," (Jas. 1: 27). Keep himself unspotted from that which is getting better? "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God," (Jas. 4: 4). The friendship of that which is getting better enmity with God? "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him, (1 John 2: 15). Love not that which is getting better?

Moreover, the Christian's conflict is said to be with "the rulers of the darkness of this world," (Eph. 6:12). The darkness of that which is getting better? As if to encourage them for the conflict, Jesus says, "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you," (John 15: 19). That which is getting better hating the chosen of Christ? When the Comforter is come, "He will reprove the world of sin," (John 16: 8). Reprove that which is getting better of sin? "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world," (John 16: 33). Overcome that which is getting better? "I pray not for the world," (John 17: 9). Pray not for that which is getting better, or can get better? "Now is the judgment of this world," (John 12: 31). That is, the world is under judgment for the murder of God's dear Son, only the sentence is not yet executed. Is that getting better, which is hastening to its swift doom?

But it is needless to quote further. The texts already given are samples of a multitude of like import, and the whole drift of the Bible from first to last shows that the world, or unregenerate man, the unconverted portion of the human race, is a dangerous and inveterate enemy of God and of his blood-bought people. Nor is there a hint that it will be otherwise, until Christ shall destroy the mock Messiah at his personal return to the earth, and put down the wicked by the stroke of his tremendous judgments, and rule the world in righteousness. No one with the lowest degree of Scriptural knowledge believes that the statements of the Bible concerning the world apply only to the period when the Bible was written; and hence it is time that this popular twaddle about the world growing better should cease. A crack-brained evolutionist may believe it is getting better, but not a Christian who stops to think.

It is true that the exhibitions of its enmity vary from its expressions in earlier times, when the rack and the dungeon and the wild beast awaited the faithful martyrs of Jesus; but it is all the more perilous by this treacherous change in the mode of its attack. It is true that the church and the world have come nearer to each other than in former days; but this does not prove that the world has changed for the better; it only demonstrates that the church has changed for the worse. It is true that the devil can not crush God's people, but he has seduced multitudes of them to commit fornication with the world. It is true that education is more widely diffused than formerly and that great progress has been made in scientific discoveries; but each fresh discovery and every new invention make men more independent of God, push God more to the background of their contemplation, and prepare the world for the revelation of the antichrist, the crowning development of the boasted culture of the age.

Alas! that so many who claim to have received a commission as witnesses for Christ and for his truth, should join with the world that murdered their Lord in proclaiming its improvement, while the devil laughs to think how easily they are duped. Alas! that so few are sufficiently taught to see with the apostle that "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God," (1 Cor. 3: 19), and sufficiently consecrated to say with the apostle, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world," (Gal. 6: 14).—Rev. J. H. Brookes in The Truth.

COMMIT YOURSELF TO HIM.

A writer in the N. E. Methodist relates that the late Dr. McClintock, when in Paris, fell seriously ill, and being somewhat apprehensive as to results, called for the services of a physician. The later appeared and, after a careful examination of his case, notified him that he was upon the point of a severe and, it was likely, a protracted fit of sickness, but he felt confident, that if he should submit himself implicitly to his treatment, he could bring him safely through. The patient, of course, consented. "Very well, then," said the physician. "hand over your purse." Dr. McClintock was startled. Was his medical attendant a highway robber? His faith for a moment was perplexed—was put to a somewhat severe test. No other alternative, however, seemed to remain to him. Accordingly his purse, watch, valuables, everything, went over into the hands of the physician; and then, quietly, peacefully, he composed himself for sickness and treatment. Presently he lapsed into a state of utter unconsciousness, in which he continued for many days, and during which he was brought down very near indeed to death's door. Thanks to a good constitution, however, and the faithfulness and skill of his physician, he was brought up, in due time, to perfect health and strength again.

Our Saviour taught Nicodemus that "as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." John 3: 14–16.

Now to understand just what this believing in Him means, look back to the preceding chapter where it is said, "But Jesus did not commit himself unto them, because he knew all men." John 2: 24. Now the original expression, "commit himself unto them," is the same as believe, in the passage above quoted. To believe in Christ is to commit yourself to him, as the Great Physician, giving all things into his hands, and obeying all his directions. Are you ready to do this to-day? Why not now?—Common People.

HOUSE-KEEPING NOTES.

A PERFECT WATER-PROOF.

A writer in an English paper says: "By the way, speaking of water-proofs, I think I can give travelers a valuable hint or two. For many years I have worn India rubber water-proofs, but will buy no more, for I have learned that good Scottish tweed can be made entirely impervious to rain, and, moreover, I have learned how to make it so; and for the benefit of readers I will give the recipe: In a bucket of soft water put half a pound of sugar of lead and a half pound of powdered alum; stir this at intervals until it becomes clear, then pour it off into another bucket, and put the garment therein, and let it be in twenty four hours, and then hang it up to dry without wringing it. Two of my party—a lady and a gentleman—have worn garments thus treated in the wildest storms of wind and rain without getting wet. The rain hangs upon the cloth in globules. In short, they are really water-proof. The gentleman a fortnight ago walked nine miles in a storm of rain and wind such as you rarely see in the South; and when he slipped off his overcoat his under-clothes were as dry as when he put them on. This, I think, is a secret worth knowing; for cloth, if it can be made to keep out the wet, is in every way better than what we know as water-proofs."

SUGAR AS FOOD.

In the last number of the British and Foreign Medical Review there is an interesting paper on "Sugar as Food and as a Product of the Organism." In alluding to the uses of sugar in assisting assimilation, the reviewer quotes Mr. Bridges Adams: "I know by experience the difference in nutritious effect produced by the flesh of tired cattle on a march, and those slain in a condition arising from abundant food and healthy exercise. In the former case any amount may be eaten without the satisfaction of hunger, whilst in the latter a smaller amount removed hunger. But I discovered that certain other food of a different quality, such as grape sugar and fruit, would help the tired meat to assimilate, and thus remove hunger." Puddings and fruit tarts are not, therefore, simple flatteries of the palate, but digestive agents; provided they are not, themselves, of rebelliously indigestible materials, which, in English cookery, is too frequently the case. The reviewer alludes to the fondness of artisans for confectionary, and of patients just discharged from the hospital asking for "sweets," in preference to good substantial food, as examples of a correct instinct. There is no doubt that in children, in whom the requirements of growth call for a rapid transformation of food into tissue, the demand for sweets is very imperious; and parents should understand that the jam pot will diminish the butcher's bill and increase the amount of nutrition extracted from beef and mutton.

UTILIZE OLD PAPER.

Never throw away old paper. If you have no wish to sell it, use it in the house. Some housekeepers prefer it to cloth for cleaning many articles of furnitnre. After a stove has been blackened, it can be kept looking well for a long time by rubbing it with paper every morning. Rubbing with paper is a much nicer way of keeping the outside of a tea-kettle or coffee-pot bright and clean than the old way of washing them in suds. Rubbing with paper is also the best way of polishing knives, tinware and spoons; they shine like silver. For polishing mirrors, windows, lamp chimneys, etc., paper is better than dry cloth. Preserves and pickles keep better if brown paper, instead of cloth, is tied over a jar. Canned fruit is not so apt to mould if a piece of writing paper, cut to fit the can, is laid on the fruit. Paper is better to put under a carpet than straw. It is warmer, thinner, and makes less noise when one walks over it.

—A cup of cold water placed in the oven when too hot, has saved us from many a scorched piece of meat and burnt cake. A basin, inverted over a small roast, will keep the juices in and make it very palatable.

—A man can stand out longer against ten other men's wisdom than guard against the wit of one pretty woman's tongue; he showed his weakness in the Garden of Eden, and it has been growing on him ever since.

—The just published report of an Irish benevolent society says: "Notwithstanding the large amount paid for medicine and medical attendance, very few deaths occurred during the year."

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

MIRIAM, THE SYRIAN GIRL.

Aleppo is a large, rich, worldly city in Turkey, where the missionaries have tried to persuade the people to receive the Gospel without much success. If the people could make money or gain anything by becoming Protestant Christians, perhaps they might do so; if not, it is very hard to make them care anything about it. In this city, some years ago, there lived a man who had a daughter named Miriam. He professed to be a Protestant, and for that reason his friends would have nothing to do with him. No one would buy anything of him, nor even sell him anything; so that sometimes he was almost starved, and hardly knew which way to turn to provide for his family.

One day he brought his little daughter, Miriam, to the missionaries, and asked them to take her and teach her. They were very glad to do so; and she was so gentle and pleasant, that they soon learned to love her. Her mother hated the missionaries, and could not bear to have her daughter stay with them; and, for a long time, she would come to the house almost every day and try to get the child back again. Sometimes she would scold, and sometimes she would cry, but it all did no good. Once in a while she would persuade her husband to go and bring Miriam home; but he always brought her back again. All this was not because she loved her daughter so much, but because her neighbors used to taunt her, and say: "Ah, you have let your child become a Protestant."

After Miriam had been at the school some time, her father came to the missionaries, and said:

"I am growing very poor. I have lost almost everything since I became a Protestant. I want to set up some new business. Could you loan me twenty-five hundred piastres (a hundred dollars)?"

"That would be impossible," said the missionary. "I cannot lend money in that way."

At this the man was very angry, and exclaimed:

"This Protestantism doesn't pay! I have lost my property and my friends on account of it; it has made quarrels in my house, and has taken away my daughter; and now I cannot get a few piastres in my distress. I shall not try it any longer."

After trying some time longer, he went away, taking his daughter with him. The missionaries felt very badly to have Miriam go back to her irreligious home, and they prayed a great deal for her. They still hoped that God would bring her back to them, although they heard that her father had gone back to the Greek church.

About this time a Protestant teacher was sent from Beirut to open a girl's school. When the priests heard this, they said at once, "We must have a school too, or all the children will soon be going to this one." When they wanted a teacher, however, they could not find one so good as Miriam, who had been taught by the hated missionaries. So Miriam became the teacher; and, as she went back and forth to school, she used to steal into the missionary's house, and tell him that her heart was in his house, and that she was really a Protestant. The school lasted only a few weeks, because the priests could not get any money to pay the expenses; and, after it was closed the missionaries saw very little of Miriam for nearly two years. At the end of that time, the teacher of the mission school was obliged to go back to Beirut, and it was proposed to Miriam's father that she should teach in it. To the surprise of all, he was quite willing, if she could be allowed to go home every evening; and she was soon established with her pupils in the missionary's house.

At first, nothing was said about religion; but she soon began to ask about it herself, and to read the Bible very carefully. After a month, when her father came, to take her home one night as usual, she said:

"I don't think I will go home with you to-night."

"Why not?" he asked, growing angry,

"Because I would rather stay where I am," she answered in a determined way.

"But you must come with me," he said. "Do you dare to disobey me?"

"I have learned that I ought to obey God rather than man" she answered quietly. "If I go with you, you will make me disobey God. You have made me act like a hypocrite long enough. You have made me pretend to be a Catholic when I am really a Protestant, and you know I am."

"Oh! if that is all," said her father, "there need be no trouble. Come home with me, and you shall be a protestant, or anything you please."

Miriam was very much delighted to hear this, and was soon ready to go with him.

The next morning she did not come to the school as usual, and nothing was heard from her for two or three days. A servant was sent to inquire if she was sick; but he was rudely sent away from the door without a word. The missionary came to the conclusion that her father had determined to keep her away from the school; and as, according to Turkish law, a girl of Miriam's age could decide for herself with whom she could live, he went to the American Consul, who sent an officer to bring father and daughter before him.

When the officer arrived at the house he knocked and knocked, and tried to get in; but he found that the father had locked the house and gone away, taking the key with him. At last Miriam peeped out from an upper window, and when she saw the government officer she said:

"Oh! can you help me? I am shut up here, and I don't know what will be done to me. Oh! please take me out!"

"Can't you get out on the roof of the next house, and then come down into the street?" he asked.

"I will try," she answered, and was soon on her way to the consul. She had prepared a note for the missionaries, telling them that she had not changed, and that she was very anxious to go back to the school; closing with the verse, "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

After staying three days with the consul, she went back to the missionary. Her parents again tried in every way to persuade her to return, begging her to come, if only for one night; but she knew better than to trust herself with them again.

In a few years she moved to Beirut, became a member, and was married to a Christian man. She is now a fine woman, and is doing much good among her countrywomen.

This is what the gospel is doing for the girls in Turkey. —Missionary Echoes.

GOLDEN BUSINESS RULES.

Boys who intend to be men of business some day should commit to memory the following thirteen business rules as a guide to their success. Try it, boys. They are clipped from the Interior:

1. Never, under any circumstance, assume a responsibility that you can avoid consistently with your duty to yourself and others.
2. Base all your actions upon a principle of right; preserve your integrity of character, and in doing this never reckon on the cost.
3. Remember that self-interest is more likely to warp your judgment than all other circumstances combined; therefore look well to your duty, when your interest is concerned.
4. Never make money at the expense of your reputation.
5. Be neither lavish or niggardly. Of the two, avoid the latter. A mean man is universally despised, but public favor is a stepping-stone to preferment; therefore generous feeling should be cultivated.
6. Say but little; think much and do more.
7. Let your expenses be such as to leave a balance in your pocket. Ready money is a friend in need.
8. Avoid borrowing and lending.
9. Wine drinking and cigar smoking are bad habits; they impair the health and the poekets, and lead to a waste of time.
10. Never relate your misfortunes, and never grieve over what you cannot prevent.
11. Cultivate promptness in deciding upon matters that come before you; there are few objections more disagreeable and vexatious than an undecided, vascillating man. Consider thoughtfully, but decide promptly.
12. Never break a business engagement of any kind, if it is possible to meet it. Let nothing cause you to become careless of business etiquette, integrity and promptitude.
13. Let truth and an unwavering faith in God underlie all your motives and actions.

REMARKABLE BRIDGES.

According to the Scientific American, this country posses the largest masonry arch in the world—an arch which forms part of one of the most important engineering achievements of recent years, the aqueduct by which the city of Washington is supplied with water. The arch in question carries the aqueduct over the Cabin John Creek, with a span of two hundred and twenty feet. The height of the arch is one hundred and one feet, and the width of the structure twenty feet. The arch forms an arc of a circle, having a radius 134.2852 feet. When the center scaffolding was removed, the arch (unlike all other works of the kind) did not settle, the keystone having been set in winter, and the center struck in summer. The other notable masonry arches of the world are the Chester arch across the river Dee at Chester, England, with a span of two hundred feet; the famous center arch of the new London Bridge over the Thames, with a span of one hundred and fifty-two feet; Pont-y-Prydd, over the Tafi, in Wales, one hundred and forty feet; the bridge across the Seine, at Neuilly, France, with five spans each of one hundred and twenty-eight feet; the nine spans of Waterloo Bridge, London, each one hundred and twenty feet; and the celebrated marble Rialto Bridge in Venice, with a span of ninety eight and one-half feet.

Bertie had half a biscuit buttered and a whole one unbuttered. He gave Gracie the whole one and kept the buttered piece. A remark being made about his giving away the larger piece, Gracie said, "Yes, he gave me the biggerest, but he kept the butterest himself.

TEMPERANCE.

WHISKY AND BLOOD.

A writer in the Lever and Liberator, of Detroit, relates that within the space of two months, in Gratiot Co., Mich., two cold-blooded murders have been committed through the influence of strong drink. The first victim was James O. Herron, a business man, murdered by a man named Kennedy, who was a log driver. Both were drunk. Before the excitement had subsided two young men, John Skinner and George Stratton, both habitual drinkers, quarreled over a game of cards in a saloon, when Stratton drew a knife and stabbed Skinner to the heart, killing him instantly. It is related that young Stratton's father trained him for the saloon. The writer says: "Before the boy could reach the bar the father has lifted him upon it and handed him the drink." Of this child's training this is the early end. Fathers do not always live to reap the harvest for which they have sown the seed; but this father lives to see the fruit of his doings. We have in Michigan a law prohibiting murder; but as yet we have none prohibiting the cause of far more than half the murders committed.

A year or so ago, in one of the Southern States, two young men, intimate friends, entered a hotel together in perfect friendship. One of the two called for a drink the other refused. As soon as the liquor began to take effect the drinker began chaffing the other good-naturedly over one of their young lady acquaintances, the other taking all in good part. Presently the drinker called for another glass; he began to talk more boisterously; drank again; began to insult his companion, his friend meanwhile endeavoring to cool his excitement, which only increased under the influence of his potations. The accommodating bar-keeper stood ready, and upon his calling for another dram cheerfully complied with his request. The sober companion and friend expostulated with him, whereupon the now thoroughly crazed drinker drew a revolver and shot his companion in the neck, killing him on the spot. Now who of these ought to receive the worst punishment, the bar-keeper or the drinker? Or ought the license-monger, the manufacturer, the wholesale dealer, the beastly bar-keeper, and the young drunkard and murderer to be hung together? The drinker was hung, but against the others nothing was said. They are probably plying their bloody business yet. Of the five men last mentioned we would prefer to trust the young drinker in society. Probably had he lived he would have drank no more whisky and shed no more blood. But the others—let those who will recognize them as respectable citizens, we will not. Their very presence in a community means death. O, fellow-citizens of Michigan, let us drive this demon beyond our borders. We can do it, and our enemy is aware of our advantage and trembles for fear. We can say, as a State, to this enemy of body and soul: "Your room is vastly better than your company. You are not wanted here, and you must stay away." But will this work be soon accomplished when ministers fail to speak? The writer above mentioned farther says that the minister who preached Skinner's funeral sermon said not one word against the soul-destroying traffic; but did say, for the comfort of the mourning ones, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away." We would like to ask that preacher where the devil was all this while. "Beware of false prophets."—Michigan American.

The man murdered on a railroad train near Pittsburg a few days ago, adds another to the list of those who are being sacrificed to drink. The fact that he was a peaceful traveler and was shot by a drunken madman makes the case one of peculiar hardship. This suggests that conductors and other officers of railroads have no right to let drunken men get aboard their trains. Their indecency should exclude them, even if they should always prove harmless, but it may usually be counted upon that a drunkard is quarrelsome and will make a disturbance.

John B. Gough is sensible in more ways than one. He lectured in Baltimore recently, and was disgusted to find the printed bill referred to the event as his "last appearance." Mr. Gough declared his detestation of such claptrap and dishonest advertising. He said: "I have been working forty-one years, delivering over 8,000 speeches, and I am not worn out yet."

A contributor to Puck says: "In one gutter I saw a pig, in the other the semblance of a man. The pig was sober, the man was drunk. The pig had a ring in his nose, the other animal had one on his finger. The pig grunted, so did the man. And I said aloud: 'We are known by the company we keep,' and the pig grunted and walked away, ashamed to be seen in the company of a drunken man."

J G Holland wrote in Mrs. Hayes's album: "Women only can make wine drinking unfashionable, and heal the nation of its curse."

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts: therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

Unquestionably among the three greatest living Masons in the United Slates are Ben Perley Poore of Massachusetts, Robert Morris of Kentucky, and Albert Pike of Arkansas. These men, by their grips, their signs, their winks and their silver tongues, probably exercise a greater political influence than ever did Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, and John C. Calhoun by their eloquence and statesmanship.

Public taste and morals, however, must have become very much depraved where this is the case; for to say that this distinguished trio of Masons do not know what the truth is when they see it would be stating it very mildly. A more deluded set of men, or one whose delusions have had greater weight with the masses, does not probably exist in modern times—Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, and Heber Kimball being dead.

But the public ought to know who the leading Masons of the country are in order that it may understand what weight to give to their manipulations. These three men ought to be all unveiled in one group, blushing with their Masonic honors thick upon them, and standing before the world as the three Masonic graces, possessing, if not all, at least the chief grace that the lodge now has, viz.: misrepresentation.

These three men are men of the pen, and are, therefore, mightier than the three Masons of the sword, Generals Sickles, Logan and Butler. The whole together hold the threads of political action in their hands, and are shaping things for the next Presidency. Not all of them, however, can have the nomination; for Masonic candidates are getting to be too thick to admit of all being gratified with office. Not every Mason now can have an office; and hence there must arise something of a split in the fraternity. But Butler, the Little Hickory, "Sublime Inspector General of the 33rd Degree," etc., seems to stand the best chance now, having received the endorsement of the Massachusetts lodges for governor of the State.

The people ought to know who their political leaders are. We know nothing of what our governors are doing unless we know who and what these governors are. Let it once be known that the destinies of the Republic are in the hands of Freemasons, and then we may understand a great many anomalies which otherwise would be wholly inexplicable.

It is a matter of some importanee for us Americans to know who the next Masonic candidate for the Presidency is to be. We ought not to let Masonic editors have this secret to juggle with and gloat over. Let us, therefore, openly and boldly announce General Benjamin F. Butler of Massachusetts as candidate of the Masonic party for the Presidency of the United States in 1884.

We of the American party cannot afford to let the people be deceived by our silence. We must admit that the Masonic element of the Republican party has misruled the country during the last twenty years. We must admit that the war's delay and waste; the subjection of blacks and poor whites to the Ku-Klux; the back-pay grab; the increase of salary; the Credit Mobilier swindle; the land-grabs; the pension frauds; the Star-route scandal; the Indian war outrage; the river and harbor sham; the attempt to restore the franking privilege; the printing speculation—are all the fruit of the Masonic party's interference with the affairs of the country. Let us give honor to whom honor is due, and frankly acknowledge Gen. Butler, the widow's son, as the next Masonic candidate for the presidency; then the people will know what they have to expect. SO MOTE IT BE.

LIQUOR DRINKERS UNFIT FOR OFFICE.

While the Civil Service Reform bill was in discussion in the United States Senate, Senator Blair of New Hampshire, introdueed the following condition of appointments under it:

"That no person habitually using intoxicating beverages shall be appointed to, or retained in any office, appointment, or employment to which the provisions of this act are applicable."

Mr. Brown—Will the Senator allow me, before he makes his remarks, to offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. Blair.—Certainly.

Mr. Brown.—I move, in the second line of the amendment which is offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, to insert after the word "beverages" the words "to excess," so as to read:

"That no person habitually using intoxicating beverages to excess shall be appointed to, or retained in, any office, etc."

Mr. Blair.—Before the question is taken up either the amendment or the proposed amendment to the amend ment I wish to say a few words.

Of course the original language of the amendment itself implies all that is continued in the proposition of the Senator from Georgia. It is a prohibition of the employment or appointment in the service of the United States of any one to whose case the provisions of this act, if it should become a law, would be applicable. The habitual use of intoxicating liquors would probably be conceded to be the use of such liquors to excess, so that I hardly think the Senator's proposition improves or increases the force of the amendment as it now is.

It must be conceded that if the primary purpose of the bill is the improvement of the civil service, and we are to incorporate a variety of provisions in the bill looking to that end, the suggestion which I make in this propisition is as important to the country, is as well calculated to improve the civil service as a whole as any provision whatever contained in the bill.

There has been much diseussion of the principles of Jefferson from time to time, and they have been alluded to in this debate; and he has been quoted as saying that capacity and integrity form the ground criterion for appointment to office and not political sentiment or affiliations. That is true; but later in Jefferson's life, at the close of his administration, Mr. Jefferson announced another principle as still more important. I have his language here. I am not able to refer to the precise place in his works where it may be found, but I know it has been common stock in the temperance literature of the country for many years. At the close of his administration Mr. Jefferson wrote:

"The habit of indulging in ardent spirits by men in office has occasioned more injury to the public than all other causes; and were I to commence my administration again with the experience I now have, the first question I would ask respecting a candidate, would be: Does he use ardent spirits?"

That would be the first question propounded by Mr. Jefferson to-day were he the President of the United States or the head of onc of the departments, or in any position of authority making appointments in the civil service

Of coursc in the limited time allowed me it is impossible to present this subject as it ought to bc presented. I would say further, that the Congress of the United States having, as I understand it, without an amendment of the constitution little power to legislate on the general subject of the use or abuse of intoxicating liquors throughout the land, I think it is the duty of Congress when there comes an opportunity for us to say and establish in the statutes of the country anything which is for the encouragement of the cause of temperance, as it is called, and for the discouragement, the demoralization, the delegalization, and the destruction of the evils of intemperance it should be so established. Here is an opportunity to say in an enactment of the United States a word which is for the benefit of the civil service of the United States to say, and I think we shall fail in a high duty, however trival the amendment may seem to some, if we fail affirmatively to put in this bill the provision which I offer in the amendment.

It is a matter of statistical truth that in this country the grand amount of production in the last year was about $7,000,000,000. Of that amount about 1,100,000,000 has been expended in the wages of laboring men. During the same period there has been consumed in this country the amount of 1,483,000,000 in what is neither more nor less than the patronage of the tippling shop. To that extent have the wages and the productions of the American nation been absorbed and destroyed by this unnecessary and accursed habit. We only expend about $80,000,000 in this whole country in the cause of education, common school and all others combined, the higher and lower forms of education. We pay annually about $100,000,000 for the support of all religious institutions, churches, clergymen, and all manner of expenditure for the cause of religion, whether Catholic or Protestent. We pay about $750,000,000 directly over the counter for intoxicating drinks. The other amount, nearly $750,000,000, which makes up the $1,538,000,000 which I have specified, is chargable to the extra expenditure made necessary in the administration of the criminal law for the protection of society, for the support of the idiotic, the insane and other forms of direct expenditure resulting from the use of ardent spirits.

For the American people to keep sober three years, or two years and a half, would pay the national debt. Really the destruction of human life every year in this couutry as a result of the improper and unnecessary use of intoxicating liquor is as great as it was in any one year of the war. Year after year in the unnecessary use of intoxicating liquors in this country we are carrying a burden as great as that of the war of the rebellion itself.

I think that I am justified in offering this proposition, and that the Congress will not be justified in its rejection.

* * * * * *

I do not think that in the departments at Washington there is a larger proportion of men addicted to intoxication, nor so large, perhaps, as in the community generally; and yet heads of departments and others not quite so high in official station, have frequently assured me that one of the most serious difficulties which they had to contend with is this habit on the part of many of their best employes; that while to be sure they have the right of dismissal, and they sometimes exercise it, it is an ungracious and unpleasant thing to do, that if there was something in the statutes of the land which was in itself a serious admonition to this class of government employes, it would have a very powerful tendency to restrain the habit on the part of those who are addicted to it. Outside of Washington, in the custom-houses and in the largest post-offices, it is a difficulty frequently complained of by those who have to administer the civil service, that many of their employes are addicted to this bad habit, not always so far as the person himself is concerned immorally very bad habit; sometimes it is a disease, sometimes a thing for which the man is to be pitied rather than to be censured; it is a misfortune. Very often they say on account of the prevalence of this habit among that class of employes the civil service is very seriously injured.

It is impossible for us to ignore the fact that there is no subject upon which the American people are feeling any more sensitively or profoundly at present than this of the evils of the habitual use of intoxicating drink. It has come to be a political question. It is a dangerous one for any one of the great parties to deal with. I think there is a practical alliance—that is my opinion—between those who take one view of the question and the Democratic party, and it is a question whether those who take the opposing view will organize an independent party or ally themselves as they have hitherto with the Republican party, or what they will do. But it is evident that that class of people, and as considerate a class, as conservative a class, as important a class as there is in the United States, and about as uumerous a class, both North and South, and one that is to increase in numbers, is determined that this subject matter of the evils of intoxicating drinks shall be dealt with, and it will be dealt with.

It has seemed to me that it would not only be wrong but impolitic even if we were to appeal to the lower class of motives, for us, now that we have this opportunity, to fail to speak one word showing that the Congress of the United States, irrespective of party, I hope, at least sympathize wth those who would destroy the destroyer of the American people.

Mr. Sherman.—Mr. President, the evil of intemperance in a man holding a public office is so common and so great that I was disposed and am disposed to vote for the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The vice of intemperance in this country, is one so prevalent, not only in private life but in public life, that I should be glad to vote for a general proposition and place it upon the statute-book that any man who is habitually intoxicated or drinks to excess shall be excluded from appointment, and still more, that all officers of the government should distinctly understand that when a man is habitually intoxicated in the discharge of a public duty he should be promptly discharged by the head of the department.

As an executive officer, I was myself often placed in that position where, with extreme reluctance I was compelled by my sense of public duty to remove a man for intemperance, sometimes men of the highest qualifications, of the keenest wit and ability and intelligence, who were guilty of this offense, there being no statuory provision pointing out the necessity of removing, aud it resting simply upon the inconvenience to the public service. Now, especially in the departments, it seems to me that the initiation ought to be made by law to the heads of the departments to justify them promptly in removing a man habitually intoxicated. Many cases of this kind occur, especially in the Army and Navy."

—A mission has been established at No. 377 State street, right in the heart of that district termed the "Black Hole" of Chicago, and it is doing good work as conducted by Mr. Thomas Needham, brother of George C. Needham, former pastor of Chicago Avenue church.

—The special committee on Home Missions appointed by the Presbyterian General Assembly last summer met in Washington, D. C., lately, and agreed upon some kind of a report which they decline to make known. This committee was appointed to settle the question of who should control the men and means in the missIon work, the Board of Missions at Philadelphia or the presbyteries. The question provoked a stubborn fight in the last General Assembly and was not settled.

THE CHURCHES.

—Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit is laboring in revival work at a point some thirty miles from that city on the Wabash railway.

—The revival meetings were continued in the Wesleyan church at Wheaton during last week with hopeful results.

—Rev. Dr. David A. Wallace of Wooster lately preached an able discourse on the duty of the state in reference to temperance which has just been printed in successive parts in the United Presbyterian.

—On Sabbath, March 4th, President Blanchard preached in the First Presbyterian church, Washington, by request of the pastor Dr. Sunderland, who introduced the speaker to his large congregation and followed the discourse with remarks endorsing it, and speaking of his satisfaction in meeting an old graduate of Middlebury College. Several gentlemen after the service spoke with warm approval, one of them saying he had been chaplain in the army and had students from Wheaton college under his charge —Brethren Wm. Fenton and C. B. Ebey, pastor of the Free Methodist church in this city have lately visited Crown Point, Indiana, preaching the Word.

—Special meetings held in the Wesleyan church at Wasioja, Minnesota, were the means of bringing a number into the Kingdom of Christ.

—Rev. G. L. Shephardson of Kansas, assisted by two of the students of the Theological Seminary at Wheaton, has been holding a protracted meeting in Sycamore, Ill.

—Bro. H. Curtis of Olathe, Kansas, sends this stirring note to the Wesleyan:

"We want all the ministers and churches of the Kansas Conference to take hold and organize societies auxiliary to the State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, for these reasons. First, they are a part of our distinct reform principle. Secondly, wherever these organizations are pushed forward, there we find a soil productive of Wesleyan Methodist principles, and our common cause can be sustained. Thirdly, that our skirts may be clear from the blood of all men in the line of the image of the beast. Dear brethren, take hold; go forwad in God's name. Pray for us in Kansas."

—The First Independent Baptist church of Esmen, Illinois, which was lately organized on the basis of Christ ever and Christ only, has a good testimony against the anti-Christ of lodgery in these words: "This church shall endeavor to sustain every laudable scheme of Christian enterprise and benevolence for the advancement of Zion, and declare its disfellowship of secret societies, intemperance in all things, and every social evil, and of all that in any wise aids and supports them." The church numbers yet but a small company and they have no house of worship, but hope to build when the Lord shall open the way and give them enlargement. We rejoice to make note of this testifying body of disciples, may the Lord build them up in his own most holy faith.

—Augustana College and Theological Seminary at Rock Island, Ill., is supported by the voluntary contributions of the members of the Augustana Swedish Lutheran synod, and each congregation is expected to contribute, regularly every year, twenty-five cents for every communicant member. The total contributed by this one conference for the institution was $3,298, fully averaging twenty-five cents for every member.

—Every Swedish Lutheran conference save one has its own orphan's home, and during the past year $3,601.76 have been contributed by the Illinois conference to the home at Andover, Ill.

SEASONS OF REVIVAL.

BY REV. WARREN TAYLOR.

The village of Wilkesville with its 300 inhabitants, is in southeastern Ohio, twenty miles north of Galipolis, and twenty four miles southwest of Athens. The Presbyterian church there was organized in 1821, with seven members on Confession of Faith and the Shorter Catechism, by Rev. William R. Gould, who, as a missionary of the Connecticut Missionary Society had his headquarters at Galipolis.

Rev. Hiram R. Howe, the first stated minister of the church, commenced his labors there in 1832, with the carpenter's bench for a desk, in the unfinished meeting-house. He continued five years; members were added, and the congregation grew in numbers and influence. From 1837 to 1847 the church felt the commotions by which the whole Presbyterian body was shaken and rent assunder in those years, and in 1848 it was without a minister, with eleven members, of whom nine were women. About this time Thomas Miller, of Scotch-Irish descent, moved into the neighborhood with his family from western Pennsylvania, and was presently installed elder in the church. He canvassed the town and surrounding country with a subscription paper, receiving sums from twenty-five cents to three dollars, inviting Mr. Howe to return and take care of the little church. Mr. Howe, then living ten miles distant, responded to the invitation, and again labored with Wilkesville church half of the time for two years, during which time the church was considerably revived. In 1853, Rev. Thomas Welch, a Cumberland Presbyterian, living also ten miles distant, commenced preaching to the Wilkesville church one-half of the time, and continued nine years, during which time there were two revivals, one of very considerable power.

When I came to Wilkesville in the beginning of 1865, there were ninety-three members on the church roll, and between this time and the autumn of 1876, when my pastoral relation with the church was dissolved, there were four seasons of revival.

Of these I desire to speak. The first two occurring or developing in December, 1865, and December, 1867, respectively, were similar in their rise, their characteristics, and their results. For months previous to each awakening, I remember that I was exercised with a desire for the conversion of souls such as I had never known before, and was moved to prayer for individuals as I never had been before. On each occasion a growing seriousness in the congregation led to the appointment of special meetings, which were continued for about two weeks, and on each occasion I had the assistance for a few days of Rev. H. R. Howe, who knew the people better than I did, and had more skill in conducting inquiry meetings than I had. Each meeting resulted in a manifest revival of the piety of a large portion of the church, and in an accession of ten or eleven to the number of communicants, who are almost all vigorous, healthful, and useful Christians today, and two of them in the full work of the Gospel ministry.

In the first of these two meetings, for several days I was aware of deep seriousness on the part of the unconverted, which I was unable to bring to the surface. I desired to get those whom I knew to be anxious about their souls, to commit themselves. I invited them to get up and tell how they felt, to remain for conversation, to rise in their places, or hold up their hands, to indicate that they desired to find the Saviour or to become Christians. Finally Elder Miller, before referred to, seeing the fruitlessness of my attempts, said to me softly, "It has been our custom to invite them forward." This method was adopted with success, and in all my experience with the congregation afterward, this was the most successful method for getting awakened sinners to come out from the world and declare themselves on the Lord's side.

As the year 1870 went out and 1871 came in, I again found myself oppressed with a longing desire for the conversion of souls, and that God would glorify himself by a revival of his work. During the previous winter I had mingled somewhat in the daily prayer-meetings and revival work in Cincinnati, under the direction of Rev. E. P. Hammond; and thought I should be willing to die if I could see one glorious work of grace in Wilkesville. The church also was in a hopeful state. Their house of worship had just been repaired and a parsonage erected, and there was more than usual interest in the Sabbath-school, and in all the services of the church. The week of prayer came, and we attempted to observe it. At one of the first day meetings appointed for prayer and conference, a man of mature age and the head of a family, whom we all believed to be a Christian, but up to that time rather a worldly Christian, rose in his place and with quivering lips said, "Brethren and sisters, I have not been living as I ought to live. I hope you will all pray for me that I may live better." This brief and simple confession seemed to thrill the whole meeting, and from that moment there was new life in the prayers that were offered, the songs that were sung, and the remarks that were made. The revival was inaugurated, though I did not know it. There was a demand for preaching, and besides a short sermon to the Sabbath-school on Sabbath morning and the regular Sabbath morning sermon, I continued without plan or previous intention, to preach every evening for a month. Our evening services began with a season of devotion, and closed with a meeting of inquiry and prayers for the anxious, the entire congregation remaining till the meeting closed at nine o'clock.

Whilst the meetings were going on, I said nothing about joining the church. But at the next Lord's Supper thirty, whose ages were all the way from ten to sixty, were welcomed to the communion of the church, and it is believed that not more than two or three have ever fallen away. But I must confess that instead of being willing to die, I never in my life was so anxious to live, as when I saw those thirty souls stand up to confess their faith in Christ, and to give themselves publicly to him.

Among the subjects of this revival were some particular cases which to me we so interesting and remarkable that I should like to give a particular account of them; but this letter is already sufficiently long. My last revival at Wilkesville—that of 1874—may be the subject of a subsequent article. I only add that in every work of grace in this world there is a human side and a God-ward side, both of which must be recognized.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

The Cynosure is happy to announce herewith a grand list of contributors and correspondents for 1883. To read their letters, study their arguments, compare their experiences, and drink with them at the fountain of truth, even Jesus Christ, will be the noble privilege of the readers of the Cynosure. IN THE COILS;

—OR—

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Ageuts to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen, $15.00.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete expositiou of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of CAPT. WM. MORGAN. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wiscousin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offeuse than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2 00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm Morgan. By Samuel D Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents, per dozen, $7 50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DEGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic boudage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Anti-Mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 31 Cynosure tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. 20c. each, per doz. $1.75

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwesteru Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen. 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—It is said that the business of the Census Bureau will not be completed for a year or more yet. Several of the divisions, notably the educational and agricultural, are very much behind and will not have their reports completed and distributed for a long time. The Census Bureau has nearly $200,000 yet to spend.

—Of 160 members of the late House of Representatives who did not succeed in securing a re-election, 100 are applicants for official position under the government.

—The bill providing for sending postal orders of a small amount at a cheap rate will prove a very great convenience, and perhaps play an important part in confirming and perpetuating the use of specie.

—General Hazen appealed for an investigation by Congress into his official conduct. It is said he has been answered by an order from the President for a court-martial.

—It is reported in New York that Rufus Hatch, who is now in London, has negotiated with English capitalists to purchase 3,000,000 acres of land from the Northern Pacific Railroad in Montana, and stock it with $5,000,000 worth of cattle.

—A resolution passed the Pennsylvania House calling for a joint committee to investigate the charges of bribery by the Standard Oil Company, mentioned in the Governor's message of March 1.

—The New York street car managers have about decided to adopt the cable system, which has been so successful on the South Side roads in Chicago. It is already in use in Philadelphia.

—Near Washington Gap, Jersey City, a schooner collided with a scow carrying thirty men, seven of whom were drowned.

—Daniel Woods, aged 106, died at Indianapolis. He went all through the Duke of Wellington's campaigns, and was one of the guards over Napoleon Bonaparte at St. Helena.

—The Ohio House has passed a joint resolution for submitting to the people an amendment for a tax on liquor, or to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages.

—A falling wall in a Nashville fire of Wednesday night buried three men, Thomas Womack, William Miller, and John Frith, whose remains were taken from the debris two days later.

—The funeral services over the late Governor Stephens, at Atlanta, Ga., were participated in by thousands of people. General Toombs and Senator Brown were among the speakers. Crowds continued to arrive during the day until fully 50,000 visitors were in the city.

—The New York Herald flood fund continues to advance at the rate of over $2,000 every twenty-four hours. A second subscription was received from Consul Beauchamp, at St. Galls, Switzerland, of $416.72. The total amount received to date is $39,502.22. The water in the Diamond shaft at Braidwood, Ill., has been reduced 72 feet 8 inches in depth, and there is still to be pumped out 12 feet 4 inches. Twenty graves have been dug, and fifty coffins are already on hand. Some twenty bodies are expected to be found at the air shaft. The receipts for the relief fund amount to $15,389.53.

FOREIGN.

—Premier Gladstone, in the House of Commons, said the recent surmise that the evacuation of Egypt might be complete in six months, was merely an expression of hope founded on circumstances.

—Lady Florence Dixie, in a letter to the London Times, charges that Biggar and Parnell, as trustees of the Land League fund, have not accounted for £152,000. She claims that while this money is unaccounted for, Parnell and his followers have no right to mock the sufferings of the distressed in Ireland by their sham championship of the starving peasantry.

—Seven hundred persons are in want of food at Swineford, County Mayo, Ireland. More than thirty persons are being treated in the poorhouse for famine fever.

—It is stated that illness of Prince Gortschakoff, late Russian Premier, is due to a recent attempt to poison him. After severe vomiting last week, the doctors discovered traces of phosphorus. The police are making an investigation.

—Great excitement is aroused in Calcutta, India, because of the proposed law giving native magistrates criminal jurisdiction over whites in certain cases, and has spread to the army. A letter from an officer in a large garrison says the danger is most serious, and it will be impossible to control the men if a comrade is sentenced by a native judge.

—The families of many of the imprisoned Socialists in Spain are receiving funds for support from mysterious sources. A detachment of troops has been sent to Arcos as it is feared the attempt may be made to break open the prison there, in which members of the "Black Hand" Society are confined.

—Advices from Tamatav, Madagascar, dated February 26, announce the arrival of ths French gunboat Vandreuil. The town had not yet been occupied. Four French men-of-war have arrived at the northwest coast of the island. The natives were excited, and prepared to resist the French.

BUSINESS.

TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS.

The few hundreds who have received and read the Cynosure on the four weeks Trial list, may safely reckon that the best is yet in reserve, and they should be careful not to miss a single number, by neglecting to forward their subscriptions for a year in time to avoid a break. Our back numbers have been so reduced by calls for specials that we can promise no back numbers, and you should be sure to keep the connection.

We are on the eve of a struggle which is to determine who shall rule and administer our government. Whether secret rings and cliques all centering in Freemasonry shall connive at the crimes of oath-bound confederates, or open courts with lawful oaths shall assure rights at all, on the plane of equality and law.

A PROMISE.

The time has expired in which we promised four numbers of the Cynosure for 10 cts., to Trial Subscribers. Several hundred have availed themselves of this opportunity and we are hoping to receive a sufficient increase in the list of annual subscriptions to justify the trial.

So many have written favorably that after consultation we have determined to extend the offer until the 22nd inst. We do this to give others an opportunity to get acquainted with our work, and especially with the Washington department. If yearly subscriptions received from Trial Subscribers should be sufficient to justify a further extension we shall be glad to extend the offer beyond the 22nd inst., otherwise we shall be compelled to close with that number. It is not for us but for you, friends, to say when this offer shall cease, by sending in subscribers—either your own or your neighbors.

TO OLD SUBSCRIBERS.

We want to keep all our old readers while adding many new ones to our list. We shall do our best to merit your confidence, and hope to receive your co-operation and continued patronage. Give us a fair trial before you "cut our acquaintance." We come to you with a clean dress, a pleasant face, and words of truth and soberness, modestly asking a weekly welcome at your fireside.

Orders for books in the general trade are beginning to come in for which we are obliged. If you are going to order any thing published or sold in the trade of this city, please give us an opportunity to serve you and we will do our best to make it satisfactory and to your interest to order all books, tracts etc., from Head-quarters at 221 W. Madison St.

CLUB LIST.

The Cynosure will be sent with either of the following papers for a year at much reduced rates. The first column is the club rate, the second the cost of the papers if taken separately:

American Agriculturist, (with a fine premium engraving)	$3.10	$3.60
The Independent	4.50	5.00
Scientific American	4.55	5.20

THE BATAVIA CONVENTION.

REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS, ADDRESSES, ETC., READY FOR ORDERS. PRICE 25 CENTS.

This will be the best document of the kind yet produced. Beside the record of the Convention and the report of the unveiling of the Morgan monument, the famous Weed Letter, the addresses of President J. Blanchard, Dr. J. E. Roy, Prof E. D. Bailey, Rev. H. H. Hinman, and others, and the monument oration, are contained in the pamphlet, which is embellished with four illustrations and contains 107 pages. This is one of the best documents yet published for the price.

Send your orders to the N. C. A. Office.

HELP YOURSELF AND THE CAUSE.

Much less inconvenience and confusion has occurred in the transfer of correspondence than was anticipated. It speaks well for the intelligence of our patrons that a letter intended for the N. C. A. or Cynosure is very seldom misdirected A glance at the book orders sent during the last few days, suggested that a word of commendation was due to those who have so readily fallen into line. You have our thanks, and we are still at your service to send anything published in the line of our reform and also any book on sale in this market. When you send for "Freemasonry Illustrated," "Odd-fellowship Revised," etc., put in your orders for Bibles, histories, biographies, volumes of sermons, books for your children or any standard works you may want. They will receive prompt attention at No. 221 West Madison street, and every penny of profit go to the credit of the work we have hand as your agents and fellow-in helpers.

THE OLD GUARD.

Will the "Old Guard" look after the new four weeks recruits and see that they are mustered into the regular army, and fall into line on the Lord's side.

A FEW REMARKS.

It seems after all the Chinese have something human about them. Our government forbids them the privileges granted to people of all other races whatsoever, although the influence of some of these upon our political condition is something fearful to contemplate. The idea that they would resent the indignity implied in singling them out by special and odious enactment hardly occurred to us, and the announcement that the Chinese are neither indifferent nor inactive under the condemnation of their race is news to us. But the State Department is informed that every means is being adopted to drive Americans from the empire. Heavy restrictions are being placed upon their business, and new enterprises are prohibited if conducted by Americans. These retaliatory measures are having the effect to make it impossible for Americans to conduct successful business, and they are finding it more convenient to leave the country than to contend against hostile legislation for which an example has been set by their own government. Eastern ship-builders and Western merchants who are mutually interested in the Chinese trade will soon begin to be heard upon this question as well as the crowd that follows Kearney and Kallock.

Some good friends may think it unwise to vindicate the Chinaman in this controversy. There are, truly, many and serious objections to his presence in our communities, but the principle is not affected by these accidents of habit and religion, that the uniform custom of our nation with respect to foreigners has been violated in this instance; and as for the petty revenges of the Celestials, we could not expect them to repay other than in kind since an enlightened and Christian people gives them the example. We are also confirming the propriety of this Chinese business in our threats toward the German government for prohibiting our pork. Secretary Frelinghuysen has taken in hand the matter of instructing the Germans and persuading them to repeal an embargo for which there is no foundation in fact, that is, that American pork is dangerously infected with trachinæ. The best medical inquiry shows that there are no sanitary grounds for the prohibition, but it is simply a commercial affair to prevent the competition of the American product with the German. It is understood that if the German government persists President Arthur will cast about for some way of retaliation and send a message to Congress. This kind of petty revenge may be excusable in a Confucian, but if America can find no nobler course we shall deserve all the enmity which must spring from it, and the great God whose Son we serve, at least in name, will remember our disobedience of one of his plainest commands.

The business men of Chicago are having another uprising against a bad local government. Harrison, now nearly through with his second term of office, is a demagogue of the most unquestionable character. Under his rule the brothels, drink holes and thieves have prospered to a degree almost unknown before. As he has lately signified his purpose to run for another term, a strong and well organized movement is being made independent of party, and the name of a leading manufacturer placed at its head. A part of the platform of this movement charges the retail liquor traffic with demanding more supervision than any other business and causing most of the crime committed, and resolves for law, good government and high license.

The trial of John F. Burrill, Grand Secretary of the Illinois Grand Lodge of Freemasons is now proceeding at Carlinville, Ill. The circumstances have been given at length to our readers, how for years Burrill put into his own cash box the dues received from lodges, and how infamously his wife was treated and finally deserted. The trial is a curiosity. The Grand Lodge is the real prosecutor, though not nominal, and four of its five lawyers are Freemasons, as are all four of Burrill's counsel. Among the number are ex-Governor Palmer, Gen. John A. McClernand, ex-Congressman, Gen. John I. Rinaker and State Senator Charles A. Walker. Among the witnesses are John C. Smith, ex-State Treasurer, Past Grand Commander Knight Templars and a prominent Odd-fellow, Wiley M. Egan, L. L. Munn, Gil. Barnard, etc., Masons of mighty numbers, long titles and many banquets. But on the jury only one Mason is to be found, and he evidently of indifferent character, which shows what these lords of lodgery think of the influence of the order in the court room, for either side must desire the jury free as possible from the secret influence of the other.

The Russian government has proposed to the other powers that an international detective force be organized to enable them to cope with the Anarchists, Communists, Nihilists, Socialists, Fenians, Invincibles, Black Hands and the other sisters of Masonry. France, Switzerland and Austria have acquiesced in the proposal, and other powers may feel compelled to join them if explosions and stabbings do not cease. On Thursday evening the local offices of the British government at Westminster, London, were shattered by an explosion which thundered like the discharge of a columbiad, shook the galleries in Parliament House, filled the adjacent streets with broken glass, and scared everybody but hurt only two little children who were thrown out of bed and badly cut in their faces. The authorities believe that dynamite and Fenians were the cause. The London Times building was attacked in the same way the evening before, but escaped damage. On Saturday, at Windsor, Lady Florence Dixie, who, writing from Ireland lately, has entered grave charges against Parnell and others for misuse of the Land League funds, was attacked by two ruffians disguised in female attire, who attacked her with daggers, and made off after cutting her clothing. A St. Bernard dog probably saved her life, but the lady swooned at sight of the weapons and knows not how she escaped. In Paris the Communist lodges are making endless trouble with riotous meetings, street parades, magazines of dynamite in private houses and drunken banquets where revolutionary speeches are made and infants baptized. These restless spirits of anarchy, impatient of control, would enjoy themselves none the better if their devilish thirst for blood, revenge, power, wealth—they they know not what—were gratified; and it may reasonably be doubted if the triumph of their theories, strained through a disordered fancy, would better the condition of the masses. The poor and humble people groan under their burdens for war taxes and to support the luxury of courts, but have little hope of relief through such means.

Dr. Kittredge of the Third Presbyterian church of this city suggested last Sabbath a remedy for all this warring of factions, cabinets, secret bands and assassination clubs. He says that since the translation of the Bible into the vernacular in Russia, by command of the Czar some three years ago, there has been a great transformation in many parts of the empire. The Greek church has for centuries stood between the souls of the people and the light of life as revealed in the glorious Word. Squalor, wretchedness and vice marked the mass of the people and Nihilism arose to destroy a social and political system which seemed to keep them in degradation. With the diffusion of the Bible, though yet not wide, and the preaching of a few devoted men, great changes have been made in some districts, which are as marked in the diminution of drunkenness and vice and for cleanliness and thrift as are the Protestant cantons of Switzerland from their neighbors who yet worship by priests. This movement the preacher believes, and correctly, will be more powerful than the sword of the Czar against Nihilism. Give Europe Bibles against the revolutionist lodges and both they and oppressive rulers will soon be extinct.

PROTESTATION OF INNOCENCE BY CRIMINALS.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

Some of the Irish papers continue to pour out their indignant protests against the guardians of the laws and liberties of that country, for the execution of murderers who maintain their innocence when on the scaffold. It is comparatively common in Ireland for murderers to persist in their innocence even with their last breath. Protestations of innocence on the scaffold are scarcely entitled to serious consideration. The pretended innocence is often no more than a solemn equivocation. Such protestations by undoubted murderers are no new thing under the Papal regime.

In a book written by Charlotte Elizabeth called "The Rockite," and published in 1829, reference is made to a similar execution, where there had been loud protestations of innocence. Mr. Butler said to his servant: "Now, on your honor as a soldier, Delaney, do you believe those miserable fellows did not commit the crime for which they suffered?"

"Indeed, sir, I am pretty sure they did."

"And yet," said Mr. Butler, "you heard that solemn protestation of innocence?"

"Yes," answered Maurice, hesitating; "they died innocent, sure enough."

"Are you jesting with me, sir?"

"I couldn't make so free with your honor, let alone such a time as this. I mean to say that they got absolution from the priest, and after that, you know, sir, their souls and their consciences were as clean as if they'd been asleep in the cradle ever since they were born."

The authoress states that after an execution in Galway in 1823, a magistrate was expressing his horror at hearing the murderers persist to the last in their innocence, when the evidence had been so conclusive against them. A Roman Catholic priest who was near, justified their assertion by stating that in consequence of his having that morning granted them absolution, they were restored to a state of perfect innocence, and had therefore spoken the truth.

In Thackeray's Irish Sketch-book is a passage referring to two men called Byrne and Woods, who were condemned at Clonmell in May, 1842, showing that such denials of guilt are not in the least trustworthy: "Two men were executed pursuant to sentence, and both persisted solemnly in denying their guilt. There can be no doubt of it; but it appears to be a point of honor with these unhappy men to make no statement which may incriminate the witnesses who appeared on their behalf and on their part perjured themselves equally."

There had been a great deal that was ferocious and brutal, the evidence was clear and full, and yet they died declaring their innocence.

An ex-Roman Catholic priest confessor, says that "The penitent on confessing his crime, when about to expiate it by hanging, or before he is convicted, is guarded by priestly absolution. The murderer being absolved, his conscience is at ease, and he considers himself, and is by his fellow-Catholics considered, as innocent as a babe just baptized. This is it which emboldens a murderer to assert his innocence in those words. There are cases when a truly penitent murderer is forbidden by the priest to confess publicly his crime, ou account of the stigma which the deed would cast upon his relations and friends. This, no doubt, is but worldly prudence—it has occurred in numberless cases."

Such is the condition of things in priest-ridden lands like Ireland. Truth, honor and religion are ignored even when on the confines of the eternal world.

THE FEASTS OF SATURN.

Mr. Editor:—Your statement in the Cynosure of Feb. 15, that "Mardi Gras was the feast of Saturn," is far more comprehensive, far more significant than it may appear to many even of your Protestant readers.

"Throughout the realms of the ancient paganism," Saturn was worshiped as the "god of the mysteries," "Father of the gods," etc. He was worshiped also as the Messiah—the false Messiah, of course—and under the name of "Tammuz." As the god of wine, the patron of drunkards, licentiousness, and every conceivable form of debauchery, and "uncleanness," he was worshiped under the name of "Bacchus." His worship was celebrated privately in the "mysteries," and publicly and openly in the feasts, or "festivals." Whatever difference in details there may have been in these different methods, in character, they were always the same. In both, "superstition waved high her flaming torch, while the wildest, foulest revellings and debaucheries were always their inseparable and even inevitable concomitants.

Both sexes were initiated and miugled freely in the mysteries. Shrouded and defended by the dark pall of secrecy which enveloped them, those mysteries became—as was iutended—"places of assignation," and, as a natural result, the fruitful nurseries of indiscriminate licentiousness and vice. Whenever and wherever the feasts, or festivals of Saturn were celebrated, the whole community became a complete pandemonium in debauchery, licentiousness and moral pollution of every form and name. Rollin, in his Ancient History, says of the feasts of Bacchus, in Athens, Greece, "Nothing was seen but drunkenness, debauchery, and all that the most abandoned licentiousness could conceive of, gross and abominable. And this, an entire people, reputed the wisest of all Greece....admired and practiced. I say, an entire people, for Plato, speaking of the Bacchanals, says he has seen the whole city of Athens drunk at once!"

Strange as it may appear, these excesses were always a part of the solemnities of the festival. Stranger still, it is now well known, that amid all the abominations that attended these orgies, their grand design was, professedly, "the purification of souls....from the guilt and defilement of sin!" Servius in Georg., lib. 1. vol 2, p. 197, and in Eneid, lib 6, vol 1, p. 400. In Hislop, p. 35. In Babylon, where it originated, and afterward in all the pagan nations, the great drunken festival of the month Thebeth, answering to our December,—called in Rome, Saturnalia (Hislop, pp. 156, 7) was celebrated in commemoration of the birth of Tammuz (Baechus). In Rome, the whole month of December was considered as belonging to the Saturnalia, though the 25th was especially devoted to the birthday celebration. (Idem, pp. 159, 60.)

Just as now in Christmas, the festivities were continued according to the tastes, inclination, or ability of individuals. As now, too, by some they were continued till the great carnival, now called Mardi Gras, in February, which seems to have been the winding up feast, in the Saturnalia.

All this great Mystery of Iniquity—the old pagan Saturualia, the drunken, Babylonian festival of Bacchus, uow lies hidden, disguised, yet rampant, under that cunning, deceitful name—Christmas!

How came this? Let us see. Very early in the history of the church, Christians began to celebrate the birth of Christ. Many celebrated it on the 20th of May, others, on the 6th of January. Late in the fourth century, the fiat of the church that December 25th was the time, settled the whole matter, aud from that time till now that day has thus been widely regarded and observed.

But why did the church adopt the drunken festival of Bacchus, the Saturnalia, with which to celebrate the birth of Christ, and why did she choose December 25th for that purpose? Let us see. One single fact answers the whole question. Compromise; compromise with paganism; concession to its dark spirit in everything, had become, in that century, the ruling policy in the church. The order of Christ's house was already set aside and superseded. The ancient pagan hierachy from the Pont. Max. down to the lowest priestly order, had usurped the place of the ministers of Christ; the Lord's Supper had been supplanted by the uubloody sacrifice of the mass. The ordinance of baptism had become thoroughly paganized; pagan rites and ceremonies had completely perverted the Christian worship, and several pagan festivals had been adopted and had found their way into the church, as Christian ordinances! In short, the church has herself completely swallowed up, absorbed by that vast sea of paganism, into which she had deliberately thrown and abandoned herself. Her adoption of the Saturnalia was therefore, but the natural, logical result of the rule, the system of administratiou, which for centuries she had followed and practiced.

The reasou for her choice of December 25th, is equally clear. The birth of Bacchus (Tammuz) had for ages been celebrated among the pagan uations at time of the winter solstice in December; in Rome, on the 25th. As the church had committed herself to the work of adopting and assimilating the whole system of the ancient pagauism, it was but natural that she should seek to perpetuate the worship of its chief divinity, and especially that great festival by which his birth was commemorated.

To do this, and at the same time impose the festival, birth-day aud all, upon the world as a Christian ordinance must be a master-stroke of skill, in strategy, artifice and cunning. But she was equal to the occasion. She fulminated the astounding falsehood, that Christ was born on the 25th of December, the natal day of his great enemy and rival, the great pagan Messiah; and then, under the captivating, but profane euphonism of Christmas, she adopted and baptized the old Roman Saturnalia, the druuken Babylonian festival of Bacchus, with which, on that day professedly, to celebrate the birth of Christ!

Of course, Romanists have accepted and observed this festival from the first, but until within a few years most Protestants have treated it with deserved contempt. Now, however, this purely pagan observance, this fuming, recking exhalation from the bottomless pit, under its present specious disguise, is fast finding its way into the very bosom of the Christian church! Even the rank and dignity of a Christian ordinanee are being freely accorded to it. In fact, no true Christian ordinance receives even a tithe of the attention and honor now being bestowed on this great name of blasphemy!

The manner of its celebratiou—excepting the bloody sacrifices—is precisely that of ancient times. The gifts, mirth, feasting, dancing, "laciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revelings, banquetings and abominable idolatries" of its great bacchanalian original, are literally and carefully preserved and practiced; and this not among Romanists only, but to a shameful extent, even among Protestants!

With such positive and emphatie endorsement from both church and clergy, as is now given it on every hand, it is no wonder that Christmas is surely and powerfully sapping and undermining the very foundations of morality and religion in our land. Nor is it any wonder that the unanimous verdiet of the best portion of the American press should be, and is, that the worst features of this worst of festivals are increasing upon us with every repetition of the Christmas celebration! Surely we must have fallen upon the times predicted by the Master, when deceivers shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that if it were possible, they will decieve even the very elect!

Of the abominable idolatries of this feast of Saturn, so abundant, so startling, even among professed Christians, more anon. Senex, Sr.

Reading, Mass.

FRIENDSHIP, LOVE AND TRUTH.

BY E. RONAYNE.

These words form the key-note of the Odd-fellow society, and in the imposing though empty ritual of that institution they are conspicuously represented by "three links" and worn as a distinguishing badge by almost every Odd-fellow iu good standing throughout the world. Let us examine them for a little while in the light of God's Word and see what they really signify and what is their true source and character.

And first as to what "Friendship" represents in the Odd-fellow society. It must unquestionably represent one of two things. It must mean either "the friendship of the world" or else it must mean the friendship which exists, and which must of necessity exist among the children of God—among those who have been "born again" and who are therefore united to a living Christ at God's right hand. It is scarcely necessary to remark, and yet because of the abounding ignorance around everywhere, and more especially because of the prevailing corruption hidden by the woman—the false church—and so leavening the whole lump (Mat. 13: 33) it will be proper to say that God recognizes one society and one only down here in this dark, sin-cursed world, and that society is the one formed or organized by the Holy Ghost through the Word of God, composed of "born again" ones and of which the Lord Jesus Christ is the living head. In God's Word there are two classes of people, and only two, most clearly and distinctly set forth, namely the children of God and the children of the devil. Those who are uow the children of God were at one time and up to a certain date—up to a certain moment—the children of the devil; but just as soon as they received Christ as their own personal Saviour, just the moment they trusted in him as their substitute, clearing the whole scene of sin and puttiug it away at once and forever "by the sacrifice of himself," that moment they were "born again;" they instautly became "the children of God by faith iu Christ Jesus;" they were "delivered from the power of darkness and translated, or trausplanted, into the kingdom of God's dear Son." (Col. 1: 13.) They were "sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise" (Eph. 1: 13), as those for whom the Lord Jesus paid the ransom of his own precious, priceless blood. (1 Pet. 1; 18, 19.) They are united to himself forever and forever, being members of his body of his flesh aud of his bones (Eph. 5: 30), and he will one day present them all—every one of them—"before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." Jude 24.

The other class, those who have rejected Christ, or rather those who have never yet really received him as their own individual, personal Saviour no matter what their profession may be, are without any question whatever the children of the devil, following his course (Eph. 2: 2), indwelt by his spirit aud naturally and unceasingly doing the lusts of their father. Eph. 2: 2. Speaking of the personal, practical holiness of believers the Holy Ghost most definitely and clearly brings these two classes before us. In 1 John 3: 10 we read, "In this the children of God are manifested and the children of the devil," and in John 8: 44 the Lord Jesus himself very plainly declares, "Ye are of your father the devil aud the lusts" or desires "of your father ye will do." Hence then the two distinct classes, and there is no middle ground. The children of God—born again, born from above, born again by the Word of God in the power of the Holy Ghost (1 Pet. 1: 22) and the children of the devil, rejecting the Word of God and resisting the Holy Ghost. (Acts 7: 51.) The children of God having their Father's spirit, their Father's nature and so united by the Holy Ghost to the Man in the glory (Phil. 3: 13; 2 Pet. 1: 4.): the children of the devil having their father's spirit, their father's nature and united to him.

But again, the children of God are collectively designated by the Holy Ghost as the household of God (Eph. 2: 19); the church of the living God (1 Tim. 3: 15); the church of the first born (Heb. 12: 33); the bride (John 3: 29; Rev. 21: 9), and the body (Col. 3: 15); but nowhere in God's Word do we find them designated by the name of Odd-fellowship, or Freemasonry; nor by that of Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, or by any other name or title in common use among the various sects and systems and societies of men in these last and perilous times. Odd-fellowship, as a human institution, rejects Christ in toto. His name cannot be even tolerated accordiug to the laws of Odd-fellowship in any lodge of the system nor can it be mentioned in any so-called prayer or religious formula or ceremony as set forth by the Supreme Grand Lodge of this country. Hence, then, without any doubt, and beyond and above all controversy, the society of Odd-fellowship is simply and purely a worldly society, distinct and separate altogether from that one only society which God recognizes, which the Holy Ghost is still organiziug, and of which the Lord Jesus Christ himself is the head. Its laws are worldly, its motives and objects are worldly, its membership is worldly, every solitary element of its entire formation is worldly through and through; and beyond all cavil or disputation, according to the nuerring Word of God, the entire system from copestone to foundation is owned and controlled aud inspired by the devil. It is a worldly, devilish institution and as such its so-called "friendship" is that and that alone which exists among the devils and which will ultimately be the prevailing sentiment among the damned in hell.

This language may seem harsh, and doubtless to some readers of the Cynosure it will possibly sound as being perhaps somewhat of an exaggeration; but granting this to be the case, and putting it in the very mildest possible form by simply stating that Odd-fellowship is merely a worldly institution, and that its "friendship" is also of the world, what then? Now turn to Jas. 4: 4—"Ye adulterers (spiritual fornicators—Revised Version) know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God." The friendship of the world eumity with God! The "friendship" of Odd-fellowship enmity with God! As an Odd-fellow you are not only an enemy of God by nature for that every unsaved man is, but the very bond of friendly intercourse which Odd-fellowship inculcates and which therefore ought to exist in every lodge, that very bond of friendship, I say, is most distinctly declared to be "enmity with God." Then without any question the first link of that "chain" which Odd-fellowship "entwines" around its candidates on the very night of their initiation is to represent, when truly interpreted—that is, interpreted in the light of God's truth—that henceforth they must be enemies to God and to his Christ and that they will love, honor, serve and obey the devil so far as his wishes may be revealed through the medium of Odd-fellowship, and as expounded and set forth by the Noble Grand or the Grand Patriarch. This is simply terrible and yet there is no evading its truth. The friendship of Odd-fellowship means enmity with God, and he who is a friend to Odd-fellowship must of necessity bear testimony against God.

In my next I shall endeavor to examine the two remaining links "Love and Truth."

PEOPLES' OBJECTIONS.

BY MRS. E. G. BAILEY.

The objections that people make against opposing secret societies are so singular and inconsistent when you put them together, that they would be funny if they did not reveal a state of mind wholly blind to the truth.

Says one, "It is such a little thing to oppose secret societies. They don't amount to anything. Why waste your time and strength?" If it is a little thing let us get rid of them speedily. The stones were to be gathered out of the highway of the King. But just try opposing them. Condemn them in public. Get up in prayer-meeting and say they are evil. Move a resolution that they be abolished, and then see if it is "a little thing."

"Oh," says another, "if you say anything it stirs up such a fuss. It will split the church, and you can't do anything anyway. Secret societies are too powerful."

Then it is not a light thing to oppose them but does demand a great effort and much sacrifice. And if it is true that there is anything besides the power of Christ so strong that it binds the consciences of men, it is time that those who claim liberty of thought were rising to assert their rights. And what if it does split the church? The true church cannot be split. Its "fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ," but it may need pruning.

"But I don't think it is time to agitate the subject. People are not ready for it. They don't want to hear about it." Of course they don't. Unwelcome truth is always bitter, but there is all the more need of it. Shall we say of a sick patient, "Oh wait till he feels better; he don't like the medicine. It makes him worse; wait awhile." No, give the bitter portion, use the knife if need be, but do not stand foolishly waiting for a sick man to say what he will or will not take. Does the Bible justify a man who believes a thing to be wrong, in keeping still about it because it will offend somebody if he speaks?

"But a man needn't be forever harping about the matter. Mr. So-and-So makes a great mistake in pressing the matter so hard." Perhaps Pharaoh thought Moses was "harping" too much on one subject, and the people of Israel thought for a long time that he was making a great mistake. God himself says he "earnestly protested" against the sins of the people—"rising up early and protesting." How can we ever get the truth before the people unless it is presented to them? And is it going to grow any easier by putting it off?

"Well, let them alone and they will die out of themselves." This is not true. Facts and experience disprove it. Says a distinguished Christian writer, "Organized and profitable evil never disappears except in storm and tempest. Secret societies, far from dying out, are increasing with startling rapidity. The Masonic order alone has more lodges and members than there are Congregational churches and communicants and there are numerous other equally strong orders. Society is eaten through and through with their poison and there is no hope of deliverance except by the grace of God working through the enlightened conscience of men.

"Well, preach the Gospel, that is enough." That is like saying to the doctor, "Give him medicine, that is enough." "Certainly," he will answer, "but I must know what ails the patient and give him the proper remedy." A mixture of all drugs might stupefy and kill. A general gospel that does not hit a man's particular sin may calm him into a sleep from which only death and the judgment will awake him.

"But" say a great many—and this is the most hopeless objection of all—"I don't know or care anything about secret societies. They are mere child's play. I don't belong. They don't affect me in the least. I am not interested." Truly it can be said of these as the prophet said of old, "They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace, when there is no peace." We need the blessed instruction of the Spirit that we may learn to "consider our ways."

MASSACHUSETTS CLERGYMEN.

The religion of Freemasonry can no more compare favorably with the Christian religion, than the calf-worship of Aaron could compare with the religion of Moses.

The country naturally looks to Massachusetts as the true representative of the religion of the Pilgrims; but if Freemasonry has taken the place of that religion, what must be the consequences to the country? These consequences would be to the country what the consequences would have been to the world if the calf-worship of Aaron had been carried into the Holy Land instead of the religion of Moses.

We are led to these remarks by a very singular incident in the history of the United States. The incident is as strongly marked in a moral point of view as was the conflict between Aaron and Moses. It is as follows:

When, in the year 1833, Freemasons of Vermont, themselves, arose against Freemasonry as an institution whose practical workings had proved it to be unchristian and unrepublican, an effort was made by the people of that State to abolish the lodge, which finally succeeded. The arguments advanced in favor of this movement evinced an elevation and manliness of sentiment that showed that the State was worthy of being regarded as the model republican community of the world. A large number of the fraternity expressed themselves in the most decided terms in favor of surrendering the selfish advantages which Freemasonry gave them as a duty to republican principles.

While the question of abandoning Freemasonry was being discussed in the Grand Lodge of Vermont, in October, 1833, resolutions to that effect being moved by a Royal Arch Mason, a reverend gentleman from Massachusetts, a Mason of high standing, made his appearance in the lodge and advanced arguments of the following purport, viz., In a courteous and eloquential manner he endeavored to smooth over the objections which Vermonters had raised against Masonry; praised the institution in the old-fashioned way, by representing it as the handmaid of religion, as having much of the Bible doctrines in it, etc., etc.; expatiated largely upon its beauties and great benefits, upon the bitterness and persecution of Antimasons; appealed to the pride and spunk of the Green Mountain Masons in defending and sustaining the order, and intimated that their case was like that of the martyrs. He was very lavish in his compliments upon the State and upon its Freemasonry.

But in spite of these compliments of this Masonic clergymen from Massachusetts, the people of the State went on and abolished what they found could not be reformed; the Masonic lodges, to their honor, gave up their so-called charters, and ceased to exist. The Anti-masonic party after a hard but glorious struggle, came in power, and may be said to have maintained the republican character of the State for a period of nearly thirty years, in a way to command the respect and admiration of the world.

But it was not many years after the Vermont lodges had been closed forever (it was thought) before the insidious teachings of the Massachusetts clergyman began to reopen these lodges, and set them in active operation; so that by the close of the war of the rebellion they were in more active operation than ever before. The Masons of the State, in spite of a law to the contrary, took unto themselves seven other unclean spirits seven times worse than the first, until now the government of the State, like that of Massachusetts, is Masonic and pagan, and not republican and Christian.

We think that the Massachusetts clergy, if they remain quiet under the recent exposures that have been made respecting the character of Freemasonry, virtually accept the sentiments of their representative to Vermont in 1833, and should be recognized throughout the country as sustaining and advocating the Masonic religion. Instead of being regarded as the true exponents of the Puritan faith and Puritan polities, they should be held as representing the interests of the Masonic religion and Masonic government. It will be utterly ruinous to the country to regard Massachusetts as a Puritan State in religion and politics while she is secretly sustaining the unchristian and unrepublican doctrines of the Masonic lodge.

The people must come to regard Masonry as what it really is, and treat it as such, or the present form of government must be abandoned. Freemasonry could no more run a republican form of government than the Romish church could. It is a secret, irresponsible political party, which seeks to advance its interests and secure power by assuming the forms and pretences of religion, while its morality is utterly spurious. Of all parties the worst one is a secret party. To trust such a party with power is violation of every precept of human prudence.

AMERICAN.

MASONIC EXCURSION.

Having, of late, taxed our vast powers on the "Milky Way" and also in Aurora's theatre to a dangerous degree, all in the service of our sublime order, I conclude to join a band of my "thrice potent" fellows in a grand and sublime trip around the circuit of the late comet, and thus unbend my gigantic intellect.

We must away, as the celestial train is now halting for its Masonic conclave, waving his fiery tail in graceful fashion, and bowing his head of molten fire in solemn reverence, while all the stars seem to vie with one another to do honor to our sublime constellation. Some of our royal magnates may of right be enrolled.

"Thrice Potents" Cheekling, Egotus, Proudstep, Strutwell and Longfeather.

Present.

"Princes of Mercy" Clap-gavel, Rush-dagger and Slysting.

Here.

"Grand High Priests" Crossbones, Tipskull and Hon. Mr. Compass, Esq.

Present (and anxiously waiting).

"Grand Pontiffs" Lord Pomps, Dean Bumkins and Maj. Somepumpkins.

Our reverences here.

"Knights of Kadosh" Balaam, Ahab and Saul.

Our royal dignities all present.

"Grand Inspector, Inquisitor" Belshazzar and Belzebub.

Behold our illustrious Egos!

"Grand Inspector General of 33d-degree" Lucifer Iscariot, "Grand King" and "Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret."

I.

With such a retinue of thrice potents, etc., etc., we embark on the comet "Bell," Jan. A. L. 5883. By a special dispensation of our grand council we decree Bro. Albert Pike, Grand Inspector General of the 33d degree, S. D., to take a "steerage" passage on the tail of the comet just 24,000 miles in the rear of our sublime Jumbos. We are careful to hold his excellency inside of our cable-tow, which is 25,000 miles, the circumference of our Masonic mundane. This dispensation is made as a mild repremand for scalping, by instigation, Union soldiers, wounded as they were, on the battle field of Pea Ridge. True, he violated no law of ours, but we must, through Masonic policy, seem to be loyal. He can make the sign of distress if his ears and feet get cold, in the breeze, and we will take him into our benign bosoms as a brother beloved. The tail will all be needed for the accommodation of the representatives of the multiplying secret orders, of all names and natures, which, excepting perhaps a few, such as Ku-Klux, Mollies, and such like. These bioplasts, called the minor orders, will naturally come in as steerage passengers, on the tail of our sublime craft, till such time as they shall culminate in the more solid form, and can be recognized by the parent orders. We sincerely hope the tail will not need to be extended to take on the fast increasing progeny, for it might collide with some celestial body and endanger our angelic conclave.

Now we are "all aboard" and on our way around the grand circle, we expect by special edict to make the trip inside three score and ten weeks. This will be a rate of speed to which our steed is quite unused, as its usual trip is made in about 125 years. But we are fast dignities, and regulate the stars, you see. Look at us and our titles and remember.

We can do little more, in this writing, than to inaugurate our celestial panorama. In future messages, our amazingly sublime fraternity, will be greatly edified, as we by degrees spread out upon the expanded heavens the mystic lore of the eternal ages.

Our first look-out amazes us! Let us invoke the gods of mental intercourse to help us to photograph the scenes now passing—almost rending our Masonic powers of thought, gigantic though they be. A square acre of exclamation points would not do justice to our wondering eyes. Let the legend-gods of Masonry awake! Slumber, ye mundane symbols of Egypt, and repose in eternal sleep! We need you no more. Our great Masonic telescope is on sale, below cost. We need it no more. We leave Morris Heights and revel among the stars. We cross the Milky Way pull the belts of Jupiter and drum on the rings of Saturn. The Milky Way is our boulevard, and the belts of Jupiter our regalia and the rings of Saturn our gong.

Since we embarked on this craft our craniums are swelling so rapidly that fears are entertained that no hats made will hold our sublime heads. Supreme Pontiff Wiseacre, superintendent of our new Masonic furnishing department, has already anticipated the necessity of huge beavers (size 13¾) to be worn by us at the Trienial Conclave, A. L. 5883, in which we shall be Jumbos among our sublime brethern of only common calibre. Our dear wives, with their side degrees, back on the tail, will never recognize us again, by our pictures. Indeed, we only know one another—even ourselves, by titles and badges. Dear creatures, they will have to be reassured of our identity, perhaps, by our peculiarities; such as scars on our bodies, and corns on our toes, so vastly shall we be transmuted! Still they come! Masonic scenes!! Come to our help, sungods of universal language! Continents of adjectives are needed to qualify our Masonic worlds. Wait patiently. Pike's Peak.

THE NAMELESS PROPHET OF BETHEL.

It is remarkable that both the leading actors in this tragic scene [at Bethel, 1 Kings 13.] are nameless. They may have been held in deserved repute for good which they had previously done; they had sinned and had suffered; and the Spirit which records the sins of David and of Solomon, notwithstanding their wealth and power, deals tenderly with the reputation of a poor disobedient prophet, as it suppresses the name of "a woman that was a sinner."

The history of the nameless prophet closes beneath a cloud. Name, honor, reputation, and life itself are gone. Had he obeyed his God, who can tell what service he might have been permitted to perform in the world? But he made shipwreck through disobedience, met a violent death, and was buried in a stranger's grave. And all this came from listening to an old, gray-headed minister of God—a man who evidently had enjoyed at some time a personal experience of divine communications, but who lacked those principles of truth and righteousness, without which no man can be a safe adviser or guide.

It was a bitter message that the old prophet bore to his deceived and unsuspecting guest, and no doubt it made a deep impression upon the lying prophet's mind. That which he had spoken, perhaps in jest or carelessness, had cost a man of God his life, and he could not fail to charge himself with being guilty of his brother's blood.

There are solemn lessons in this record. God sends men still to cry against the sins and follies that are in the world. Those who obey the call and fulfil the Master's will speaking his words and doing his work, may have before them a career of usefulness and honor such as cannot be elsewhere attained. But let them beware of Bethel's lying prophets, let them beware of listening to the evil counsel of old backslidden ministers who feel at home among the calves and idolatries of Bethel, whose consciences are seared, and who, to accomplish their ends will lie. The race of lying prophets is not extinct, and honest and faithful men are still misguided, deceived and ruined by their falsehoods. Let godly men beware of godless leaders. Let the servants of the Most High know their mission and their Master, let them take counsel from the Lord, obeying his voice, and they shall find safety and peace and blessing. But woe to those who seek their ease and pleasure in forbidden paths; who sit down to rest beneath the oak when the call of God bids them hasten on their way; who count the voice of a fellow-servant as more authoritative than the voice of their Maker, and who will accept the teachings of a lying prophet in preference to the solemn admonitions of the living God. Let the servants of the Lord take heed to their ways, and let the untimely death of the nameless prophet be a warning to many a soul to know their own duty in the sight of God, and to pay no heed whatever to any man, whether priest or prophet, who teaches them to disobey the Lord's commands, or disregard the instructions of his work.—The Christian.

—In 1830 Andrew Jackson, President of the United States; John H. Eaton, Secretary of War, and Postmaster General William T. Barry, were elected honorary members of Federal Lodge.

—There are in Great Britain 227,655 Freemasons; of these England and Wales and the dependencies muster 140,000, Scotland 69,256, and Ireland 18,400. There are in Europe about 340,000 Masons in all, and in North and South America about 650,000, and in India and China probably about 10,000, making a total of a little over a million. It is possible that we may add to that number another 10,000 for Cuba and Liberia and Australia.—London Freemason.

THE CHAMBERSBURG CASE.

Editor Cynosure:—Not long ago brief mention was made in the United Brethren in Christ of the fact that the loyal King street brethren here are in possession of the deeds of the original U. B. church and parsonage of Chambersburg, Pa. Mr. J. Hoke, a member of the "old congregation," replied to the statement in the Telescope of Feb. 28, thus taking advantage of very much wider circulation for his statements. Recently the editor of the Telescope was here for some days, when we sent him a courteous note with a view to lay before him such a reply to Mr. Hoke in the Telescope as would relieve the King street brethren of reflection, by Mr. Hoke, upon their honor and fairness in securing the deeds. The editor declined to meet us, with the remark that it was none of his business, etc., though he had made it his "business" to publish for Mr. Hoke, giving one side of the case.

In view of this, we desire to avail ourselves of the columns of the Cynosure to give additional circulation to the following extract from the current number of the United Brethren in Christ:

HOLDING THE DEEDS.

In reply to Bro. Hoke we have to say:

1. If we can show that Bro. Hoke was in hearty sympathy and co-operation with the King street brethren at the time they obtained the deeds from him, it will relieve them of the implied charge that they secured them dishonorably. This we will show as follows: A letter from Bro. Hoke, then absent from home, was received by these brethren and published in the Herald of this city. It began thus:

——————— Aug. 4th, '78.

Rev. John Fohl, Dear Bro.:—I often think of you * * and desire to see you and tell you of the grace graciously bestowed upon me. * * Then there is Bro. Bishop, and Fetterhoff, and Nicklas * * and many others whose names are in the book of life.

This was over a year after the date when he says he gave them the deeds. But he was with them fully at the time he gave up the deeds. About that time a meeting was held at which Bro. Hoke presided, composed of a number of these brethren, as P. Nicklas, L. Oyler, G. Bessor, J. Fetterhoff, J. Nicklas, D. M. Byers and others. Bro. Hoke drafted a paper which was passed by the meeting, from which we quote as follows:

Resolved, 1. That we regard the prosecution of Bro. P. Nicklas to be instigated by a spirit of revenge, because of his zealous defense of our church laws.

2. That believing this whole case against this brother to be aimed at all who love the Discipline of the church, and are determined to stand up in its defense, we will make his cause our own, and will stand or fall with him.

Thus we see that Bro. Hoke was in the same boat with these brethren before and after the time when he gave them the deeds. How then can he insinuate that he gave a certain brother these papers only as a matter of courtesy, and that the brother did not return them honorably? That person was Bro. Levi Oyler, Sr., whose Christian character and social standing would need no vindication in this county or elsewhere by J. Hoke. This brother has not deserved these reflections upon his honor. If Bro. Hoke is now going a different way from Bro. Oyler, he ought not to write as though they were not in hearty sympathy when the deeds were obtained by Bro. Oyler, who had no occasion to promise to return them. Moreover, the deeds were in Bro. Hoke's store only for safety, and he was not their official keeper. Bro. Oyler, as chairman of the board of trustees, had a perfect right to get them at any time and keep them away from the store. But Bro. Oyler, Bro. P. Nicklas, and Bro. G. Bessor, the trustees who regarded themselves as having been illegally put out of the board of trustees, held the deeds, till their case should be tested in the higher courts of the church.

They accordingly appealed to Annual conference, and thence to the Westfield General conference. That body admitted that the rights of these brethren were "prejudiced" by "irregularities" in the "proceedings" and "rulings" of Quarterly conference: but it decided that it had no jurisdiction in the case. The deeds were therefore retained four years longer till the Lisbon conference. This body did not deny that the appeal came up regularly, and was "connected with" the case at the Westfield session. But it passed the case with giving mere advice to the appellants. As they have not felt themselves bound to accept the advice, they still stand on their appeal, and hold the deeds. This they will do till the appeal is heard.

2. If the possession of the deeds is of no importance, why the recent manifestation of interest in the matter, to say nothing of past consultation of attorneys, and possible "threats" for their recovery? Why Bro. Hoke's "correction?"

3. Against the "disrespect" for the "old congregation" in the term "So-called First church," we will place the term "seceded" used twice by Bro. Hoke respecting the King street brethren. If it cannot be proved that they actually "seceded," then they have as much claim to the name "First church" as has the "old congregation." That they did not at any time secede, is clear. If they did, it must have been prior to the time that Bro. Hoke ceased to "stand or fall" with them. The only date that could be assigned to their secession was when they first worshiped as regular classes in a building in a suburb called Clarksville. We find, however, that after they began to worship there they were still held by the "old congregation" as members. Action of the official meeting, dated April 5th, '78, says "Resolved, That the disaffected portion of this congregation be classed, etc., by this official body and the election of officers be held in forty days, provided they totally discontinue their operations in Clarksville and return to their duties as members of this church." Bro. Hoke was still in feeling with them at this time, as we find his letter to them dated August 4th, '78. Now if their secession took place at the time that the "old congregation" ceased to claim them as members, or when Bro. Hoke ceased to go with them to stand or fall, such date would be valuable as showing when the old congregation got its right to be called "First church." Even then it would not be fully proved, for it is not fair to say a congregation seceedes when another one ceases to claim it, or when a particular man ceases to co-operate or sympathize with it. Bro. Hoke says of his church that it is "in complete harmony with the Annual conference." But is it with the Discipline either directly or even indirectly through the conference? If not, it cannot easily show its right to be called a United Brethren church at all. W. O. Tobey.

THE MASONIC "BLACK HAND"!!

AN INFAMOUS LETTER THREATENING THE LIFE OF THE MINNESOTA STATE AGENT.

Fairmont, March 10, 1883.

A word of warning to Mr. Williams. Sir, you are hereby given timely notice, that you may avoid the danger that awaits you, should you attempt to lecture against secret organizations in the village of Fairmont. It having come to our ears that you intended giving a series of lectures against secret organizations, 25 of us have been selected, sworn, at the risk of our own lives, to use every possible means within the power of man to prevent this lecture. We have heard of you before in different parts of the State, of what you are doing, and that you are making a business of lecturing against secret organizations. And we have resolved that you shall go no further in this matter. You have also distributed tracts in our village against secret organizations. Now we warn you to go no further in this direction. If you presume to come into our village again engaged in distributing tracts as before, it will be the worse for you. And should you presume to come into our village to hold the meetings that you now contemplate, we say to you, that you will not get out of the village alive. But that your worthless carcass will find a watery grave at the bottom of Lake Sisseton with a stone about your neck, so that your relations and friends may never know of your whereabouts, nor of your awful death. You must recollect that you are not the first one who has been compelled to stop this war against secret societies. You belong to the same class that have been trying to pull down Masonry and other secret societies for a great many years. But we are strong now and are growing in strength every day. You must recollect that the government and the courts are on our side, and we intend to put down this opposition to secret societies at any cost, and we again warn you under pain of Death not to attempt your lecture in our village. We have resolved that you shall not lecture in our village, and we may say to you now, if you attempt it, it will cost you your life. We also give you warning to stop your lecturing againts secret societies in other parts of the State, as an organization is being formed all over the State for the purpose of suppressing your efforts to break down such societies. You have been watched and followed on the cars, and would have met the death you so richly deserve, at one place in this State had the proper parties got to you in time. There has also been seen with you another man in different parts of this State which has been reported to us, although we did not learn his name. We say to you that if you have any regard for his life you had better not bring him with you, and you had better warn him to desist from further pursuing this course any longer. Now, in conclusion we say to you, that if you value your life you had better stay away from Fairmont. For as sure as there is a God in heaven we will take your worthless life if you attempt to lecture in this village. 25.

There is a secret fraternity in New York, composed of foreigners, that uses a peculiar perfumery as its signal or hailing sign. A cavity ring is worn from which the perfume is discharged by pressing a spring. The object and extent of the association are unknown.—Inter Ocean.

—A brother in Missouri, in ordering books for distribution, says that they will be put in the hands of his brother, who is a seceded Mason, and will use them at a special term of the circuit court. This seceder was brought to a realization of the enormity of Masonry through reading "Freemasonry Illustrated." "I have caused many others," says the letter, "to leave the lodge, and hope by the grace of God to prevail upon others still to forsake the lodge and serve one Master even Jesus Christ. I have succeeded in getting all my brothers to forsake the lodge. Thank God! One they tried to murder for over two years, but he still lives to expose their evil deeds." This is a grand testimony.

Reform News.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Coldwater, Mich., March 16th, 1883.

I have been talking over a plan with some of the friends in this State for dividing up and paying off the Washington deficit. We have concluded that Michigan's share is about $500, and one-fifth of that is already secured. Two men take each a $50 share, and if we can find eight more the thing will be done. That is Michigan's share. Bro. C. C. Foote approved the plan heartily, and said his wife and family had been talking of putting in $100, but unexpected calls made it inconvenient for them to do so now. I mention this as a suggestion, and shall probably have more to say on this line soon.

At Jackson I met a most cordial welcome from Messrs. A. and H. Wilcox and their estimable mother, now more than three score and ten, and full in the faith. Their blessing and their gifts for our work are appreciated. At Spring Arbor I found brother and sister E. Mathews in deep sorrow, hourly expecting the departure of his mother, whom the physicians said could not recover. She was full of joy and hope in the Lord.

From Ypsilanti, a five miles walk mostly by moonlight brought me to Friends' church and a protracted meeting in progress, under the direction of Bro. Wm. Allen, assisted by two other ministers in Friends connection. Bro. Allen is of stalwart physique, and able in word and doctrine. He is "comely" like Solomon's beloved, and has known the sorrows of the bondman. Here I met E. Z. Derbyshire, and at his house found a home and liberal and sympathizing friends in our work. Whitaker was four and a half miles away, and learning of revival meetings there I made my way to the town house, where I met Bro. Foote, listened to a most able and thorough discourse in which the secret orders received a stinging rebuke, and after services closed we passed the night together at the hospitable home of sister Child, who has been long and favorably known in those regions.

I reached Hudson by morning trains, changing at Adrian, hoping to find the veteran John Phillips, Esq., and confer with him of plans, and more especially of the Washington enterprise. In this I was disappointed, as he is spending the winter in the South for the benefit of his health. Here I met Bro. Pixley, who gave me a hearty welcome and an excellent dinner.

I reached here in time to accompany Bro. Day to an evening appointment two and one-half miles in the country, where we met a very interesting company, largely of young people, who listened to the word with marked attention. Several have been recently converted at this point under Bro. Day's ministration of the word. To-day we have spent mostly in talking over the general state of the work, the approaching Michigan Convention, and the state and prospects of the Michigan American. I am booked for three sermons to-morrow, and expect on Monday to start for Indiana.

Friends everywhere I go are taking new heart in view of the unprecedented advances of the past year, and many and fervent prayers are offered for the speedy and permanent establishment of our reform at the nation's capital.

BRO. HINMAN'S LETTERS.

BALTIMORE AND ITS CHURCHES.

The city of Baltimore is in many respects a paradox. An old city, it continues to grow as steadily as a Western village. A Southern city, subject in the past to the disabilities that slavery entailed, it is, and has been remarkable for its enterprise and business activity. A great commercial center, with a vast foreign immigration, it is exceptional for its general morality, for temperance and Sabbath observance. Originally a Roman Catholic colony, it was the most liberal of the original thirteen, and has ever maintained freedom of speech and the press. It is badly paved, but splendidly watered, and lighted largely with the electric light. It has the finest markets I ever saw, many splendid buildings, and fine monuments, with but few and inferior parks and irregular streets, that are so badly numbered that a stranger needs a guide. It has very fine school buildings but no great universities; an intelligent population, but a daily press that does not compare well with that of other large cities.

This has usually been considered a Roman Catholic city, but it is more nearly a city of Methodists. There are but 28 Roman Catholic churches and 208 Evangelical Protestant churches; of which 80 are Methodist, 39 Protestant Episcopal, 28 Presbyterians (including one Reformed and United one), one Congregational, 19 Lutherans and 20 Baptist churches. Besides there are 8 Jewish synagogues, one Unitarian and two Universalist churches.

The colored churches of the city are generally large and finely furnished. The membership in seven of them is more than 1,000. I preached Sabbath forenoon to Union Baptist Church, Rev. H. Johnson, pastor. The number of members is about 1,200. There were perhaps 1000 present. My remonstrance against the secret orders was kindly received, though the Grand High Priest, who is an officer in the church, was present. The pastor thanked me, and said that next time I must give them more on that line. In the afternoon I preached in the Leadenhall street Baptist Church. It has a seating capacity of 2,500 and a membership of 450. Both these churches have large, fine organs for their audience and lecture-rooms.

Last night I met at the Leadenhall street church a select company, all members of the church, all belonged to secret orders and most were Masons and Odd-fellows. I spoke an hour and a half, and spent an hour more in answering questions. Several of them acknowledged that Freemasonry and Christianity were incompatible, and that the secret orders were working injury to the church.

To-morrow night, D. V. I speak in another colored Baptist church to a mixed audience. These colored churches are becoming awake to the evils of secretism. Some faithful pastors are declaring the truth, and there is much that is hopeful in the outlook.

Yours in Christ,
H. H. Hinman.

THE DISCUSSION AT MORNING SUN.

Morning Sun, Iowa, March 15, 1883.

Editors Cynosure:—Last week we had something new for us in Morning Sun. Rev. F. W. Evans, D. D., Oskaloosa, Iowa, a minister of the M. E. Church and a Mason and Odd-fellow, delivered two lectures in favor of secret societies. He was without doubt brought here to bolster up secrecy, and he did his work in true Masonic style. In his first lecture he proposed to answer the objections to secret societies, and treated in his way the following objections: 1st. The objection to secret societies as such; 2d. If good why not reveal the good to all; 3d. That they are selfish; 4th. That they profess to be moral while many members are grossly immoral; 5th. That they are human institutions.

It would make this letter too long to present his answers to these objections. I took pretty full notes and may at a subsequent time give your readers some of his points with a review of them. I will, however, say with reference to his first lecture:

1. He perverted Scripture. He attempted to justify secret societies by our Saviour's directions with reference to almsgiving and prayer. Matt. 6:1-6.; also by Prov. 25: 2. "It is the glory of God to conceal a thing," and verse 9, "Discover not a secret to another."

2. He was illogical. One specimen in brief: "You know the good trees in an orchard by the clubs lying around them. A good many clubs lie around Masonry and Odd-fellowship, therefore they are good." I commend his argument to Robert G. Ingersoll, saloon-keepers and the Mormons.

He denied by implication the penalties of Masonic oaths, and also that candidates for initiation are stripped. The way he did it in the first case was to ask "Who told you so?" Then to answer, in substance, "It was some one of whom you know nothing, while your neighbor who is a good man, honest and truthful says Masonry is a good thing."

The second night he discussed "The Principles of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship." He claimed that both are moral orders, inculcating moral principles as the basis of life and conduct, including duties to God and to man. He took up Masonry and Odd-fellowship each by itself. His claims for both orders were about the same. In speaking of Masonry his points were: 1st. It recognizes God; 2d. The Bible as of Divine authority; 3d. The immortality of the soul; 4th. Inculcates virtue. Each of these points he sought to establish by quotations from the ancient constitutions and charges of the order. I could not help thinking as I listened to the speaker of the whited sepulchres spoken of by our Saviour. Admitting all he said, what advantage has Masonry over heathenism, unless in the second specification. Heathen philosophers taught all the rest.

In speaking on these points, particularly when showing how that Masonry inculcates virtue, he affirmed more than once that those who practice these virtues cannot but be good. His doctrine was goodness by Masonic good works, ignoring the Scripture doctrine that there is no goodness before God except in union with Christ and no approach to him except in his blessed name. He admitted that Blue Lodge Masonry does not mention the name of Christ and gave as the reason that it is older than the Christian religion. He also used the argumentum ad hominem for us Psalm singers, and affirmed that the name of Christ is not in the Psalms. He knows, or ought to know, that no one can read or sing the Psalms intelligently without having his mind turned constantly to Christ. The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of the Psalms. There are frequent quotations in the New Testament from this book in which there is direct application of the language to Christ. On the other hand every one who has studied the subject knows that there is a studied exclusion not only of the name but also of any allusion to Christ in Blue Lodge Masonry. Nor is it because Masonry is older than the Christian religion. Intelligent Masons ridicule the idea.

The lecturer, as we understood him, on the first evening threw down the gauntlet for a public discussion. Some of us took him up on behalf of our State lecturer and proposed the question, "Resolved, That Freemasonry is anti-Christian and anti-republican." He now denies that he gave any challenge, yet has agreed in public and by letter to debate the question. In a letter received this morning Rev. D. P. Rathbun says, "I am ready to meet Rev. F. W. Evans and debate the question." More anon.

SOUTHERN MINNESOTA.

Fairmont, Minn., March 12, 1883.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I wish to say through the Cynosure to all the reform workers of Minnesota and elsewhere, that we have just closed our meeting of the Christian Association for Fairibault and Martin counties. We held our meeting in the court-house in this village. We had a very profitable time, though not many were out. The Masons and Odd-fellows have a strong hold here and they were determined to intimidate us so we would not hold the meeting, but the Lord was with us. Bro. Williams, our State Agent, was with us notwithstanding his life was threatened if he came and delivered his lectures. So they wrote an infamous letter and placed in his hands through the post-office, which speaks for itself, as I send you an exact copy of the original, hoping you will publish it in your paper, so that all may see some of the grand things of the Masonic fraternity in this State.

Notwithstanding their threatenings we assembled in the upper room and the first meeting, the number was not "25" but twelve, just the number of the Apostles, in the upper room in Jerusalem, truly the Lord was with us. The meeting was good all the way through—no demonstrations from the pit of darkness, but all was quiet and we are all alive yet. Bro. Williams did his work fearlessly and no wonder for the Lord was with him. May the Lord give him wisdom and power to enable him to send home the truth until the mudsills of hell shall be made to tremble. Let us pray that truth may triumph.

W. H. McChesney,
Corresponding Sec'y.

Puck, the comic illustrated weekly of New York, hits the lodge business again. The new Governor Cleveland, of New York, lately vetoed an act of the legislature reducing the fare on street railways to five cents. The decision is regarded as decidedly in favor of the monopolists. Puck pictures the Governor as taking his first degree in a monopolists' lodge. Vanderbilt wields the master's gavel, Cyrus W. Field and Russell Sage play subordinate parts and Gould's huge sword tyles the door. Cleveland is drolly pictured as learning the signs.

—Bro. Geo. W. Halstead of Vienna, N. Y., has our thanks for an opportunity of examining the manuscript copy of an address delivered at a public installation of a Masonic lodge by its chaplain, Rev. Mr. Renyon, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church in Vienna. It is sufficient to say that the intelligent chaplain begins with the age of speculative Masonry with the threadbare story about the beginning of harmony. No one, he claims, has ever pretended to fix the time of its origin, since it dates from the earliest era of light and life. Such amazing ignorance and bold denial of the best students o Masonry within the order itself, as Norton, Rebold, Mackey, Parvin and others, is enough. To be met on the threshold with such absurdity promises nothing worth reading beyond.

—James Hobbs, pastor of the Methodist Episcopa church at Pochahontas, Bond county, Ill writes an earn est letter to the Vanguard of St. Louis against the lodge as anti-Christ.

—Bro. E. Ronayne began meetings at Montrose, Iowa, in the vicinity, on Saturday evening, March 10th, which were continued through last week. He expects to go to Birmingham during the present week.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LATE DEVELOPMENTS.

Strawberry, Washington Co., Kan.

As a warning I would say that a member of the M. E. church living in this section, joined the Odd-fellows, turned infidel, and before his name was removed from the class-book, was horribly crushed under the cars, without a moment's warning. The Odd-fellows of Clifton made a modern display of modern heathenism over the remains. Nearly two years preaching of his brother lodge minister failed to reach him.

The Sons of Veterans, the latest "sell" and social excresence is growing on Clifton society, and some "good men" are being roped in so as to "venerate the memory of their fathers." Alas! Alas! Nor for the Daughters of Veterans. Masonic benevolence extraordinary is among the late developments at the "hub" of this county.

A Freemason not long since met with a severe and painful accident. On the day of the accident the lodge demanded his dues, which of course under such circumstances were not paid; but when he seemed in a fair way to recover his dues were proffered and accepted. But, contrary to the expectations of the lodge, he died; and having a Masonic insurance on his life, his widow demanded it for the support of herself and several little ones. But the "ancient and honorable" friends of the widow and orphan asked to be excused—and were; last fall, when the wintry winds began to murmur in the distance, the pangs of hunger and cold admonished the poor widow that her household effects would have to be sold to supply her wants. Hence she offered her furniture, including an organ. But hold! says the friend of the widow and orphan, (aside—"Now is the time to make an impression on the public") the lodge will help you. Don't sell! Don't sell! Accordingly 200 tickets at a dollar each were issued in favor of the organ. The Mason who drew it gave it back to her and the fame thereof is heralded throughout the land.

Christians (?) ministers, infidels and Jews engaged in the lottery and tooted the horn of Masonic benevolence (self-praise). Thus ends the farce in characteristic style.

The lodge at Clifton is about to have a secret lecture on the history of Anti-masonry, each member being permitted to bring a friend (of the lodge). If the truth is going to be told about Anti-masonry why not have a public lecture. Be it known that Anti-masonry is not afraid of "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

S.

AN OLD CONGREGATIONAL MINISTER TELLS HOW IT IS.

[Respectfully inscribed to the Advance.]

Rosevale, Clay Co., Kansas.

Dear Brother.—Some one has been kind enough to send me the Cynosure, for which I am thankful. On a journey East last year, I found in Michigan friends who informed me of the work that was already in operation, for the uprooting of secretism.

I well remember, at the last meeting of the General Association of Congregational Churches, that I attended before I came to Kansas this last time, your mind was then pondering deeply this subject. Since that time, while here on the frontier, I had not come in contact, very often, with Masonry. But I was greatly delighted, while East, to find that this subject had been awakened to new life, and organizations were formed in many of the States.

Perhaps you may reccollect that I had been made a Master Mason, before the killing of Morgan. It was on this wise: I was then residing in the village of Aurora, N. Y., where was a noted lodge of Freemasons; and as St. John's birth-day was to be celebrated in that place, I was solicited to prepare music for the occasion. Of course, like other young men, I was very ready to listen to the suggestions to become a Mason; for at this time a wonderful halo surrounded the head of Masonry. The day came, with all its pomp and paraphernalia, and I also performed my part to the great delight of all the Masons. At this time I had, as room mate, a young man, a law student, who was already a Mason, and he was not at all backward in setting forth the "sublime beauties" of Masonry. Accordingly, at the next meeting of the lodge, I was introduced as an Apprentice Mason, in the exact form described by Morgan. In going through this ceremony I thought, this is rather silly business, any way. But my chum encouraged me by representing that the other two degrees, particularly the last, or Master's, was truly sublime. So I went on, just as described by Morgan. But in the Master's degree I was led round blindfold, and was advertised that "robbers were lying in wait" ready to kill me. I concluded that they should know, if they attacked me, that I was not to be scared nor easily overthrown. Hence they were soon upon me, trying to get me down. But after a long tussle, the master came and whispered in my ear, "Lie down." Then after the robbers had exhausted their strength I laid me down. Then it was reported that the candidate was waylaid by robbers and slain. Now a great wailing was set up, and search was immediately made to find the body; and as they came near, one would say, "Yes, I think I can smell him;" and another would respond, "Ah! yes, I smell him too." At length the dead body was found. But putrefaction had already commenced. The master comes, and after due examination attempts to raise the dead body to life. He first applies the grip of the first degree, without effect. Next, the grip of the second degree, when the flesh all cleaves from the fingers, putrefaction had so far advanced! Alas! what can be done? The strong "Lion's Grip" must be applied. Thus grasping firmly, the master raises the dead to life!

Now, what does all this foolery mean? say you. Mean! Why, the master of the lodge was a most excellent man, a deacon in the church of Aurora; and so far as I can recollect, the only true Christian that ever visited that lodge. But it must be borne in mind that the morality of Masonry had not then been called in question.

This was in the summer of 1826. The meetings of the lodge I attended regularly, but never discovered "the sublimity." In the fall of this same year (the particular month I cannot state), it was reported to our lodge that Morgan had wholly revealed the secrets of Masonry, and that he had suffered therefor "the penalty due his crime." Soon after this, I began to examine the subject, and compare the principles of Masonry with the teachings of Christ. The result was, I found that they not only made no mention of Christ, or of the Christian religion, but that they were directly anti-Christian. With this knowledge, the question came with terrible power, "Which will you choose, Christ or Masonry?" For a Christian, when this question is clearly seen, it is not difficult to decide. I therefore renounced Masonry, giving some of the reasons therefor, and sent the paper to Albany, to Solomon Southwick.

And now, in the end, what does my experience and observation teach me? One thing is clearly taught. I have never known of the conversion to Christ of any young man who joined the Masons while unconverted. I have never known of an instance of improvement in moral character after joining the Masons.

My observation has taught me that professing Christians who join the Masons, and thus become acting, working Masons, always seem to suffer in their spiritual character, especially is this so with ministers of the Gospel.

AN EVIL TRIO.

Chicago.

Editor Cynosure:—As is not infrequently the case under the environments of the papacy, the "light fantastic toe" was tripped on Saturday eve. by our neighbors from an early hour till late Sabbath morning. Never since our residence in the city did our neighbors so much disturb our rest. But this might be endured but for the demoralizing consequences which are sure to follow. This is a national evil, borrowed from paganism, perpetuated by secret societies, and projected into our Christian civilization.

As to the nature of this abomination we have, among the few who will risk their heads on the block, the Rev. Mr. Firey, of Springfield, Ohio, pastor of the English Evangelical Lutheran church, who is fearless in denouncing the modern dance. "Men who perverted dancing from a sacred use to purposes of amusement were deemed infamous. No instances of dancing are found in the Bible in which the two sexes united in an exercise, either as an act of worship or amusement. There are no instances upon record in the Bible of social dancing for amusement, except that the vain, shameless fellows allnded to by the daughter of Saul, and the wicked families described by Job, where it produced greater impiety, hatred of religion, and ended in destruction, and the case of Herodias, which led to the death of John the Baptist. The Bible says, 'Whatsoever you do, do all to the glory of God.' The modern dance is not engaged in for the glory of God. It has the appearance of evil, therefore it is sin. If men have doubts about the righteousness of dancing, they are damned if they dance. If men dance, and thereby become a stumbling-block to sinners and an injury to the church, they sin.

"Job says that those who danced for amusement in his day were wicked, and that they say unto God, Depart from me. Cicero says it was rare for any one to dance who was not either intoxicated or a fool. We are commanded to 'let our light shine that others seeing our good works may glorify our Father which is in heaven.' If we neglect to let our light shine, we sin, and if we let it shine on deeds that are evil, we sin still more. No professing Christian can let his light shine to the glory of God in the modern dance. The judgment of the unconverted look upon dancing Christians as inconsistent."

That lodgery is a means for the perpetuation of the "ball room," we think, no candid, sincere, honest, unprejudiced Christian man will deny, especially after noticing for a while in the city dailies, the announcements of the multitudinous gatherings, conventions and conclaves of lodges, which are invariably terminated with a ball.

We say with regard to these immoral plagues, with the Apostle Paul, "They do not recommend us to God," as, neither are we the better for fostering them, neither are we the worse for condemning and discountancing them, therefore by Divine aid we will wage an incessant war upon them, never allowing our Master's domicile to be invaded without an earnest and vigilant protest.

Were the female portion of our race to look at this question in the true light, and as the Bible demands of her, the theatre and the ball room with all their auxiliaries, would not be wanted, and could not find productive soil for their pernicious and poisonous fruit.

That this trio of evils; lodgery, the theatre, and ball, is antagonistic to Christianity, is evidenced from the fact that when any one of the three is defended against the assaults of their opponents, we not unfrequently, as a set-off, hear Christianity assailed, the church, and in not a few cases, the Bible itself.

Here, then is the key to infidelity, strike at the root, hew to the line, and lay bare the bed rock; abolish this trio of evils, then conscience will have a chance to recover.

John Schoenberger.

GOOD TESTIMONY.

A. C. Moffatt, who in extreme age has fought a good fight in Albion, Iowa, and has realized that Anti-masonic principles are as good in local polities as in religion, by repeated victories at the polls, has a word on the Washington movement:

"I hope by all means the Washington house will be secured. Thank heaven for the success of the cause of reform so far. Hope I may live to see that house permanently established."

A reellection of President Finney as related by M. P. Nichols, Jonesville, Mich., will be recognized as characteristic:

"The Finney memorial number of the Cynosure, recalls to my mind an incident related in my childhood by an uncle, who was then living in Syracuse, N. Y. He said Mr. Finney came to Syracuse and labored, and his labors were greatly blessed and a powerful work of grace followed them. A few weeks, or months perhaps, after Mr. Finney left, a stranger rode up to a hotel, and accosting the clerk, said: 'Has the —— Chas. Finney been here?' 'Yes.' 'I thought so, for in every house on the street I heard either reading, singing or praying, and it is just so everywhere I go, if Finney has been there before me.' Would to God that such power attended the labors of ministers now."

An old brother in the ministry in Eastern Illinois adds a few words that will move many tender chords of memory:

"The strongest, and most precious religious impressions were made upon me when a child of ten years in conference meetings sixty years ago, away in the green hills of Vermont. Christians would assemble in school-houses, and private dwellings, old and young, of all grades of Christian experience. I distinctly remember one meeting held in the Minard school-house. The house was full. There was an unusual number of unsaved persons present. There was a chill upon the meeting. There were none that had liberty. It seemed as though it must be a failure. There was in the meeting a young girl of sixteen years of age, named Irene, well known to some of the friends of the Cynosure. She was intensely distressed with the idea that the meeting should fail. She had come several miles over very rough roads with a prayerful spirit and an earnest expectation of receiving a blessing, she could not consent to be disappointed. She arose quietly, in a modest, retiring way, and said in a very sincere, solemn, and earnest manner, 'I am willing to be a fool for Christ's sake.' This broke the spell as with an electric shock. All were moved. Tongues were set at liberty, and they had a most solemn, impressive and profitable meeting. Professor Stowe, speaking to the students of Lane Seminary said, I never have enjoyed myself since as I did in those meetings. I have longed to get back into the same experience and have the same enjoyment again. Away in the State of Maine, I would walk four and five miles to an old log school-house and meet with a little company of Christians. My measure of joy was full, our bliss was perfect. Such a brotherly love, such Christian fellowship I have never experienced since. I want to enjoy it again.'"

Bro. I. L. Buchwalter, now somewhat retired from ministerial labors in the U. B. church, will be heard with gladness, for he is a man of faith and experience; and our prayer will join his that the name of Jesus and his truth may triumph in the next General Conference:

"I am glad that the N. C. Association has taken a stand in Washington City, the centre of influence and power. It is a matter of rejoicing that the outlook for the anti-secrecy cause seems to be brightening up so rapidly and hopefully. An important crisis is upon us in the U. B. church. I still hope and pray, that by the prayers of the devoted ones of this church and the labors of Bishop Wright and Bro. Tobey in their respective papers, and the help of the good Master, the membership will be sufficiently aroused by the next General Conference to concentrate their efforts and make a successful stand against the lodge spirit, and yet save our beloved church from corruption and division."

Homer Hull, of Guthrie Center, Iowa, sends a remarkable account of the Morgan times as narrated to him by an old Baptist minister, who gave his personal experience thus:

At the time of the abduction he was attending the college at Williamsburgh, N. Y., about seven miles from old Fort Niagara; was a member of the Masonic lodge at that place, and was doorkeeper and carried the keys of the lodge. It was at that time one of the largest lodges in the State, as there were about fifty young men attending the college and most of them belonged to the lodge. One evening a carriage drove up to the building, with curtains down. Six men alighted and demanded of him the keys of the lodge. He asked, 'Who have you in the carriage?' They said 'Capt. Wm. Morgan.' 'What are you going to do with him?' 'We are going to execute him.' He said, 'You shan't commit murder in our lodge.' They insisted; he remonstrated, saying that they would have to walk over his dead body if they got into the lodge. Several of the students gathered round and declared they would stand by him and would not let them in. They then went to Fort Niagara, where Morgan afterwards was drowned. He then avowed that he would not open the lodge nor give up the keys till they surrendered the charter. They threatened his life, but he told them he was armed and would shoot the first man that dared to lay hands on him; and thus he triumphed and the lodge was only opened once to consider the subject of surrendering and that was the end of that lodge's work.'

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, duo guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of CAPT. WM. MORGAN. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7 50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oathe and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Anti-Mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 31 Cynosure tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. 20c. each, per doz. $1.75

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1883.

SUCCESS.

The man who succeeds by honest exertion is accepted as a success. The same law of association applies to reform journals. If the organ of a movement succeeds the movement itself is accepted as a success by the general public. Our opponents thoroughly appreciate this law of association and have left no means within their reach unimproved to keep the Cynosure list down to the starvation point, hoping thus to make it and the whole movement against the lodge insignificant and even contemptible in appearance. Had their success been equal to their zeal the "Pole Star" of our reform would have been "a thing of the past." But thanks to God aud the good people it "shines on" for it is set in the heavens of truth by the OMNIPOTENT HAND and sustained in the earth by His servants, who love righteousness and hate every false way. The midnight conclaves may resolve that it shall be suppressed and seek to execute their threats of extirpation, but the dauger from this source is not serious. It is only in the apathy or indifference of the people that there is cause for alarm. Stir up the people, get them to reading and thinking and talking and praying over this matter and even armed knights with their creed of blood, instruments of death, and inspiration of the devil, will avail nothing. Jesus, in whose name we have set up our banner, has issued to you a commission to make the Cynosure a success. Will you accept your commission and write and work and pray as the Captain gives the order?

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

TEMPERANCE MEETINGS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 12.
No. 215 4½ St., N. W.

I have attended two meetings of the Women's Christian Temperance Union here—on Wednesday last at Mrs. La Fetra's parlor, and at 3 o'clock on Sabbath at the Masonic Temple. On Sabbath evening, a week since, I opened, by request, the meeting of the temperance club, the "Dashaways," in the Odd-fellow's Hall. So I am being initiated into the exoteric, if not the esoteric, of secret temperance work here. Our readers will note that the large and enthusiastic temperauce meetiugs here are held in the lodge halls! Before I have done here I trust they will learn more about this fact, its causes and its effects.

At Mrs. La Fetra's parlor, where I went, drawn by a newspaper notice, there came in a large parlorfull of nice-looking, tastefully-dressed ladies. Calm and capable Mrs. Roach was in the chair. In the club at Odd-fellow's Hall, where a thousand or more were present, though it was Sabbath evening and the exercises opened with prayer and closed with the benediction, there was no allusion to Christ. It was, "Drink and you will lose your salaries; sign and keep the pledge and you will regain standing and wealth."

These women were clear-minded Christians. Their ideas were scriptural and sound, as their demeanor was elegant. I noticed prayers were requested for two gentlemen who had long labored in the cause of temperance, and to whom they felt indebted. They prayed fervently that these men might be converted to Christ. I learned outside that the husbands of these women are nearly all Freemasons, who in lodge language are already "saved from the grave of iniquity and raised to the faith of salvation,"—and it is easier to convert a thousand sinners than one false religionist. The women here all believe in Miss and Mrs. Willard and The Signal, and, having read my article in that paper, gave me their confidence and invited me to their meetings. They took me upon the stage in that large and beautiful temple of organized deism, where men are stripped and sworn and swindled out of their own and their wives' savings and their children's earnings. I was asked to say something to encourage and increase women-workers in the temperance cause, and I was sorely tempted to say that that Union of earnest and eloquent women was a living condemnation of the lodges which exclude them. But, mindful of the proprieties of the hour, I only said a few words for Kansas prohibition, and concluded with the remark that—

"When it should become indelicate for angels to touch with their light fingers the heart-strings of the sorrowing, and to fan with their invisible pinions the embers of hope in the bosoms of despair, it then might be pronounced unwomanly for wives, sisters and mothers to lift up the drunken eyelids of husbands, brothers and sons and bid them look to Christ and live."

PROHIBITION POLITICS.

On the cars I traveled with two members of Congress and the Surveyor-General from Nebraska. Neither of them are reformers, but represent the average sentiment of the State. Though Republicans, they have no fervent zeal for the party, but beloug to it, as the rest do, because there is none which they think better; for the good it has done, and no other has an immediate chance of success. The member of Congress whom I conversed with has been elected judge several times, and is now leaving the Bench for the Capitol. I said to him:

"Do you think prohibition in your State and the country at large is gaining, or going back?"

"Gaining."

"Will it become a national question, and ultimately prevail?"

"I think it will."

"What do you think of woman suffrage?"

"It was defeated by 29,000 majority in Nebraska."

"How many voted for it?"

"Some 30,000 or 32,000."

"How many voters are there in Nebraska?"

"Not quite 100,000."

"Then woman suffrage polled about one third of the votes in the State?"

"Yes."

"Was not that wonderful?"

"Yes, indeed; a few years ago, if submitted, almost nobody would have voted to send it to the people."

"What is to be the outcome?"

"Oh, I think they will keep at it until it prevails."

"How will woman suffrage affect prohibition?"

"Oh, there is no room for a question. The ballot once in the hands of women, the liquor business is ended."

Such is the judgment of multitudes who have never scratched a Republican ticket and never intend to.

When I was last here Lincoln had been shot; and Thaddeus Stevens, Chase, Seward and Stanton, with Charles Francis Adams in England, all Abolitionists and Anti-masons, had run the government over the rapids into the still water below which still bore on its surface the foam, froth and whirlpools of the terrible plunge. Stevens was being carried in his kitchen chair to the head of his committee in the basement of the Capitol. The strength which bore us through the "howl and hiss" of the cataract, was the strength of truth, asserted against popular evils; in reliance, not on precedent, but on God. The present parties in power have neither of these. The Democrats no longer resist aristocratic institutions and titles nor Republicans the extension of slavery; for there is no slavery to resist but the fearful slavery of the still, and on that they are hopelessly divided. Prohibition would annihilate them as a party. And the American masses can never be rallied by empty party names, whose substance is gone out of them. Nor will prohibition, even, succeed by mere antagonism to drink. Simple antagonism to liquor, the mother of crimes, may cast out devils for a time, but it leaves their house "empty, swept and garnished." The party of the future must recognize God, the Sabbath and the Bible. Such recognition founded our country, and such recognition will save it.

WASHINGTON IMPROVEMENTS — THE AMBASSADORS FROM MADAGASCAR.

One can hardly conceive the rapidity with which this city rushes in all directions. Since I was last here it is totally transformed. The great wide streets have become smooth as a house floor and hard as granite. The United States pays one-half the city expenses and the citizens the other half. What transformations would appear in Philadelphia or Chicago if every dollar raised by the citizens for improvements had been duplicated by another from some outside source.

The National Christian Association building is four stories high above a basement. It has a commanding front, and stands on the same street opposite the First Presbyterian and Metropolitan Methodist churches, and only a few rods from the City Hall, where Lincoln looks down from his white-marble monument on the passers-by. His (Lincoln's) monument is near about the height of that raised to William Morgan in Batavia last September, but is decidedly inferior to it in the quality of material and the style of its execution. The face of the statue of Mr. Lincoln is natural and well executed. You know him at once; but the artist did not understand perspective, or if he did, did not practice its laws. The face of Mr. Lincoln looks thin and diminutive, the head uot being large enough to appear natural at the height to which the monument lifts it.

Here is a notice taken from the Washington Critic of March 6 of a couple of Wesleyan Methodists, who are now, while I am writing, gone down to Mount Vernon, where Washington lies buried. The Navy Yard cannou gave them a salute as they passed; or perhaps they saluted the flag which the boat carried which took them down. The Queen of Madagascar is decidedly popular with the people of the United States, especially that vast portion of the population who favor the prohibition of liquor; and I am told these Wesleyans are the first representatives of her majesty to this country. Her nation seems to be one of those nations of prophecy, born in a day. I have not yet seen President Arthur. I hope he will not persuade these Christian foreigners to drink of his liquors; or if he does I hope there is virtue enough in the press to rebuke it. If the friends of the National Christian Association shall enable Secretary Stoddard to pay for these headquarters we will soon have a press here with the means and courage to report to the American people, whose money furnishes the concrete pavements of the city, all the information which they need to make the old White House an encouragement to uational virtue instead of a home and headquarters of the disgusting and ruinous vice of drink. This is the notice from the Critic:

"Ravoninahitriniario, Ramaniraka, Andrianisa, Rabibisoa, Ranjalahy, Mr. A. Tacchi, ambassadors from the government of Madagascar, arrived in the city yesterday evening, and are at the Arlington. They are here to make a treaty of commerce and amity with the United States, and to further their social relations with our country.

"Ravoninahitriniario, the head of the mission, is a stout man, with a bronzed face. His name signifies that God has blessed a thousand times his parents in giving them so good a son. At Tamatave he holds the foreign portfolio. He speaks English well and is a Wesleyan Methodist. The second ambassador, Ramaniraka, is a colored gentleman. whose appearance, notwithstanding his dark skin, is described as very distinguished. Like his chief he speaks English fluently and is also a Wesleyan Methodist. The secretary of the embassy is a mulatto, who was educated at Port Louis, in the Isle of France. He also is a Protestant. The interpreter, the only Catholic connected with the embassy, was educated at the school of the Jesuit mission, at Tamatave, and afterward in a college of St. Ignatius, in France.

"The Malagassy envoys were presented to the President this afternoon."

INSURANCE LODGERY.

The iusurance or benefit societies have of late years increased the domination of the secret orders beyond any other cause. They have put forth the most attractive arguments by way of the immense profits which would fall to every member, since the cost of the insurance would be trifling compared with the rates demanded by the legitimate insurance companies. The fact that these insurance companies have become immensely wealthy, and that their wealth must have been derived from profits made from individual patrons, has led to many devices by which this profit might be saved to these individuals. As it has attempted to ride to glory on the temperance wave, so the lodge has seized upon the popularity of mutual insurance schemes both to fasten the bonds of thousands of members, already disgusted with its puerile, disgusting and pagan formalities, and to multiply the decoys put out to catch new ones. New orders also have sprung up having this principle as a prominent object. The Masonic and Odd-fellow Benefit associations, Knights of Pythias, Royal Arcanum, Knights of Honor, Chosen Friends, United Workmen, and several Jewish and German societies of this class. Their membership is numbered by the hundred thousand, and the chief bond of fraternity is the money which has already been deposited which they dread to lose, and the possibility of death which will, they fondly hope, bring a snug sum to their bereft houscholds.

A late communicatiou in our columns (Feb. 22) from Tennessee upon the Knights of Honor put the question clearly. A person longest a member is promised that some $300 or $400 will be the full amount demanded of him, for which he will receive $1,000. Some instructive figures from the California Odd-fellow and Knights of Honor lodges are herewith given from the San Francisco Call:

A correspondent writes: "How would the assertion of The Call, that $20 per year would have paid $2,000 at the death of a member, have worked in Odd-fellowship in 1881, when the Grand Secretary reports 5,036 deaths and only 474,838 members? The receipts would only have been $9,496,760, while the deaths would have called for $10,072,000, leaving a defieit of $575,240."

While it is true that 5,036 deaths are reported, and that the membership at the end of the year is but 474,838, these figures do not embrace the entire transactions of the year. If the correspondent will look at the Grand Secretary's report he will find that on January 1, 1881, there were 456,053 members in good standing, These would, on that date, have paid the $20 for their guarantee, under the ealeulation alluded to, amounting to $9,121,060. In addition it will be seen that during 1881, by initiation, by eard and reinstatement, 61,721 were admitted. Under the same rule these also would have paid their $20, amounting to $1,234,420, which, added to the other, gives the total receipts for this fund for the year of $10,355,480. Now take away the money necessary for the 5,036 deaths, viz., $10,072,000, and it will be seen that the healthy balance of $283,480 remains, which is far from a disastrous result.

As often stated in this department, suspensions, like lapsed policies, play a prominent part in the financial calculations of societies and companies, and while mortality tables and statistics of expectancy are valuable in regard to nations or communities when lives can be followed to their close, they are of no application whatever in figuring up financial matters of societies, for the simple reason that the masses calculated upon at the beginning are not in societies or companies at the end of their individual lives.

During the year 1881, 42,936 members of the I. O. O. F. lost membership from various causes, and relieved the order of all future responsibility, so far as they were concerned, and the statistics of a half century show that only one-fourteenth of those admitted have died in the order. In other words, that where one remains in the order until he dies, thirteen withdraw, are suspended, etc. Now to answer a query, "Where does the money come from?" it is easy to see that if thirteen men join a society, remain in it seven years each (which is the average), that they will pay $140 each, or $1,820, and that he who remains in until the day of his death will pay the balance during his membership.

Concerning the Knights of Honor the same paper says:

Supreme Reporter Davis publishes a very interesting report under date of December 1, 1882, which embraces the transactions of the order for the six months previous. It shows that 129 new lodges have been instituted, with 2,928 members, during the term, and that there have been 690 deaths, and ten assessments. The total number of lodges are reported as 2,566, with 126,645 members. Of these, 167 lodges, with 4,316 members, are in a state of suspension, at date given, leaving in good standing 2,399 lodges and 122,329 members. The largest assessment collected was No. 104, which was paid by 123,173 members, and amounted to $138,071,99. Assessment No. 106 was delinquent on November 4, 1882, and up to December 1, 1882, 62 lodges had failed to pay it. Most of these, doubtless, have ere this been reinstated. For assessments Nos. 91 to 103 inclusive, 79 lodges have been suspended. No. 103 was delinquent September 3, 1882.

It is evident from these figures that the financial standing of these secret insurance lodges depends entirely upon the fact that a large proportion of the members, who begin to pay in with the expectation of a considerable sum paid to their families after death, drop out, and the money thus lost by them helps the lodge to keep up a miserable existence—in short, it is a business maintained by a polite kind of robbery. Nearly 43,000 Odd-fellows were thus doubly defrauded in 1881, and for the last fifty years, of every fourteen Odd-fellows initiated ONLY ONE dies in good standing with the order! The other society makes but little better showing. These facts brand these lodges as frauds which deserve to be suppressed by law.

—Bro. Springstein, Michigan State lecturer, says that he has not been engaged for several weeks. He is ready for any work the brethren in that State may call him to do.

—The brief record of Bro. Stoddard for several days of last week every one will read. While reading determine if you have not some interest in the N. C. A. movement on Washington, and send a contribution to help without waiting for a more urgent invitation.

– After so long delay the Batavia Convention Minutes are ready for distribution. The plates were ready for printing some weeks ago and paper ordered, but through unlooked for and enforced delay on the part of the paper dealers the pamphlet is only this week ready. The whole edition should be in the hands of the readers within a fortnight. See the advertisement elsewhere.

—Prof. E. G. Paine of Wasioja Seminary, Minnesota, lately suspended a student for propagating infidel sentiments among the students after remonstrance from the faculty. The young man, who seems to be something of a bully with all the rest, entered suit against Prof. Paine in the county court, but had the expense for his pains, for Bro. Paine was promptly acquitted.

—Every reader will turn with interest to the letter of Rev. C. D. Trumbull, of Morning Sun, Iowa, president of the Iowa State Association, to learn how the lodge endeavors to plant itself in a community where it is not wanted. Though the adherents of the evil system are few in number, their rage and determination are out of all proportion greater. But the brethren who withstand them are confident in God, who will, in his own time, bring forth his truth gloriously and cover his enemies with confusion.

—Just as we go to press the sad word comes that Daniel Countryman, of Rochelle, Ill., was buried on Friday. Pres. C. A. Blanchard preached on the occasion. Thus another faithful servant of his Lord has gone to his reward.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.
E. D. Bailey, N. E. Sec'y.

Stephen Grover writes as follows: "Two weeks ago I had the pleasure of attending services at your chapel in Worcester. I did not expect to find so prosperous a condition of your society, so good a house and so pleasantly located. I consider the beginning as one which will tell on the cause, and many friends will finally arise to give influence and aid in carrying on the work."

Bro. A. F. Spaulding has been in Connecticut for two weeks, working in Norwich and New London. A card from him speaks of having had fair success. He spent the Sabbath with the brethren at Willimantic, and is to visit Colchester and Middletown, and then go to Hartford to aid in preparing for the convention. In Colchester there are many friends of the reform.

After lecturing at Spencer, Wednesday the 7th, Bro. O. C. Bailey went to Connecticut to work in the large towns around Hartford. Last Sabbath he spent with friends at Windsor. On his way he stopped at Springfield. A card from him reports encouraging results.

At this writing the outlook for the Connecticut meeting is very encouraging. All the arrangements are falling into line orderly, and a good degree of enthusiasm prevails. Arrangements for free entertainment have been made for a few, and good hotel accommodations for others.

Mr. Alleu Fisher of Wellesley is using the remaining strength of his old age to distribute tracts. An assortment has been sent him for use in his town.

Rev. W. T. Sleeper has just put forth a volume entitled "The Rejected King"—a poem of interest and merit. Lee and Shepard, Boston, are the publishers. The book is a little gem, containing eighty-seven pages, neatly bound and finely illustrated. The body of the poem recites beautifully the life of the Saviour, while the monotony of the style is relieved by the frequent interspersing of sonnets, some of which have special merit. It is just the kind of book one would wish to present to a friend as a beautiful reminder of a sacred theme. It has already received the warm commendation of many clergymen.

Here is a single sample of the above poem, on the text, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock":

Nations, give Emmanuel room;
Not a cross—the felon's doom,
Not a grave of gathering mold,
Not a prison, dark and cold:
Give him valley, hill and mountain,
Give him sea and stream and fountain,
Give him flocks and corn and gold,
Give him treasures new and old,
Give him temple, church and hall,
Give him palace, cottage, stall,
Let his banner be unfurled
Through the kingdom of the world.

Rev. H. L. Hastings, editor of The Christian, Boston, called on us on his way to Warren, Mass., where he was under appointment to preach in the morning, speak on temperance in the afternoon and on infidelity in the evening.

Wm. Durfee of New Bedford has published a tract entitled "Jubela, Jubelo, Jubelum," containing a statement of facts about Masonry, called forth by the public announcement that Gov. Butler reviewed the Masonic commanderies of Massachusetts recently.

THE CYNOSURE AND THE CHURCHES.

Worcester, Mass., March 13, 1883.

The lecture announced for March 7th at Spencer came off satisfactorily. The day was very stormy, but brother O. C. Bailey and myself divided the two hours of the evening between us and were gratified by the respectful attention of the fair-sized audience which honored us with their presence. Brother Hinckley was present, and to him is due the credit of much of the labor attendant upon arranging for such a meeting. Brother Lamb was not present at the meeting, though zealous in preparing the way for us. We suppose the weather was too severe for him to come so far.

It is absolutely necessary to remind our friends that we are incurring great expense to carry on the reform work here, and we are dependent upon their generosity to sustain our efforts. It must, of course, be understood that much of our work is seed-sowing for a future harvest. The prospect is good for an abundant harvest, but it is not yet here, and must be patiently awaited. Please do not forget to forward something to relieve our financial necessities. We have plans for future operations which will be a severe task upon our resources, and we wish as much help as possible.

Critics, who are candid, always deserve a fair hearing. A Methodist Episcopal pastor, who shows his evident sincerity by ordering one dozen Finney's for distribution, offers some criticisms from his standpoint which are allowed a hearing because the writer deserves it; because it will help us, if guilty, to correct our faults; and because a public answer may help others who share in a measure the feelings of the writer. "I cannot help wishing heartily that the Cynosure were less bitter toward the churches. I believe if the desired reform is to be brought to pass it will be through Christians, and very likely through now-existing churches . . . Can you not better serve God and advance the anti-secret reform by ceasing to revile the churches and striving rather to purify them?"

To these statements I would respectfully submit the following reply:

1. I do not think the Cynosure can be honestly accused of "reviling the churches." It has candidly and sharply criticised the present attitude of the churches toward reform, and it could not consistently do less than this. Nobody can reasonably blame it for doing so, unless indeed he would undertake the defence of the lodge, which our respected brother does not intend to do.

2. The reform is not accountable for its present position before the churches. It would gladly take its place inside if it were allowed to, but being driven out it must maintain its ground or concede that the issue is not worth the sacrifice. As Lincoln declared that the Union must be preserved with slavery if possible, without it if necessary, so those who feel the importance of the reform can say: "The cause must prevail, with the churches if possible, without them if necessary." The churches with Masonry in them are hastening to destruction, hence if they cannot be renovated they must be abandoned. It is not to be expected that all men will have the same degree of determination all in a minute, neither is it necessary that those who are just awakening to the enormity of the evil should conclude that others who have made it a study of many years are too fast in their conclusions. If we wait to agitate until everybody agrees to the righteousness of the cause we shall never move.

3. In some of the churches Masonry has a controlling influence, and we not unfrequently read of ministers publicly recommending it as a valuable ally in their work. This was done recently at a meeting in Springfield, Mass., where the M. E. ministers were offering suggestions concerning the social power of the church. Thus the lodge has its advocates in the churches, and the number of those who dare to protest is very few.

But we need not chafe under the cross-fire of criticism. Where the Lord is it is "very tempestuous round about him," and the fearful and unbelieving may quake, but those whose faith takes hold of that "within the veil" will not waver. E. D. Bailey.

LITERARY.

The Buffalo Catholic Publication Society has published in pamphlet form an analysis of Ingersoll's system of negation and blasphemy and a reply to his attacks upon religion, written by Rev. L. A. Lambert. The plan of the work does not permit of such an argument as that of Judge Black or of Prof. Fisher. Brief clauses and sentences are selected here and there for criticism and answer. The author is often keenly logical and vigorous in reply and the work will be valuable for a class of minds that are irksome under a prolonged argument.

The Elzevir Library continues to send out its valuable numbers. Late issues are "A half Hour in Natural History" by S. H. Peabody, Regent of Illinois Industrial University; "The Pilgrim's Progress (first part); "Paul Gustave Dore," a brief illustrated biography of the great French artist, lately dead; and five numbers on American humorists, including Washington Irving, Oliver Wendell Holmes, James Russell Lowell, Mark Twain and Artemus Ward. These critical biographies are by the well-known English essayist, H. R. Haweis. This library is issued in semi-weekly numbers the yearly subscription (104 copies) being $2.00. John B. Alden, 18 Vesey st., New York, publisher.

The monthly magazine Choice Literature, by the same publisher, contains two articles on Gambetta, one by a friend, the other by a German, who might be supposed to be an enemy. "The House of Lords," "Mexico and her Railroads," "Charity in the Early Church," "Thomas Carlyle," "A Lesson in Democracy" and the "Hill Tribes of Burmah," are articles by some of the ablest English writers, which will not fail of a wide reading in this country.

A Chicago gentleman, enlisted in the cause of Christian Giving has published four tracts upon this subject entitled "What we Owe," "Some Questions and Answers," "Thanksgiving Ann," and Divine Plan of Church Finances." These he will send free to all pastors who will agree to judiciously distribute them in their congregations. They are valuable presentations of this important Christian duty.

The April Century will contain six full-page illustrations, among them a picture, "At Sea," drawn with the graver, without previous drawing or photographing of the subject, by Eldridge Kingsley. It will illustrate one of John Burroughs's out-of-door papers. This picture is noteworthy as being particularly commended—and, indeed, the only American engraving that was commended—by Seymour Haden in a recent lecture in New York.

—The newspapers say the Hon. J. G. Blaine has retired from public life, and that he is now engaged in writing a Political History of the United States, which is to cover the period between the years 1860—1880.

The Home.

A SONG FOR WOMEN.

Within a dreary, narrow room,
That looks upon a noisome street,
Half-fainting with the stifling heat,
A starving girl works out her doom.
Yet not the less in God's sweet air
The little birds sing free of care,
And hawthorns blossom everywhere.

Swift, ceaseless toil scarce winneth bread:
From early dawn till twilight falls,
Shut in by four dull, ugly walls,
The hours crawl round with murderous tread.
And all the while, in some still place,
Where intertwining boughs embrace,
The blackbirds build; time flies apace.

With envy of the folk who die,
Who may at last their leisure take.
Whose longed-for sleep none roughly wake,
Tired hands the restless needle ply.
But far and wide in meadows green
The golden buttercups are seen,
And reddening sorrel nods between.

Too pure and proud to soil her soul,
Or stoop to basely gotten gain,
By days of changeless want and pain.
The seamstress earns a prisoner's dole.
While in the peaceful fields the sheep
Feed, quiet; and through heaven's blue deep
The silent cloud-wings stainless sweep.

And if she be alive or dead
That weary woman scarcely knows,
But back and forth her needle goes,
In tune with throbbing heart and head.
Lo! where the leaning alders part
White-bosomed swallows, blithe of heart,
Above still waters skim and dart.

O God in heaven! shall I, who share
That dying woman's womanhood,
Taste all the summer's bounteous good,
Unburdened by her weight of care?
The white moon-daisies star the grass,
The lengthening shadows o'er them pass,
The meadow pool is smooth as glass.

HOW THE MINISTER'S WIFE TALKED.

"The best settlement my husband ever had was the one at Whitton—that isn't the name of the place, but it will do as well. We had a large salary, a nice house, and large garden, and for the first time in my life I could have a real cow, real milk that would stand skimming, and a place for the children to play without going into the street. Queen Victoria never was half so proud or contented as I when we moved and took possession. But the very first afternoon I was there, Mrs. Bemley, the wife of a leading lawyer in our congregation, called and told me of a trouble in the choir, expressing a hope—no, commanding me—to take one side; and hardly had she gone when Mrs. Dane, the doctor,s wife, called, told me the other side, and commanded me to take that. Here it was, the skeleton in my closet; and when my husband came home from buying the cow I told him he might as well return it, for we should not stay. He did, and we stayed one year, and never was I so glad before or since to leave any place. To me, my devious ways seemed leading straight into paradise; but you see"—breaking off and nodding her head at me.

"I see," I answered. "Could not you have managed though? A little diplomacy is sometimes such an excellent thing."

"Never settled a choir trouble; I vote for congregational singing, "she said, emphatically. "My husband is one of the most discreet of men; but this was among the women, and he was helpless. Our ways are as devious as life's. I had rather have every man in a church in arms than two of the women. They would get through it sooner. The most serious troubles we have ever had in our pastoral life have come from the smallest beginnings; and nine times out of ten there have been female fingers or tongues at the bottom."

"You call these the smallest beginnings, do you?" I asked, thinking my sex needed a champion.

"Devious ways," she answered; "they don't see the end from the beginning; if they could they would never begin. And it is just this that should make us careful. 'Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth;' that's the Bible way of saying the same thing—not exactly a good exegesis, but it answered. This is the scary side—I always have to look a subject all around—and not the one I was thinking of to-day; that was full of strength and comfort. It's in this verse of an old hymn:

"Though in a bare and rugged way
Through devious, lonely wilds I stray,
Thy presence shall my pains beguile;
The barren wilderness shall smile,
With sudden greens and herbage crowned,
And streams shall murmur all around."

PIONEER WOMEN IN JOURNALISM.

The first daily newspaper printed in the world was established and edited by a woman—Elizabeth Mallet—in London, 1702, almost 200 years ago. In her salutatory, she said she had established a newspaper "to spare the public half the impertinence which the ordinary papers contain." Woman-like, her paper was reformatory.

The first newspaper published in America, of which we have record, was in Massachusetts. It was called the Massachusetts Gazette and News Letter. After the death of the editor, the widow edited it in the most spirited manner for two or three years. It was the only paper that did not suspend publication when Boston was besieged by the British. The widow's name was Margaret Draper.

In 1732 Rhode Island issued its first newspaper. It was owned and edited by Anna Franklin. She and her two daughters did the printing and their servants worked the printing-press. History tells us for her quickness and correctness she was appointed Printer to the Colony, supplying pamphlets, etc., to the colonial officers. She also printed an edition of the colonial laws, of 340 pages.

In 1776 Sarah Goddard printed a paper in Newport, R. I., ably conducting it, afterward associating with her John Carter. The firm was announced Sarah Goddard & Co. she taking the partnership precedence as was proper and right.

In 1772 Clementine Reid published a paper in Virginia favoring the colonial cause, and greatly offending the royalists, and two years later another paper was started in the interests of the crown, by Mrs. H. Boyle, borrowing the name of Mrs. Reid's paper, which was the Virginia Gazette, but which was short lived. Both of these papers were published in Williamsburg.

A WOMAN'S SUNNY TEMPER.

What a blessing to a household is a merry, cheerful woman—one whose spirits are not affected by wet days, or little disappointments, or whose milk of human kindness does not sour in the sunshine of prosperity. Such a woman in the darkest hour brightens the house like a little piece of sunshiny weather. The magnetism of her smiles, the electrical brightness of her looks and movements, affect every one. The children go to school with a sense of something great to be achieved; her husband goes into the world in a conqueror's spirit. No matter how people worry and annoy him all day; far off her presence shines, and he whispers to himself, "At home I shall find rest." So day by day she literally renews his strength and energy; and if you know a man with a beaming face, a kind heart, and a prosperous business, in nine cases out of ten you will find he has a wife of this kind.—Sel.

WHAT "WIFE" MEANS.

Says Ruskin: "What do you think the beautiful word 'wife' means? It is the great word in which the English and Latin languages conquered the French and Greek. I hope the French will some day get a word for it instead of that 'femme.' But what do you think it comes from? The great value of the Saxon words is that they mean something. Wife means 'weaver.' You must either be house-wives or house-moths, remember that. In the deep sense you must either weave men's fortunes and embroider them or feed upon and bring them to decay. Wherever a true wife comes, home is always around her. The stars may be over her head, the glow-worm in the night's cold grass may be the fire at her feet, but home is where she is and for a noble woman it stretches far around her, better than houses ceiled with cedar or painted with vermillion—shedding its quiet light for those who else are homeless. This, I believe, is the woman's true place and power."

—The Rev. Dr. J. F. Kennedy, of Chambersburg, Pa., says the Presbyterian, lately passed the twenty-sixth anniversary of his blindness. Dr. Kennedy is well-known, to many of our ministers at least, as an eminent Oriental scholar and theologian of no mean ability. Though utterly and hopelessly blind, no minister of Christ is busier than he. He preaches constantly, either as stated supply or as chaplain to the county prison. Some months ago, when the pastor of the Falling Spring church, in Chambersburg, Pa., was laid aside by sickness, Dr. Kennedy had pastoral charge of the congregation, performing all the duties with great fidelity and with acceptance to all. He is an indefatigable student, and is at present engaged upon a commentary on the prophecy of Habakkuk. We mention this case to show what may be done by an earnest soul despite the greatest discouragements.—United Presbyterian.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

ULRIC ZWINGLE.

In the year 1531 some sixteen years before the death of Luther, the same year in which the League of Smalkald was formed for the defense of the Protestant faith, might be seen lying fearfully wounded on the battle-field of Cappel, one of Switzerland's greatest men—one of her greatest reformers, preachers and statesmen—and, as the blood trickled down his body, he exclaimed, "What matters this misfortune? they may, indeed, kill the body, but they cannot kill the soul," and with these words Ulric Zwingle fell backward and died. Let us note a few of the incidents in his life, and the cause of his being on this battle-field. He was born near the Lake of Zurich, January 1, 1484, a few months after the birth of Luther. His studies were conducted partly at Basle and Berne and Vienna, and at the age of twenty-one he took priests orders, and said his first mass in 1507 at Raperswill, in the Canton of Zurich, and was soon after elected to the pastorate of Glaris, a chief town in that Canton. That he early displayed more that ordinary intellectual ability is evident from the fact that he was elected to an important position as a teacher at Basle while yet pursuing his studies and though not eighteen years of age; and also the fact that the Dominicans made special efforts to have him join their order while yet a student at Berne, to prevent which his father removed him to Vienna. The state of religion at the time he began the work of his pastorate at Glaris may easily be learned from the fact that of a Synod, which assembled early in the sixteenth century, only three of the members had read the Bible; the others confessed that they had hardly any knowledge of the New Testament. They contented themselves with repeating sermons which were prepared by the monks, and which were as often as not wholly unsuitable to the circumstances of the congregation. But Zwingle was an exception to these classes. He had a desire for information, and sought even among the writings of Wickliffe and Huss to obtain it, though then without any purpose of accepting their doctrines. During his pastorate at Glaris, which lasted some ten years, he never thought of attacking the errors of Rome, but only of enlightening and educating his people in good morals. But though he could not be accused of teaching heresy during this period of his ministry, yet the purity of his life, his superior attainments, and his conscientious discharge of duty, were in such striking contrast with neighboring priests, that he soon became the object of their fixed hatred. He found it true that "those who will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution." During his residence in this place he was twice ordered by the government to accompany the troops of the Canton in their wars against the French, and on the side of the Pope. The custom of hiring soldiers to do his fighting was a favorite one with the Pope, and by the sale of "Indulgences" it was easy to obtain the funds. It was a custom, however, not approved by Zwingle, and in unmeasured terms he reprobated it, and succeeded in breaking it up in some of the Cantons. In a letter to the Canton of Schweitz, he says: "Think how many of your fellow-citizens have perished in the wars of Naples, in the battles of Navarre and Milan. What rivers of blood have you not shed? What would you say if you were to see the mercenary soldier, hired with gold, whom you have never injured, appearing at your gates, felling your woods, destroying you vines, carrying off your flocks, massacring your children, unaffected by the tears of your wives and your fathers, butchering them before your own eyes, and setting fire to your dwellings? Would you not call for fire to fall on them, and, if you were not heard, be tempted to believe that there was no God? Yet this is what you yourselves do, allured by the charm of riches and property unjustly acquired."

In 1516 he was appointed preacher at the Convent at Einsiedeln, and, notwithstanding the protest of his people at Glaris, he concluded to accept the appointment as one affording him a larger field of usefulness. In the meantime he had been carefully examining the teachings of the divide word, and God had given him grace to maintain what he believed to be the truth. Accordingly, at the consecration of the Abbey, when, as usual, vast crowds were assembled, he fearlessly declared "that their observation of the mere ceremonies of religion could never be acceptable in the sight of God so long as their hearts were unchanged, and their practice diametrically opposed to the divine law." "Cease to believe," said he, "that God resides in this temple more than in any other place. Whatever region of the earth you may inhabit he is near you, he surrounds you, he grants your prayers, if they deserve to be granted; but it is not by useless vows, by long pilgrimages, or offering destined to adorn senseless images, that you can obtain the divine favor."

Such doctrines aroused much opposition. The monks in the convents felt that their occupation would be gone if such doctrines were generally accepted. But opposition only led Zwingle to fortify his position with greater care, and to increase the number of his attacks on the Papacy. His reputation as a preacher was now very great, and he was invited to fill the important charge of the cathedral of Zurich. He accepted, and preached his first sermon July 1, 1519. "An immense audience was assembled, and he commenced by showing that Christ is the sole author of salvation, and the only hope and consolation of sinners. He then proceeded to inveigh against vice in general, and particularly hypocrisy, recommended works of piety, and thundered against luxury, idleness and intemperance." These noble words were uttered less than two years after Luther nailed his theses to the door of the Wittenburg church, and before his name had been heard of in Switzerland, showing that God's Spirit was at work in many hearts, enlightening them in the knowledge of the truth, and preparing them for the reformation of his church. Zwingle had up to this time promoted the Reformation by preaching positive truth rather than by attacking the errors of Rome, bnt some of his adherents having ceased to observe Lent, and, iu consequence of that fact, beiug imprisoned, he pnblished a tract "On the Observance of Lent," in which he ridiculed the injnnction of the Romish church iu prohibiting the people from nsing their common food. Soon after its publication, the Bishop of the Diocese wrote to the clergy of Zurich eoncerning the innovations of Zwingle: "Do not," said he, "allow them to be preached among you, nor diseussed publicly or privately; preserve yonrselves in the doctrines and nsages of the church, till those to whom it belongs shall regnlate these matters." This provoked a reply from Zwingle in a second tract, in which he boldly attacks traditions, and defeuded the sufficieucy and authority of the Scriptnres as the rule by which the chnrch and her members should be guided. In the meantime, the Council of Worms had pronounced against Lnther, and uow Zwingle was charged with being a Lntheran, and a violent controversy arose among the different parties. To quiet them, and, if possible, settle the dispnte, Zwingle solicited a conference, and the State anthorities provided for one January 29, 1523. Zwingle propounded seventy-six propositions which he wished disenssed, and took the precaution to circulate them among the people before the conference assembled. Among other things he affirmed that "the gospel is the only rnle of faith, that Christ is the only Head of the church, that traditions are to be rejected, that the mass is not a sacrifice, that the priests have a right to marry, etc."

The conferenee met, but the minions of Rome, true to their history, refused to discuss, and little was accomplished, except that the council, before whom the discussion was to have taken plaee, resolved "that Zwingle neither having been convicted of heresy, nor refnted, should continne to preach the gospel as he had done hitherto; that the pastors of Znrich and its territory should rest their discourses on the words of Scripture alone, and that both parties should refrain from all personal reflections." A second conference was soon after called, which was more successful as far as securing discnssion was concerned, but the defenders of the Romish doctrine were not able to maintain their position against Zwingle and the others associated with him, so that the civil anthorities were completely won over to the side of Protestantism. Zwingle soon after this married, and made the breach between him and Rome still wider. He also resorted to the nse of his pen in defense of Protestant principles, and among other publications sent forth by him was one against the canon of the mass, and another eoncerning "the grace of Christ."

In furtherance of his desire for reformation, he petitioned at this time the Council of Zurich to abolish the mass, the adoration of the host, etc. He had wrong views, as nearly all the reformers had respecting the powers of the civil magistrate. Few men, until the time of Andrew Melville, had any clear conception of the independence of the church and the Headship of Christ, and it greatly hindered the progress of the canse. But in this case, where the magistrates were under the control of such a man as Zwingle, the cause suffered less injnry than it might have done. The Lord's Supper was accordingly celebrated iu Zurich, April 13, 1525, and aecording to the reformed doctrine, the bread and wine were both passed to the people. Abont this period he also took steps to fonnd a theologieal school in Zurich, in which the ancient languages and the doctrines of the Scripture formed part of the eurrienlum, and through its instrnmentality mnch was done to promote the Reformation. About this period also the qnestion of the real presence of Christ in the elements used iu the Supper occnpied the attention of Reformers in Germany as well as in France and Switzerland, and finally a meeting to consider the questiou was provided for at Marbnrgh in 1527, where Luther, Zwingle and others disenssed the qnestion. Zwingle held that the words "This is my body," meant "This siguifies my body;" bnt Lnther had not yet been fnlly freed from his early Romish teachings, and he conseqnently adhered to the literal interpretation, thongh he did not adopt fully the doctrine of Transubstantiation, but that of Consubstantiation. It is greatly to be regretted that Luther so unreasouably adhered to this view, and thereby prevented a union so desirable aud so neeessary to the Protestant canse. They, however, finally agreed ou a paper setting forth the doctriues in which they agreed, aud this did much to unify Protestantism.

Bnt troubles awaited Zwiugle on his return. It has always been contrary to the principles of Rome to tolerate others who refnse to accept her doctrines. She claims to be the only Church, and all others heretics. Aecordiugly, the peace which had been agreed npou some time before at Cappel, namely, in June, 1529, was disregarded by the Romish Cantons, aud the professors of the Reformed religion in these Cautons were persecuted. The Protestant Cantons, in retaliation, very nuwisely, and, coutrary to Zwingle's advice, broke off all communicatiou with the Popish Cantons, aud refused to allow them a passage throngh their territory, even for provisions. Zwingle was ever ready to resist tyranny, even with the sword. He was, iudeed, the forerunner of the Scottish Covenanters, just as ready to defend his rights of citizenship with the sword, as he was his creed with his arguments, bnt the imposing severe conditions on the others was not resistanee to tyrants but the oppression of the weak, and he had no sympathy with it. He was therefore, constrained to offer his resiguation, with a view of leaving the Cantou; he was, however, persuaded to remain. In the meantime the Popish Cantons had arrayed themselves in arms against the Protestaut Cantons, and the latter having made no preparation, and being divided as to the measnres they ought to take, they were left at the mercy of their oppressors. October 6, 1531 the army of the Popish Cantons took the field, and this made it a question of defense of natural rights, and Zwingle did not hesitate. A large portion of this army encamped near Cappel, a short distance from Znrich. The town was in danger of capture. and yet no troops were at hand. The militia were called out, and, with little or no preparation, dispatched to Cappel, and Zwingle accompanied them. On the way he addressed his friends, "Our cause is good, but it is ill defended, it will cost me my life," etc, And so it was; the militia were defeated, and Zwingle was slain, as already detailed, and Protestants everywhere monrned his loss. Lnther felt like dying when he heard of it. But though dead, Zwingle's work remains. It needed to be purified with fire, and it was; bnt by and by it shone forth in beauty and strength. Being thus early taken away from his work, before it was fnlly established, he acquired less celebrity than either Lnther, Calvin, or Knox, but he was not a whit behind them in his love for the truth, and in his ability to distinguish it from error. Mosheim, as quoted in a little volnme published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, to which we are chiefly indebted for the facts here represented, says: "This great man was for removing out of the churches and abolishing in the ceremouies and appendage of the pnblic worship many things which Luther was disposed to treat with toleration and indnlgence, such as images, altars, wax-tapers, the form of exorcism and private confession. He aimed at nothing so much as establishing in his couutry a method and form of divine worship remarkable for its simplicity, and as far remote as could be from everythiug that might have the smallest tendency to nonrish a spirit of snperstition." He had remarkably clear views of our Scriptnre truth, and conrage to maintain them. To remotest time he will be remembered as one of the greatest men of Switzerland, and one of the clearest-headed of the reformers of the sixteenth ceutury. The day following his death on the battle-field his body was discovered by some of the Popish soldiers, and with nnited voice they called for its burning. It was instantly burned, and its ashes scattered to the winds; bnt when Christ shall come again he will be raised to glory, honor aud power.—Christian Press.

ADVICE TO YOUNG WRITERS.

William Cnllen Bryant onee gave the following sensible advice to a yonng man who had offered him an article for his paper:

"My yonng friend, I observe that you have used several French expressions in your letter. I think, if yon will study the English language, that will find it capable of expressing all the ideas that you may have. I have always fouud it so, and iu all that I have written, I no not recall au instance where I was tempted to use a foreign word. bnt that on searching I have found a better one in my own language.

Be simple, unaffected; be houest in your speaking and writing. Never nse a long word when a short one will do as well. Call a spade by its name, not a well known oblong instrument of mannal labor; let a home be a home, and not a residence; place not a locality, aud so with the rest. When a short word will do, yon always lose by a long one. You lose in clearness; you lose iu honest expression; and in the estimation of all men who are capable of judging, you lose in reputation for ability. The only true way to shine, even iu this false world, is to be modest and nnassuming. Falsehood may be a thick crnst, bnt in the course of time, trnth will find a place to break through. Elegance of langnage may not be in the power of us all, but simplicity and straightfordwardness are. Write mnch as you would speak, and as you think. If with your inferior, speak no coarser than usual; if with yonr snperior, speak no finer. Be what you say and within the rules of prudence. No one ever was a gainer by siugularity of words or in pronounciation. The truly wise man will so speak that no one will observe how he speaks. A man may show great knowledge of ehemistry by carrying bladders of strange gases to breathe; but one will enjoy better health, and find more time for business, who lives on commou air."

Sidney Smith once remarked: "After you have wrtten an article, take yonr pen and strike out half the words, and you will be surprised to see how much stronger it is."

A "three-year-old" discovered the neighbor's hens in her yard scratchiug. In a most indignant tone she reported to her mother that Mr. Smith's hens were "wiping their feet on our grass."

The boy who slights his work at school is father of the man who shirks his duties all through life. If we could take up the people who are untrne in the church, and who hide and skulk among its privileges and responsibilities, and trace their histories back to childhood, we shonld find that they had growu up to the incompleteness that now deforms them.

TEMPERANCE.

FACTS ABOUT TEMPERANCE.

The people of the United States pay directly, over the counter, for intoxicating drinks about $75,000,000. Nearly as much more is spent in caring for the victims of alcohol; the insane, the idiotic, the criminal, and for the protection of society. We spend in the same time about $80,000,000 for schools, colleges, and all other kinds of instruction, and about $100,000,000 for the support of religious institutions, including Catholic, $180,000,000 for schools and churches, against $1,500,000,000 for intoxicating drink and its results!

In two years and a half our nation, if kept sober, could wipe out the national debt. If all products, manufactures and national wealth should be destroyed once in five years, our country would be as rich without the liquor traffic as it now is with it.

Every year the destruction of human life from the effects of alcohol is as great as in one year of the war, while the suffering entailed is greater. Four years of war left 120,000 widows and dependent relatives. One year of liquor drinking makes more than 130,000.

Such are some of the fearful statistics of intemperance. If, as those contend who do not believe in prohibition, we cannot enforce laws beyond public opinion, then let us hasten to bring public opinion up to that point of decent respect for humanity where it can destroy an evil that has such astounding and soul-destroying effects. Vote only for men with pronounced temperance principles. Send men to Washington who will not amend a temperance resolution till all its force is gone, or dally about a bill that involves the liquor interest until its ends are served whether others are or not.

If the people are not ready for prohibition get them ready. Begin at the bottom. Agitate, write, preach, lecture, scatter facts and wake up the people. Show them that their apathy is a disgrace and a sin; that so far as their edueated influence would go, they are responsible for the dreadful evils that follow in the train of alcohol.

If Christian people lived out half the religion they profess, the world would be converted in a year. If temperance people talked and voted their principles the efforts of temperance workers could soon be turned into a new channel. There is not so little need of reformatory work that we should delay the millennium by our laziness and indifference, and we can well afford to have one reform hastened to its triumph.—New England American.

CHICAGO'S CURSE.

The presiding Jndge of one of the Chicago courts has recently said to an Inter-Ocean interviewer:

You may ransack the pigeon holes all over the city and county, and look over snch annual reports as are made up, but they will not tell half the trnth. Not only are the saloons of Chieago responsible for the cost of the police force, the fifteen jnstice conrts, the Bridewell, etc., but also for the criminal courts, the connty jail, a great portion of Joliet, the long murder trials, the coroner's offiee, the morgne, the poor house, the reform school, the mad house, etc. Go anywhere you please and yon will find almost invariably that whisky is at the root of the evil. The gambling houses of the city and the bad houses of the city are the direct ontgrowth of the boon companion of drink. Of all the thousands of prostitutes of Chicago the downfall of almost every one can be traced to drunkenness ou the part of their parents or husbands, or drunkenness on their own part. The gamblers and prostitutes are snpposed to be watched by police as well as the sandbaggers. Of all the boys in the reform school at Pontiac, and in the various reformatory institutions about the city, ninety-five per cent are the children of parents who died through drink or became criminals through the same canse. Look at the defalcations; fully ninety per cent of them come about through driuk and dissipatiou. Go into the divorce courts; fully ninety per cent of the divorces come about through drink, or drink and adultery both. Of the iusane or demented cases disposed of in the court here every Thursday, a moderate estimate is that seventy per cent are alcoholism and its effect. I saw it estimated the other day that there were 10,000 destitute boys in Chicago who are not confined at all, but are running at large. I think that is a small estimate. Men are sent to prison for drunkenness, and what becomes of their families? The county agent and the poor house provide for some. It is a direct expense to the community. Generally speaking, these families go to destruction. The boys turn ont as thieves, aud the girls aud mothers generally resort to the slums. The sandbaggers, murderers and thugs generally of to-day who are prosecuted in the police courts and the criminal conrt are the sons of men who fell victims to drink. The percentage in this case is fully ninety-five per cent. I have studied this question for years and have passed upon criminal eases for years, and know whereof I speak.

American Politics.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

CHICAGO LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

A. E. Kittredge, the esteemed pastor of the Third Presbyterian church of this city, lately, in a few remarks before a Sabbath evening service, urged his hearers to their duty in the coming municipal election. His remarks were about as follows:

I wish to remind you of the relation of the religious class to Chicago's future. The business man who is not interested in the coming election is disloyal to himself and a traitor to the city. We have an intimate relation to the election, and can have an effect in shaping the morals of our city. We have in this city one provision store, where the articles which sustain life are sold, to every forty-three inhabitants, and we have one saloon, where the material that kills is sold, to every twenty-four inhabitants. Within one district of half a mile square on the South Side there are 225 saloons, manufacturing crime and misery for thousands of families. With 5,000 or 6,000 saloons in the city, and with the fact that at a low estimate fully three-fourths of the crime committed in Chicago is due to drink, the business interests have been insulted during the past week. That is, with 6,000 saloons, institutions which are making misery and filling our city with crime, the city government has asked that honest business be taxed to meet the expense caused by the saloons. There never was such an insult. It is merely a substitute for the saloons paying their own taxes. I hope this act will be sufficient to raise your voice. There is no greater coward than the wicked man, and when he is squarely met you will find no trouble about the tax.

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION OF 1830.

EXTRACT FROM THE ADDRESS OF THAT BODY TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

To contrive the true theory of free government, is the proudest evidence of human intelligence: to institute such a government, the most glorious achievement of human wisdom; and to sustain it, with unfailing constancy, the greatest monument of human virtue. Our government is the inestimable purchase of the profound reflection, painful labors, disinterested exertions, and searching trials of all past ages. It is free. We believe it to be the best that ever existed, because, more than any other, it corresponds with the rights, and encourages the duties of all men over whom it is extended; and thus, more than any other, seeks and promotes the improvement and happiness of its subjects. But our government cannot be continued without the active, strenuous and constant maintenance of principles directly opposed to those of Freemasonry.

The first and most prominent injunction of Freemasonry is secrecy. Any violation of this it punishes with infamy and death Secrecy is the shutting up of the mind from communion with other minds. And so far as it prevails, in relation to any social good, it is selfish, sour, ignorant and restless. Left absolutely alone, like a plant separated from the earth and the air, we should soon wither and die. And it would be no matter how soon, for if it were possible to keep us in such a state, we should be good for nothing. Our faculties are not at all adapted to it. Hermits are always the most miserable men. Ascetic and secluded associations have never been wise, or good, or happy. Neither is Freemasonry, which inculeates their worst principles, not in melancholy seclusion from the world, but in the heart of it, the more successfully to prey upon it.

A virtuous mind cannot delight in secrecy. Its joy is in communion. We are made sociable by nature. Our best affections and our highest faculties equally indicate it. For they can neither be expanded into useful action, nor carry with them their appropriate rewards, without society. As social beings, if we discover useful facts or important truths, we desire to communicate them to all, who are susceptible of benefits from their application. As all the principles of science, charity, and religion are susceptible of beneficial application to the whole human race, good men and good governments will impose no artificial restriction upon their universal diffusion. On the contrary, they will strenuously exert themselves to promote it. And there is no human praise which imparts so much of the ineffable joy that will accompany the final well done divinely pronounced upon the virtuous, as that which is the honest fruit of such exertions.

But secrecy is not more hostile to the spreading of useful facts and truths than it is to their discovery. Free inquiry, free discussion, free communication, are essential requisites to the most valuable knowledge. In the arts and sciences, in ethics and theology, all liberal minds acknowledge their indispensable importance. In the political conduct of life, their importance is, if possible, still more manifest. They are the living foundations of our government, which would be speedily dissolved, in blood, without them. No man has ever yet sufficiently valued them; for they alone can safely be relied upon to open and illuminate all the paths in which the majestic power of public opinion displays itself. But Freemasonry is opposed to free inquiry, free discussion, and free communication. Its great fear is publicity, its best virtue, silence. It professes to have inestimable treasures of social benefits, which it refuses to disclose to any but the small number of its devoted followers. In reference to all others, instead of employing, to communicate them, the various languages in which all the patriotism and piety, the joys and sorrows, the useful discoveries and honorable designs, the undying thoughts and unfading hopes of the whole human family have been expressed, it conceals them, by substituting barbarous signs and uncouth ciphers. It first enslaves the mind by the chain of secrecy, then debases it by injurious ceremonies and vile principles, and finally insults it by mock titles and simulated virtues. It is incompetent to the support of any valuable object. There is no real duty, no honest enjoyment, no benevolent purpose, which cannot better be accomplished without it. It is a fit system for the outlaws of humanity and hope, hating the world and making war upon it. With a misauthropic caution it excludes all the helpless and infirm from its communion, and with the stimulated ingenuity of experienced and impenitent guilt, it provides against detection and exposure. Its existence in our country is the greatest anomaly of modern times; and it is to be accounted for only by the unsuspecting confidence in their fellow citizens, natural to men conscious of their liberty. Aware of this trait in the character of our people, designing members of the fraternity, and those who are weak enough to find pleasure in its fantastic frivolities and bloated titles, have lengthened its cords till they now probably embrace more than a hundred thousand of our countrymen.

Of this number we cannot doubt that a large proportion cherish no part of the spirit of the institution. Invited to join it, by its lofty pretensions, in early life they entered its threshhold. And, although disgusted at every step, for the purpose of understanding an institution, which they had once consented to enter, they suffered themselves to be raised to the second or third degree. Nothing could induce them to go further. Such were most of the Masons, whose illustrious names have been so often abusively and boastfully arrayed, to shield the institution from the consuming reprobation now everywhere provoked against it, in unprejudiced minds, by its full and accurate exposure. These men, in the bottom of their souls, have all renounced it.

But there are other members of very different character who adhere to it with a tenacity exactly proportioned to their estimate of its adaptation to their evil designs. Washington represented it as capable of being employed for the basest purposes, and never visited a lodge but once or twice in the last thirty years of his life.

We live in an age of singular interest, and are the depositories of immeasurable responsibilities, Our ancestors voluntarily left their native seats—broke up the strong and amiable ties of local association—tore themselves from all their kindred in spite of the absorbing and ingrained affections of consanguinity, and planted themselves in the most secluded and dangerous wastes of nature. All the privations and sufferings of this course they heroically met and endured, to preserve the rights of the mind. In these are to be found all the springs of liberty, civil and religious. And they constitute the only incorruptible wealth of the created and uncreated universe. By asserting them and preserving them with unparalleled and holy fortitude, our ancestors laid a sure foundation for a most unsullied and constantly increasing fame. All social action is commendable, or the reverse, as it advances or opposes these rights. Falsehood, injustice, cruelty, oppression, murder, treason, and every other imaginable crime, implies hostility to them, and is therefore to be resisted and subdued.

These are the great truths taught by our early history. And profoundly impressed upon the minds of our citizens, they cannot be eradicated. One of the important inferences from them is, that individuals are not the property of government, but government the property of individuals, who have a right to modify, change, or abolish it, as a majority of those, who constitute it, may think most conducive to the common welfare. In support of this inference, our revolutionary war was waged and our civil constitutions adopted. And these glorious events, while they have sent us forward with unparalleled vigor and celerity in the road of improvement, have opened new prospects and awakened higher hopes in the great family of nations. Following our example, the people are everywhere gradually understanding and claiming their rights. The arrogant pretenders to arbitrary power are sinking into comparative disesteem. And the only just government of human origin, that of public opinion is universally raising on high and spreading abroad the welcome and protecting ensigns of her supremacy.

To this government Freemasonry is wholly opposed. It requires unresisting submission to its own authority in contempt of public opinion—the claims of conscience—and the rights of private judgment. It would dam up the majestic current of improving thoughts among all its subjects throughout the earth, by restricting beneficial communication. In attempting to do this, it has stained our country with a brother's blood, tempted many of our influential citizens into the most degrading forms of falsehood, and burst away, with its powers undiminished, its vengeance provoked, and its pollutions manifest, from the strong arm of distributive justice.

The Churches.

—At Bristol, Ind., lately, Mary Cripe, who has been using crutches for four years, was instantaneously cured after praying for relief.

—Rev. J. Day Brownlee, whose able discourse on Freemasonry while pastor at Wellsville, Ohio, ten years ago, is among our reform pamphlets, is now pastor of the United Presbyterian church at Indiana, Pa. One of his members has just contributed $5,000 to the Memorial fund of the denomination.

—Elder J. M. Snyder, who formerly resided at Wheaton, but is now leading the cause of the Wesleyan churches in Nebraska has been laboring in revival work in Adams county in a neighborhood named after the three stalwart sons of Hon. J. M. Kent, of Clarence, Iowa, who are the leading citizens in the vicinity.

—Bro. U. D. Lathrop, New Windsor, Mercer county, Ill., sends word that his people are in the midst of a glorious revival at the Hopewell Wesleyan church. Some twenty-five or thirty are born into the kingdom and the work yet goes on. This is the third revival season experienced by this church within five years.

—Bro. Geo. Richey, former State lecturer for Ohio, reports in the Wesleyan a glorious revival in Senecaville, during which over forty persons experienced a change of heart and life.

—Out of a total of 1,400 at the Chicago Avenue ("Moody" church) Sunday school, Mar. 4, 565 were adults. This is believed to be the largest percentage of adults of any school in the country, and is attributed to practical methods of the teachers.

—The Methodist Episcopal Conference meeting in Winchester, Va., last week, adopted a resolution indorsing the action of the Maryland State Temperance Alliance in the cause of prohibition; also a resolution condemning the carrying and distribution of mails, running steam or street-cars, and publishing, buying, or reading secular newspapers on Sundays, and condemning all camp meeting associations which receive rebate from Sunday travel.

—Bishop McNamara, Messrs. Richard A. Maloney, Francis McCormick, Patrick Maher and others have organized the first Independent or Reformed Catholic church of Chicago, and located their headquarters on Cottage Grove Avenue, near Twenty-ninth street. They are now holding a series of meetings to be continued every evening until further notice. Mr. A. J. Bell, the well-known Methodist Catholic evangelist, and other speakers are to speak.

—The Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York this week celebrated the twentieth anniversary of the installation of the Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby as its pastor. The Rev. Dr. S. I. Prime said that when Dr. Crosby took the church there were only 200 names on the roll, only forty-seven of whom could be found in the city without the aid of detectives. In these twenty years 450 have joined the congregation on profession of faith in the church and 639 in the chapel, making an average of fifty-four a year. The number who have joined on certificate from other churches is 880, and there are now 1,413 names on the roll. In the past ten years the congregation has contributed $300,000 for religious uses.

—Seventeen dollars per member is a good showing for the Egyptian Christians, and is also a proof that the missionaries there know how to do their work. They teach the duty of giving along with the duty of believing to their converts.

—The increase of infidelity among the Armenians of Turkey is a matter of serious import to the missionaries. "Both on the East and on the West active agencies are propagating materialism. The young Armenians who learn French in order to be in the fashion become imbued with French ideas, and the seaports of Western Turkey are, therefore, filled with Armenian youths who are too well-informed to believe in a God. In Eastern Turkey the Russian schools of Nihilism are making themselves felt through Armenian teachers, sent to educate the downtrodden villagers of Armenia.

—Religious statistics are published, and show the total amount contributed by the various denominations in the United States the past year for benevolent and congregational purposes to be $106,962,000, of which the amount collected for purely benevolent purposes is $31,331,150. The amount contributed for church purposes, including the maintenance of the churches, sustaining the ministry, etc., is $75,252,866. There are 92,652 Protestant churches in the United States, with 71,602 ministers and 9,003,030 members.

—The Christian at Work says: When a lady missionary first tried to gain access to the homes of the high-cast Hindus, some twenty years ago, and at least see and talk to the imprisoned inmates of their zenanas, the door was either shut in her face, or, if she was suffered to enter, she was not allowed to sit down. The utmost concession was that she might stand on the verandah; and often, as she left the house, she has seen the people dash water over the place where she had stood, to remove the pollution her presence had caused. And now? Not a vestige or shadow of such a feeling seems to remain. The teacher is received as an honored guest everywhere, even though she may not be permitted to give instruction, mingled as they know it would be, with Bible truth.

—Rev. Dr. Harper, a veteran, useful and beloved missionary of the Presbyterian Board in China, writes as follows to the New York Observer: "In June, 1883, it will be forty years since I was accepted by the Board as a missionary, and on June 22, 1884, it will be forty years since I first left to come to China. The last ten years have been the harvest time in this mission and the time of its enlargement. For the first ten years, I baptized only one convert. He abides stedfast to the present time. And during those ten years of waiting and preparing I never felt any more discouraged than I have done since I have been permitted to baptize forty each year. The work is very hopeful for the future, and I hope through the blessing of God to see yet greater results during the next ten years, if my life is spared to behold them."

—The recent progress in the matter of self-support among the churches of the India and Ceylon missions, says the Missionary Herald, organ of the American Board, has been very marked, and gives much promise for the future. As indicated in a letter from Rev. Mr. Hume, none of the twenty-three churches in the Maratta mission received the past year any aid from the Board towards the support of their pastors. Five of these churches are entirely independent of any aid, and the other eighteen have grants from the Association of native churches, which raised last year a small fund for this purpose. In the Madura district seventeen of the thirty-four churches received no aid from the Board, though several of them are aided by the Native Evangelical Society. In the Ceylon mission only three of the fifteen pastors and preachers seek help from the Board, and the whole amount appropriated the past year for these three pastors is less than $140. Of the seventy-one churches in India and Ceylon, connected with the American Board, there are fifty that receive nothing from its treasury. This statement is as gratifying as it is remarkable.

MY LAST REVIVAL AT WILKESVILLE.

BY REV. WARREN TAYLOR.

During the summer of 1873 there was a falling off in the attendance on public worship of ten per cent. or more; and those who attended were nearly all church members. Observing this fact, for which there was no visible cause, I became very anxious for the future of the church; and as the year wore away, I began to suspect (and I say it with no spirit of boasting), I began to suspect, or greatly to fear, that I myself might be the stumbling-block in the way of others, or the Achan in the camp for whose sake the church was left to languish.....Again and again I besought the Lord to remove me, if such were the case, that there might be no hindrance to a blessing on the people. Indeed my own poor life seemed of very small importance in comparison with the conversion of souls, and the upbuilding and permanance of the church. Whether unconsciously dealing with myself, or simply following the rule that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," my preaching in the months of October and November was much on the holiness of God, and the exceeding evil of sin; and was (I think) the most searching that I ever did. In December, as my notes show, my preaching was mingled warning, and invitation, and exhortation to the members of the church. The Week of Prayer for 1874 came, and was observed by alternate day and night meetings. On Friday I discoursed on the propriety of solemn resolutions to obey God, from the text "I have sworn and will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments." Following up this idea, I preached on the following Sabbath from the text "I beseech you, therefore, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice," etc., and near the close of the sermon, under a strong impulse, I called on those who were ready to pledge themselves to the service of God, and to the work of saving souls, and with a devotion that they had never known, to rise to their feet. Almost the entire congregation arose. I wish to put in parenthesis here, that a month later, on a Sabbath morning, with a full house. I called on those who preferred Christ and his favor to the world and its pleasures, to rise, and the whole congregation save two or three sprang to their feet before the words had died from my lips. I am not sure now that under any circumstances I should dare to repeat these experiments, yet I am not aware of any evil that followed, and think the result was for good.

I go back now to the Sabbath after the Week of Prayer. The question of a few special meetings for the following week, had been considered, and the Session said they saw nothing to warrant it. The weather was stormy, and the roads were bad; still they would stand by me if I saw fit to proceed. And so, encouraged by the symptoms on the Sabbath, I ventured to appoint preaching for Monday evening, and prayer-meeting for Tuesday morning. On Sabbath evening and Monday evening the interest was so manifest that I appointed preaching for two evenings more. On Tuesday morning I addressed the church from the words "Who shall roll us away the stone," etc., to the effect that when His servants are going forward with love to Him, God will remove all difficulties. That night on invitation to those who were resolved to forsake the world and embrace the Saviour, three came forward. The next night three more, and when the benediction was pronounced the whole congregation stood still in their places, refusing to move. It became necessary to continue the meeting for nearly an hour more, and still the people were reluctant to go. I had to urge them to withdraw.

From that time the meetings went forward with preaching every evening save Saturday, and morning prayer-meetings on alternate days for eleven weeks. For a great part of the time the weather was stormy and the roads were exceeding bad, but the people would come with their lanterns through the fields. A female teacher who up to this time had been skeptical on the subject of religion, became so interested as to walk six miles on a snowy evening to attend the evening meeting. The attendance on the Sabbath was more than doubled, and that on week days and evenings proportionally good.

The evening meetings commenced at 6: 30 o'clock, with prayer and singing for half an hour. Then came the sermon, and this was followed by a meeting of inquiry, with instructions and exhortations to the awakened, the whole closing rigorously at nine o'clock. In the inquiry meetings I was commonly assisted by two or three men and as many women members of the congregation in whose piety and wisdom I had reason to confide; and the whole congregation commonly remained at these meetings, which were conducted with remarkable stillness, though often with intense feeling. In these meetings also, the power of song was very noticable. The good old hymns like "Come, trembling sinner," and the newer hymns like "Just as I am, without one plea," would often bring halting ones to a decision, when I was unable to do it with my own persuasion.

Altogether eighty persons "came forward," besides twenty church members who wished to renew their vows and their religious life.

As fruits of this revival fifty-three were received on confession of faith, old members grew taller, the piety of many subjects of previous revivals was greatly developed and strengthened, and a new house of worship was undertaken and completed the following year.

In the last Evangelist a book is noticed with the title "The Revival, and after the Revival." Well, after the revival a good many who had been awakened, and some who were thought to be converted, went back to the world, and there was great nervous exhaustion on the part of minister and people. I think the meetings were continned a month too long. As to real conversions I have never deemed it very safe to count. Altogether 105 were received to the church on confession of faith as fruits of the four awakenings enjoyed by the Wilkesville church during the ten years of my ministry there. I have just been looking over the list of the 105 names, and it would perhaps be safe to say that at the present time one-fifth of this number are giving no good evidence of a religious life. But among them are many of the most consistent, earnest, and usefnl Christian men and women that I know anywhere. I found the church with ninety-three members, and left it with 175. Whilst I was there an academy, a parsonage, and a house of worship were built. And since its organization the church of Wilkesville has given seven of its sons to the Gospel ministry, of whom three are still in the work.

It was the year after this revival (1875) when I discovered that the Masonic lodge was making a strong raid on my church, deceiving and seducing and absorbing and corrupting its young men. Of my attempt to check that raid, an accont was given in the Chritsian Cynosure at the time. If I succeeded, it was at the expense of my pastorate. Bnt the church was saved from the corruption and overthrow of which it was in imminent peril. God does not exempt us from trials which are needed in the development of character. But He is still working by his word and his providence and his spirit for the welfare of his people and the success of his cause, and we may rest assured that he will so continue to work.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

The Cynosure is happy to announce herewith a grand list of contributors and correspondents for 1883. To read their letters, study their arguments, compare their experiences, and drink with them at the fountain of truth, even Jesus Christ, will be the noble privilege of the readers of the Cynosure. The following is only a partial list. Arrangements are being made for the enlargement of the circle until it shall include every section of our country:

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON I., April 1, 1883.—Simon the Sorcerer.—Acts 8: 14-25. GOLDEN TEXT.—Thy heart is not right in the sight of God.—Acts 8: 21.

NOTES.

Simon Magus. Before Philip came to this city a certain man named Simon, called Magus, i. e., the Magician or Sorcerer, had made himself very popular among the people by means of his magic arts. Neander, Alford, Farrar, and others identify this Simon with one mentioned by Josephus as living ten or twenty years after this. In this case Simon was a Jew, born in Citium in the Island of Cyprus. He is sad to have been educated at Alexandria; others say he was born in Ghittim in Samaria—but probably there was some mistake through the similarity of names. He professed to be some distinguished person, some famous propbet, a messenger sent from heaven, endowed with supernatural powers.—Gloag. He professed to believe the oriental philosophy of his day; claimed to be himself an eon or emanation from the deity; travelled about with a beautiful prostitute, whom he represented as another divine emanation; aided Felix in seducing Drusilla, the queen of Emesa (see on Acts 24: 24); subsequently came to Rome, where he continued to practice his magic arts.—Abbott. Justin relates that he was worshipped as a god at Rome, in the time of Claudius Cæsar, on account of his magical powers.—Alford. Bitterly annoyed at the result of his collisiou with the followers of Jesus, it is probable that this unhappy man at once turned his great powers (for these undoubtedly he possessed in no mean degree), to oppose the growing influence of the little church. His evil work was crowned with uo small measure of success, for in the records of the early history of Christianity, among the many false teachers, who sprang up, Simon Magus is invested with a mysterious importance, "as the great Heresiarch, the open enemy of the apostles, inspired, it would seem, by the spirit of evil, to countermine the work of the Saviour, and to found a school of error in opposition to the church of God."—Schaff.

"They sent unto them." (1) In order to impart gifts to the converts which Philip was unable to give (Stock); (2) to formally sanction tbis work of Philip in Samaria. The subsequent general admission of the Samarian people into the church of the Master, was for the College of Apostles in Jerusalem no slight matter, for it signified a eomplete breaking down of the old barriers of prejudiee, behind whieh the orthodox Jew had rigidly intrenched himself. We can hardly understand now what a painful struggle it must have been for pious Jews like James, the Lord's brother, and John, to conecde that even the hated Samaritan had a right to tbe kingdom of heaven—that the bitterly hated, the "accursed people," as they deemed them, might join the church of Christ on the same terms as a Hebrew of the Hebrews.—Schaff.

"Theu they laid their hands on them." The prayer obtained from God the communication of the Spirit, but the imposition of hands became the vehicle of the communication. It was certainly ot a symbolical nature, yet not a bare and ineffective symbol, but the effective conductor of the gifts prayed for.—Meyer. Just as water in our houses comes uot from the pipes, but from springs or lakes, yet it comes through the pipes.—Eugene Stock.

"Saying, Give me this power." The magicians were accustomed to sell the kuowledge of their arts. Whether he openly proposed to buy, or whether his act was a secret one, in the nature of an attempted bribery, the account does not indicate; the latter supposition is the more inherently probable. From his act here the name of simony has been given to the offense of buying or selling ecclesiastical offices in the church—one which can only exist in an established church, where the spiritual office is a means of temporal profit, and is at the disposal of a lay patron or an ecclesiastical superior.—Abbott.

"That the gift of God may be purchased." (1) Salvation is God's free gift, and as such draws the heart to God, which is essential to salvation. (2) Salvation is so precious that there is nothing of sufficient value wherewith to purchase it. (3) Salvation is of such a nature that it cannot be purchased; it is love, but purchased love is not love; it is a choice of good and God, but a choice cannot be purchased. (4) Money is but a small portion of what God asks of us in return for his salvation. He wants the heart, the soul, the whole of us; and all is infinitely too little to give him.—P.

"Pray ye to the Lord." There is no true peniteuce in this prayer; no sense of sin; no seeking for forgiveness. It is the language of fear, not of repentance, and resembles that of Saul to Samuel (1 Sam. 15: 30), who desired not divine forgiveness, but escape from public censure and reprobation before the people. He prays not for deliverance from "the bond of iniquity," but only from the vague terror of a future penalty. He turns not, as Peter had bidden him, to the Lord who was ready to forgive, but to a human mediator. Peter must pray for him who has not faith to pray for himself.—Plumptre.

PRACTICAL.

1. A lively, but indefinite, obscure excitement of the religious feeling always exposes men to a variety of dangerous delusions.—Neander.

2. True joy differs from false, as the spring sunshine differs from the lamps in a scene of midnight revelry.

3. The wonders of false religions excite astonishment and awaken curiosity; the wonders of Christianity are for the blessing of men and the saving the soul from sin.

4. Ver. 14. The Gospel makes enemies love each other, and breaks down the barriers which pride and nationallty have built up.

5. Ver. 15. The great blessing for the Christian is the gift of the Holy Spirit.

6. Ver. 18. Bad men think all men have as bad hearts as they.

7. One who knows the truth is not equal to one who loves the truth.—India proverb.

8. Note the test of true conversion in the motives. The false convert ever seeks self-advancement; the true convert seeks the good of otbers.

9. Ver. 20. The best things can never be purchased—love, faith, truth; they can only be given.

10. Vers. 22, 23. Sin is always bitter in its fruits.

11. Sin is a bondage; only the good are free.

12. There is an unpardonable sin, because there is a sin which will not be repented of.

13. Ver. 24. They who mock at the mercy of God by their hypocrisy in such seasons of privilege, are in special danger of becoming aggravated sinners.—Taylor.

14. False repentance is sorrow, not for the sin, but for the punishment.

MISCELLANY.

Twelve millions of dollars were given to the cause of higher education during the year ending with May last, and seventy-one millions have been devoted to the same interest within ten years.

A bill has been introduced in the Connecticut Legislature providing that landlords shall keep in every room above the first floor a cotton rope, knotted at every fourteen inches, and of sufficient length to reach the ground. It must be securely fastened and capable of sustaining 500 pounds weight.

It was the custom among the American Indians to burn up the wigwam of a deceased brave to preveut his relatives quarreling over his property. In civilization the property of the dead is handed over to the lawyers for similar reasons.—New Haven Register.

"In one week, uot long ago," says the New York Tribune, "120,000,000 barrels of oil were sold, when there were not 35,000,000 barrels in the country, and probably uot 1,000,000 actually changed owners. But if the gambling is so enormous that three-fourths or nine-tenths of the business of a large class of men would be cut off if it would cease, so much the more reason why it should cease. The crop of ruined young men and of broken banks is large enough already."

Some interesting experiments lately made Prof. Margis have shown that a certain acid much used in trade can be economically procured from ordinary atmospheric air by subjecting it to a strong pressure. This discovery, by cheapennig production, may lead to very important results. The modus operandi is an follows: A certain amount of air is forced against a rubber membiane for a certain length of time, which causes a gluitinous substauce to collect on the other side of the rubber. Analysis shows this substance to contain 40 per ceut. acid, and each repetition of the process raises the percentage until 95 per cent. acid is obtained at the fourth repetition.

An ingenious method of putting his savings beyond his own reach has been adopted by a German writer, who found from dire experience that all his profits melted away as soon as earned. Having made £16,000 by a fortunate literary speculation, he placed the whole of the moncy, together with his will, in the Imperial Deposit Bank at Berlin, and on receiving the receipt from tbe cashier deliberately tore it up. The cashier thought he was mad, and told him angrily that it would take fully three years before he could expect to obtain a duplicate receipt. "That is just why I have torn up the original," calmly remarked the depositor; "and now the money is safe for that time."

Notwithstanding our numerous schools of every grade, there is no little illiteracy in America. In 1870 the voting population of the country was 7,623,000 and of this number 1,580,000 could not read their ballots. At our last national election there were 9,297,000 votes cast. About twenty two per cent. of those who voted could ueither read nor write. New York has nearly 80,000 illiterate voters, and Pennsylvania ncarly 70,000. This illiteracy is found very largely in our great cities. We need to ponder these startling facts, and our general government can do no better thing than to appropriate money for the multiplication of our educational facilities. The ignorant must be educated to be governed. Illiteracy may prove its mightiest foe.

When figures go above a few thousand how little we comprehend their real meaning. When we say the amount of coal mined in the United States in 1881 amounted to 76,122,000 tons, we say, of course, the figures are enormous, and begin to wonder where our children are to get their coal, by and by; but before you begin to wonder, read how the Philadelphia Record puts it. It says: "The great pyramids of Egypt are regarded as miracles of industry and wasted labor. The longest of all, at Gizeh, took 100,000 men almost half a century to build, contains very nearly 80,000,000 cubic feet of stone. Yet, if all the coal mined in this country in 1881 had been piled in pyramids of similar size, there would have been more than twenty-six of these tremendous monuments of coal completed, or one every two wecks. Again, suppose that a square column had been made of coal, allowing it to base fifty feet square, there would be more than 1,700 such columus, 500 feet high, rising to a level with the projected top of the Washington monument in Washingtou. The Chinese wall is believed to be 1,400 miles long, twenty feet high and twenty-four feet thick, containing 3,548,169,000 cubic feet. If the coal in 1881 had been put into such a wall it would have extended from Philadelphia to Chicago, and have had enough left over to surround both cities," and Pennsylvania alone produces 48,500,000 tons, or more than one-half the entire amount.

ON THE FARM.

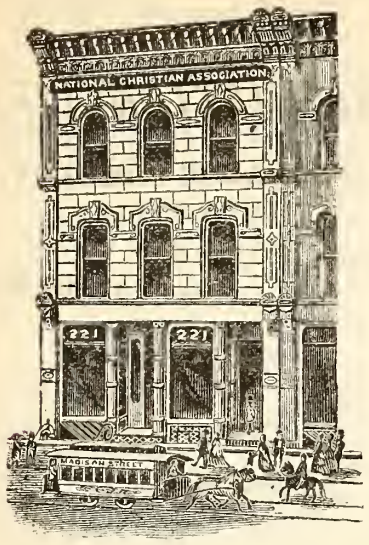
Physical properties of soil. Practical scientists have begun to recognize more and more the fact that the chemical constituents of the soil are not the only agents that influence the life and growth of plants, but that the physical characteristics have an equal, and perhaps even greater influence.

Next to the texture of the soil, which is an exclusively physical characteristic, there is water and heat, which have a great deal to do with the problem of how much a given soil will yield—in fact, perhaps more than the amount of plant-food the soil contains: and the proof is the great difference in productiveness in different seasons; dry or cold seasons are enough to make an otherwise rich soil little productive.

Varied farming the best. Southern agricultural writers generally agree that the planters of tbat region would be much better off if they would grow corn, oats, hay, and the other things they have to buy, as well as the cotton which is now their only crop. Within the past few years, a class of immigration has been introduced into Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia, the results of which have proved remarkably satisfactory. A colony that located near Tuscumbia, made an effort in the direction of reducing the vast cotton plantations of that regiou into small farms for varied culture. The traditional prejudices in labor of vast plantatious that pertain to that section were opposed to innovations of this character of improvement, and the consequence was that the tide of immigration went into more congenial quarters. Still, old prejudices gave way little by little, and plantation men are growing more variety than they did. Hardly any of them make much money where cotton alone is the crop. The purchased plantatiou supplies take too great a portion of the cotton profits.

Whenever you see a hawk fly off with a chicken, follow him at a distance, sufficient to allow him to get well a-going with his repast before you molest him, but be sure and frighten him away before he has devoured the whole chicken. Then set your steel trap where you find the chicken, covering it well with the feathers for bait, and, in a few minutes after you are out of sight, the unsuspecting pirate will pounce down and take possession of that trap in a way that will allow you to carry him home at your leisure.

IMPROVING POOR FARMS.



The best thiug for a man to do when he finds himself with a poor farm on his hands, is, oftentimes, to leave it and locate on a better one. It can often be done at no more cost than the improving the other would come to. But if it is decided to improve the poor one, about the first thing to look to is the drainage. Where a farmer is unable to make covered drains, either on account of its cost or for want of the required fall, he should have open ditches in order to get rid of all surface water. The next point of importance is to have your plowing well done and the land brought to a fine tilth, keeping it perfectly clear of a vegetable growth except that which is sown or planted, putting in no more crop than you are able to cultivate well; get your land in clover as soon as possible, and when you have succeeded in this, apply from thirty to fifty bushels of quicklime to the acre. Should your land be too poor to produce clover, try peas, buckwheat or oats, which, as soon as in blossom, should be plowed under for the purpose of supplying the soil with vegetable matter. Endeavor to convert all coarse material, such as straw, fodder, rough hay (and anything else that will absorb the liquids from the stable), into manure, and apply directly from the stable in order to make the most of it. When once in grass keep a sod upon it as long as possible, and pasture no more thau is absolutely necessary. Depend upon clover, plaster, lime and stable manure for increasing the fertility of your soil, aud if you are unable to get a sufficient quanty of these, purchase the best commercial fertilizers in the market.—Tribune and Farmer.

WHY SEEDS FAIL.

In the first place, however, we will examine the causes of failure. If small seeds are planted too deep, they either rot in the damp cold earth, for the want of the warmth necessary to their germination, or, after germination, perish before the shoots can reach the sun and air; so that which was designed for their support aud nourishment proves their grave.

If the soil is a stiff clay, it is often too cold at the time the seeds are planted to effect their germination; for it must be understood that warmth and moisture ase necessary to the germination of seeds. Neither of these will do alone. Seeds may be kept iu a warm, dry room, in dry sand or earth, and they will not grow. They may be placed in damp earth, and kept in a low temperature, and they will most likely rot, though some seeds will remain dormant a long time under these circumstances. But place them in moist earth, in a warm room, and they will commence growth at once. Auother difficulty with heavy soil is that it becomes hard on the surface, and this prevents the young plants from "coming up;" or if, during showery weather, they happen to get above the surface, they become locked in and make but little advancement unless the cultivator is careful to keep the crust well broken; and in doing this the young plants are often destroyed. If stiff, the soil where small seeds are sown should be made mellow, particularly on the surface, by the addition of sand and light mould.

If seeds are sown in rough, lumpy ground, a portion will be buried under the clods, and will never grow; and many that start, not finding a fit soil for their roots, will perish. A few may escape these difficulties and flourish. —Hovey's Catalogue.

SCOTCH RITE MASONRY ILLUSTRATED.

is the title selected for the complete illustrated Ritual of all the Scotch Rite Degrees. The ineffable or Scotch Rite Degrees begin with the 4th degree, the first three, called Blue Lodge or Ancient Craft Masonry, being common to the Scotch, York and all other Masonic Rites. The Scotch Rite consists of 29 degrees (4th to 33d.) and the manuscript with drawings for profusely illustrating the work are all ready and will make two volumes of about 400 pages each. Owing doubtless to the fact that few of these degrees have ever been exposed in their order and those very imperfectly, Scotch Rite Masonry has, in all the larger towns, for several years been recognized as the ruling rite and to become a Thirty-two degree Mason is the highest ambition of thousands of lodge devotees.

Two "Supreme Councils" Control the Scotch Rite in this Country. "The Southern Jurisdiction" which includes the District of Columbia, Iowa and several other Northern States is presided over by the Guerrilla Rebel General Albert Pike as "Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander."

The expense of getting out the first edition of these rituals will be very heavy but as soon as the cash is secured for 1,500 copies of each volume, work will be commenced. Price in cloth $1 00 per vol. $9.00 per doz. In paper covers 50cts per vol. $4.00 per doz.

All cash orders received before publication for either of these books will be filled at 20 per cent discount, and orders may be to sent the publisher, Ezra A. Cook, No. 18 Wabash Avenue, or to W. I. Phillips, Cynosure Office, Chicago.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandalgua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the hook, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen, $15.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The President has appointed A. N. Wyman, Assistant Treasurer of the United States, to be Treasurer, vice James Gilfillan.

—Among the bills introduced in the Pennsylvania Senate is one to prevent the burning or cremating of human bodies. The bill makes the penalty for violation a fine not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and imprisonment not less than one nor more than three years in solitary confinement.

—The bill restoring the death penalty for murder, has passed the Maine legislature.

—A seusation was created in the Massachusetts legislature by a message from Governor Butler, vetoing the bill making appropriations for the expenses of the various charitable and reformatory iustitutions. He says it contains appropriatious for distinct purposes, some of which are objectionable.

—A party of capitalists has been organized in New York to import Swedes and establish a factory to make fine matches, similar to those manufactured in Sweden and Norway, much superior to anything we have.

—Two students of Columbia College had arranged to fight a duel, but several of the party were arrested upou startiug for the place of meeting.

—Thc two Judson sisters perished iu the flames at East Hartford, Conn., by the burning of their house.

—A few days ago there was a marriage ceremony at Columbus, Ohio, at which the person officiating as a clergyman was a woman. This is the first instance of the kind on record, and it may become a question whether the affair was legal, the womau not being regularly ordaiued, ouly enjoying the privileges of an evangelist.

—At Hamilton, Ont., Thursday night, Mrs. Alexander and her son, aged 15, were suffocated by coal-gas from a self-feeding stove.

—Near Helena, Ark., the flood overturned a house, and four children were drowned. Six adults were rescued after clinging to the roof for three days. Stock are up to their throats in water in the St. Francis swamps, and many carcasses of dead animals are floating about.

—Heury Siebert's will, bequeathing more than a million dollars to charities, has been admitted to probate in Philadelphia. The will also stipulated that the body of the testator should be cremated.

—N. A. Dukes, a young lawyer, on trial at Uniontown, Pa., for murdering State Treasurer Nutt, was found to be not guilty yesterday evening. Judge and spectators were amazed at the verdict, and the popular excitement was intense. Dukes and the jury were hung and burned in effigy. A meeting of citizens denounced the jury, and separated after groaning for the murderer. The appearance of the jurors on the street was the signal for yells, hisses and threats. Jacob W. Amaloug, one of the jurors, was beaten so badly at Belle Vernon, Pa., that he will not recover.

—The Washington papers say that the star-route trial threatens to last a month yet. That is discouraging. Everybody is tired of the trial but the lawyers for the government, who are getting $150 a day.

—Both the New York and New Jersey legislatures have passed a law requiring all telegraph lines to be put under ground before the 1st of January, 1885.

—The Rugby colony, Tenn., which has beeu for some time in financial embarrassment, has been relieved by the loan of $125,000 from Henry Kimber, an English millionaire, who was one of the original projectors of the scheme, which is now in a fair way to success.

FOREIGN.

—Thursday night a report like that caused by the discharge of an eighty-ton gun startled Westminster, London, and was caused by an explosion in the government offices. At first it was supposed to have beeu caused by gas, but later is presumed to have resulted from gunpowder or dynamite, placed for the purpose of destroying the buildings. Sections of the House of Commons were shaken, and many of those present became alarmed. No lives were lost, but a portiou of the structure was demolished. It is rumored au attempt was also made to destroy the Times building. The act is attributed to Fenians.

—A new party is being formed in Canada, having for its objects Roman Catholic authority in educational questions and supportiug the claims of Jesuits for recovering confiscated lands.

—It is stated Joe Brady, a conspiracy prisoner, confessed that he murdered Lord Frederick Cavendish and Burke.

—A boiler explosion on a Cuban plantation killed six negroes, one white man and a Chinese, and wounded six negroes and four Chinamen.

—The roof of one wing of the Payrel Theater at Havana, Cuba, fell, crushing into a coffee house beneath and killiug several persons.

—Already 1,200 persons have been arrested in Andalusia, Spain, for complicity in the anarchist movement. The charges are murder, outrages, and abettors of the "Black-haud" society.

A RULE.

MORE HONORED IN THE BREACH THAN IN THE OBSERVANCE.

Most papers intended for general circulation expect a shrinkage in subscriptions and receipts during the summer months. This is the rule, but like others it has exceptions. Whcther your paper shall be included in the rule or placed among the honorable exceptions depends——

1. Upon the management and merits of the paper itself, and

2. Upon the efforts of its friends to extend its circulation. Those charged with the editorial and publishing department arc very largely responsible for the former while the latter depends mainly upon the faith and works of our friends. It will be our aim constantly to improve your paper in every respect, and we will endeavor by the blessing of God and your assistance to place the Cynosure among the exceptions. If any have been waiting for a letter or personal invitation to engage in the work of canvassing, plcase accept this as such and "make no delay" in joining the company whose successful efforts for the past ten weeks have added new names to the list and prcvented many others from dropping through the "hole in the bottom of the bag."

MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, OF NEW YORK.
Assets, $10,650,000.
Surplus $2,200,000.

NEW FEATURES.

THE MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—The annual report of the Manhattan Life Insurance Company, of this city, has just been made public, and it is one that must be gratifying to both policy-holders and managers. The assets of this company have increased to $10,348,239, and it has a surplus fund over every liability aggregating $2,112,086. The Manhattan Life is one of the oldest companies in the State, and is admirably conducted. Among the priviledges its policy-holders enjoy are: The policies and plans embrace the best features as to the incontestability, residence, travel, and the New York law of non-forfeiture. In its non-participating policies it sells insurance, not future "dividends." Its contract is plain, its security is ample, its rates of premium low. These policies may be converted into cash at the option of the insurant, on due surrender, after three annual premiums have been paid. Policy-holders can ascertain the value and terms of surrender by applying at the New York office for the published table of cash surrender values. The Manhattan Life is reliable and noted for the promptness with which it meets claims.—DAILY PRESS.

AGENTS WANTED.—Competent, reliable men in localities where not now represented. Liberal arrangements will be made with persons who can sccure business and who can furnish satisfactory references.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The country was surprised on Monday morning to learn of the sudden death of Hon. Timothy O. Howe, Postmaster General, at the house of a relative at Kenosha, Wis., on the previous afternoon. He had been enjoying better health than for years, but exposure during a severe storm at Green Bay on the 18th ult. brought on an attack of pneumonia which terminated suddenly and fatally. Mr. Howe was many years in public life, beginning with 1845, when he was elected judge of the circuit court. He has been judge in the Supreme Court of Wisconsin; Senator for three terms, from 1861 to 1879; commissioner to the International Monetary Congress; and became Postmaster General in December, 1881. This office he has conducted with ability, following in the wake of reforms began by Mr. James. He has urged the reduction of postage, and the new two-cent rate which will soon be in force is largely due to his effort. Mr. Howe was not a Mason and his career proves how needless it is for a public man to enter the lodge for the sake of political advancement.

Dartmouth College, Hanover, New Hampshire, is again unpleasantly before the public. Its hive is yet unsettled from the differences between the president, S. C. Bartlett, formerly of the Congregational Theological Seminary in this city, and the faculty. Now comes the Senior class with a vote appointing Robert G. Ingersoll as commencement orator. Fortunately for the other students the choice of speaker rest finally with other parties and the class has accomplished nothing but a proclamation of its religious convictions which should be heard with sorrow and alarm. They advertise at the same time the kind of religious instruction which has prevailed during the past four years, and a contemporary says justly, "A college that produces students of that stamp is doing more harm than good."

Following the advent of American railway lines into Mexico and the frequent excursions of our business men to the Mexican capital, comes the visit of General Diaz, the present leader in Mexican affairs, and to whom is given the title of third founder of that Republic. His stay in Chicago was the occasion of many courtesies from our business men who are eager for Mexican trade, interspersed with frequent banquets. The career of Diaz differs little from that of nearly every prominent man of that unsettled nation. Quickly recurring revolutions, sometimes in the name of a party, as often for personal aggrandizement, have been the rounds of the ladder by which he has mounted. His skill in battle and general success in legislation have secured a present peace which may be held fast by the iron railway bands of commerce. It is certain that the interests of the United States in Mexico will be best served when the perpetual war of factions shall have ceased, and this interchange of visits will be no small aid toward such a result. It is also an encouragement to our missionaries in that country who have suffered no little damage in life and limb because of the lawless condition of a community always fighting over an executive.

The regions about New York are literally flowing with milk, but the honey has turned to gall, for the farmers in their ire are sending the childrens' supper to the city by way of the gutters and the Hudson river instead of in an honest eight-gallon can innocent of pump spouts. In fact while the cows and the children do not complain (though the latter have more reason than any others) the middlemen, milkmaids and chalk-and-water mixing peddlers, are at odds, and the farmers are sending spilling committees about the country hoping, in their stupidity, to vex the latter and get more money from them. Those who ought to strike, and strike hard, are the poor families who pay ten cents a quart for a blue and soulless liquid called milk, but which is half water and often not good water at that. The city milk dealers pay the farmers three cents for what they get twenty cents for adulterating and peddling. Now it would not be difficult for the farmers to establish a milk-distributing agency of their own, hence their pouring out milk by the thousand gallons to keep it from the peddlers is worse than foolish. These dealers should be punished for their extortion and adulteration of food, but it should be by sending them to the penitentiary where they should be humbled with a diet of alum bread and their own product.

The uses to which our law-making bodies are sometimes put would have astonished our fathers who, in their integrity and guilelessness, failed to comprehend to what base purposes the best plans might be abused. In New York the alumni of Union College have a voice in the election of the trustees. A faction among them have been fighting to oust the president of the institution, but failing, they had nearly got an act through the State legislature by which they, a minority, could have controlled the institution. So in California a bill had passed to the second reading providing for the divorce of husband and wife on the petition of outside parties, if they had lived apart four years. The iniquity of this measure was first discovered by the wife of one of the members of the legislature from whom a divorce had been sought in vain in the courts by her husband, but by the new measure the matter was easily accomplished. Such abuses of the legislative privilege cannot be met altogether by law, for we cannot legislate the devil out of the world; but a vigilant, free and loyal people may present more powerful checks. Thus the opposition of the press to a renewed effort of the Jesuits of New York to get possession of the reform schools of the State is likely to prevent their measures from passing the legislature or at least the governor.

This attempted action of the California legislature shows to what a demoralized condition our marriage laws have come, and the necessity for this matter to be taken out of the State legislatures into Congress. Under the law in the different New England States divorces have become appallingly frequent, in Connecticut and New Hampshire in the proportion of 1 to 13 and even less. The Congregational ministers of this city lately, in view of the lax system of divorce, resolved not to solemnize marriage where either party has procured a divorce on other than Scriptural grounds. Why should not the pastors take up this matter in earnest, and by a general petitioning secure a needed reform.

Our State educational institutions have often and not unjustly been objected to because religious influences are neglected and there is no incentive from their origin or their method of support to make the condition otherwise. It may as clearly be argued that they are the most expensive part of our educational system, in fact a burden upon the taxpayer that should not be borne. The Illinois Industrial College is an example. Twenty-seven professors, special instructors and assistants are employed; 623 acres of land are occupied with farms, gardens, orchards, arboretum, ornamental and parade grounds; and there are fifteen university buildings, including dormitories and farm buildings, machine shops, drill hall, etc. The total cost of all this preparation must be immense if any estimate can be made from the fact that a new chemical building has cost $40,000 and that the large dormitory building, 125 feet long and five stories high, was so wretchedly built that storms two years ago damaged it so as to render it unfit for use. To these add the further fact that although nearly 2,000 students have attended since the opening fifteen years ago, but 337 have graduated in all departments. The universal experience that funds easily gotten are easily spent, seems to be true of the management, and with the students that is not highly valued which costs nothing. Such is always the temptation of institutions maintained with public funds, and separated in this respect from the sympathy and fellowship of their patrons.

THE INVISIBLE FOE.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

It would be a moving sight to see a blind Hercules laying about him with the full force of his gigantic strength at foes in themselves contemptible, but terrible and deadly because of his privation, and it would be quite as moving a sight were he not blind, but near-sighted, and struggling hopelessly against foes that he could see, but who were supported and maintained by foes that he could not.

This last condition is the spectacle presented to the world by the American people. Fully alive to the fact that our national institutions, watered by blood and nursed by suffering, are, notwithstanding our material prosperity, in danger of total destruction, they are laying about them with tremendous energy now at this enemy and now at that, yet ever find their efforts unavailing, their plans baffled and their very victories turned into defeat.

There are to-day three enemies of our institutions, seen by almost the whole body of our thoughtful and patriotic people, the corrupt genius of our civil service, the mighty giant of monopoly, and the infernal fiend of intemperance—against these, pulpit, press and rostrum thunder together. To none of these evils is there such a united opposition as to our corrupt civil service. For years it has been assailed in public and private, with an earnestness that deserved success; yet there is no civil service reform in this nation, nor is the law lately passed likely to produce any. Notwithstanding all that has been done, over the roof of the White House to-day, floats the old banner with its infamous and pirate motto, "To the victors belong the spoils"

Many of our people. too, as we have seen are fully alive to the grasping power of enormous monopolies and the insolent way in which they ride rough-shod over the people's rights. There have been anti-monopoly conventions in the East and in the West. Ably led by the Western Rural almost the whole agricultural community have been stirred up against the railway kings. Yet these monopolies hold on the even tenor of their way, and brush aside all opposision, as one of their heavy engines might a flurry of snow birds from the track.

The match monopoly causes the people to pay forty cents a box for matches, that can be bought in Canada for a little over half that money, even with our very large revenue duty added; and though the railway kings sometimes fight like pirates among themselves, cutting rates even below a fair profit, yet within a very wide range indeed, they do what they please and charge what they please; as they are beyond the reach of conscience so they also appear to be above the reach of law.

Intemperance in this country may be likened to the entrenched eamp of a strong enemy. Along the whole length of this camp a determined ouset has been made, and it seemed for a time that over wide areas an overwhelming vietory had been gained; but searcely had we ceased to give thanks for suecess; seareely had the notes of our Te Deum died away, when St. John was defeated in Kansas, and the constitutional amendment of Iowa deelared null by her Supreme Court. Thus every wave of reform dashes itself upon the hard blaek rocks of our nation's sins, only to be driven back in shattered foam.

The question would now naturally arise, Are the people of the United States any longer their own masters? Do they longer control their own government? And to this question we boldly answer, No.

Of course it is not for the interest of the powers mentioned to destroy the semblance of our free institutions or do ought that would greatly injure the material prosperity of our country, hence they are quite willing that the old stage should run on the old route; but whenever the people attempt to take the reins into their own hand, they find another driver on the box, guiding the restive steeds of state whither he will.

Have we then passed the meridian of our national liberty? Are we heneeforth as a people only to be allowed so much freedom and prosperity as our masters find it for their own interests to bestow; as an intelligent slave driver might feed his "niggers" well to get more work out of them? It may be even so. It may be that even uow there is no road baek to our old liberties but the bloody highway of revolution. This, however, we do not believe. Could our people see the invisible foe that stands ever within supporting distance of these open enemies; could they understand the nature of that empire of darkness which, marshalled aud typified by Freemasonry, eondnets its midnight plottings in every village of the land, there might even yet be hope that Americans would continue to be a proud and sovereign people. But while Freemasonry exists on Ameriean soil, an organization which in a republican country divides its members into thirty-three degrees, each degree resting upon a platform of oaths strong enough to support the devil, and all bound by horrible penalties to do that which is contrary to all law, both human and divine—while this organization is coutrolled by such men as brandy-hamper Pike, and sueh statesmen as Ben. Butler, with his avowed motto: "Our country right or wrong;" and when this body coutrols others, of a kindred nature, all working with the silence of the pestilenee, and the unity of a cannon-ball, how can we reasouably hope for success in any reform movement to which they are opposed?

We do not of course mean to say that there are not men in those organizations who are personally pure and patriotic, but these men are deluded, and are not trusted with the inner secrets of the order, and like blind men in a big house are but poor guards against dangers either from without or within. Let us suppose that the people rise in their might once more against the fiend intemperance; that the rum power sees itself pressed to the wall, all its methods of defense crumbling like a column of mist before the determined onset of the people, then must the hidden reserve be ordered up, the Grand Sovereign Inspectors and Prinees of Mercy must be well paid, and Rum may rest quietly on his oars, for the power that drags his tow-line never fails to conduct its barges over the shoals and down every rapid that lies in its way. In every village the knowing are at work—some to "damn with faint praise," some to openly oppose, some to superintend the opposition measures and see that if they are finally passed there is a flaw somewhere to render the whole action of the people aud their tremendous expenditure of time, energy and means, unavailing.

Could the American people see this foe and rise in their might for his destruction, there are glorious hopes and a grand destiny for this people. But while the invisible empire maintains its place; while the nation bows down before this hideous idol, and the church of the living God gives forth no warning voice; when to be known as an Anti-mason is to be shut out from all participation in the government and to be suspected and persecuted in every soeial circle and in almost every church, in vain may we clamor for civil service; in vain attack the great monopolies; in vain close up our shattered ranks and move once more upon our common enemy, intemperance. At Bannockburn, the splendid mail-clad chivalry of England were ordered to charge. The bugles rang, the banners waved, and the heavy squadrons came on like a thunder-bolt, only to go dowu in irretrievable ruin in the hidden pit-falls of Brucc. So every movement of our deluded people for a higher national life, or to extricate themselves from present perils, is certain to be swallowed up in the bottomless pits of the Secret Empire.

"WINTER IS PAST."

Winter is past—the little bee resumes
Her share of sun and shade, and o'er the lea
Hums her first hymnings to the flowers' perfumes,
And wakes a sense of gratefulness in me;
The little daisy keeps its wonted place;
Ere March by April gets disarmed of snow,
A look of joy opes on its smiling face,
Turned to that Power that suffers it to blow.
Ah, pleasant time! yet, pleasing as you be,
One still more pleasing, Hope reserves for me,
Where suns unsetting one long summer shine,
Flowers endless bloom, where winter ne'er destroys.
Oh! may the good man's righteous end be mine,
That I may witness these unfading joys.

—Bryant.

THE MISSING LINK.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

"From nature's chain whatever link you strike
Tenth or ten thousandth, breaks the chain alike."

The popular will expressed in the forms of righteous law is supposed to be always effective, and yet it ofteu happens there is a missing link, so that the law fails of effect, and iniquity triumphs, at least for a time.

In 1860 the people of the United States elected Abraham Lineoln on the issue of the extension or non-extension of slavery. The politicians of the South, trusting in a power stronger than the popular will, rebelled, and inaugurated a terrible war. All efforts to enforce the will of the nation failed. There was but one remedy, and Mr. Lincoln diseovered the missing link. The Emancipation Proclamatiou dethroned the slave power and eventually seeured the triumph of law, and thc peace of the nation.

The voiee of the nation as recorded on our national statute books has for more than twenty years demanded the suppression of polygamy. Within a year this law has been reinforeed by a more stringent enactment; and yet a mere handful of polygamists defy and defeat the fifty millions of American people. From whence comes the failure? Where is the missing link, and how shall we supply it?

The people of Kansas resolved to suppress the manufaeture and sale of intoxieants. They embodied their will in the State eonstitution. They framed it into a well considered legislative enactment. They elected a noble man to enforce it, and rejoiced in a seeming triumph of righteous legislation; and to-day we see tue will of the people defeated, the cause of temperance set back, and iniquity has its carnival of victory. Why is all this? Where is the missing link between the popular will and the triumph of law?

The people of Iowa by nearly 30,000 demanded prohibition. There has never been any question as to the popular verdict; but because of an alleged informality in adopting the prohibitory clause of the constitution, it is set aside. The people mourn, but devils shout in triumph. Why was all this?

It is easy to see how polygamists defeat the will of the nation. Mormon polygamy is a system of oath-bound secrecy. Every polygamist is sworn to conceal all the ceremonies of the Endowment House. He is sworn to the system and regards his allegiance to his Mormon covenant as paramount to any obligations to United States law. No civil oath can be binding on his conscience so long as there is a couuter oath to always conceal what the court of justice may command him to tell. The power of Mormonism is in its sworn secrecy, and the missing link will be found when this power is broken. If all secret initiations, oaths and covenants were regarded as unlawful, if all lodges and other places of secret combinations were regarded as the rendezvous of conspirators, and it was made the duty of officers of the law to search them out and break them up, there could be uo Endowment House and no polygamous marriages. No actual right of the people would have been invaded. The missing link in the enforcemeut of law in Utah is the dethronement of the Power of Secrecy. It would do for Utah what the Emancipation Proclamation did for the nation.

But the same power that defeats justice in Utah stands across the path of righteous legislation in Iowa and Kansas. Every brewer, distiller and saloon-keeper is either a Mason or in sympathy with the order. Does any one know of one who is not? But all Masons are sworn to conceal the illegal traffic of a worthy (?) brother, and if he be a companion, to espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from difficulty whether he is right or wrong. This a law for legislators, officers and jurors! What wonder then that the Secret Empire should be able to defeat justice in Iowa and Kansas as well as iu Utah. In each case there is a conspiracy against righteous law, and the power of this conspiracy is in its sworn secrecy. Until this power shall be broken, it will be impossible to exeeute the popular will. Till then "Judgment is turned away baekward and justice standeth afar off."

Time would fail me to tell how often the ends of justice have been defeated: how Jeff. Davis was indicted for high treason but illegally pardoned by a Mason; how Wm. Tweed stole millions and defied the courts; how Capt. Howgate of Washington, D. C., spent $150,000 of the people's money in drunkenness and lewdness, and is never brought to justiee; how a Christian woman is brutally murdered at Davisburg, Mieh., and the murderer let out of prison and allowed to escape. There is but one reason for each case. In each instance the criminal was a Mason. Until this power is broken the missing link will never be found.

FIVE PETITIONS.

BY REV. J. K. ALWOOD.

I have not time to say a thousandth part of what I mueh desire to say in the lueid columns of your—no OUR—excellent Cynosure. The central idea of my theme in this writing is prayer, aud specific subjects of prayer. I will not detain your readers with much that would be good to say about the philosophy of prayer—the reasons why God answers prayer, the reasons why he does for men in answer to prayer what he could not do if they did not pray. The central reason is the faet that he is honored in prayer. His honor is eternally above everything else in the wide realms of existenee. Wheu the soul honors him with sineere, trustful petitions he ean without sacrifiee of honor do for that soul what he could not if he were not thus honored. Of course there ean be uo aceeptable prayer except such as is offered in the name of Jesus. Prayer in his name honors the mercy and wisdom of God as manifested in his remedial system, the great plan of salvation, the vicarious atonement. It honors him by the confession, that but for his amazing merey we must wail in eternal death.

But I am to speak of specifie petitions. The Word says, "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss." We may ask amiss by indulging wrong motives. And we may ask amiss by indefiniteness. Indefiniteness in petition amounts to no petition. What will yon give the petitioner who eomes to your door saying, 'Sir, I have heard of your great bouuty and beuevolence, and have called to see if yon will not give me some—some—some—" "Some what?" you say. "Well, some—some—of—your bonntiful benevolence. That's what I heard Mr. Jones say abont you." Jesus tells us to pray, "Thy kingdom come." If we do so with a respectable degree of intelligence, we shall be led to consider that the coming, the extensiou, the prevalence of his kingdom necessarily iuvolves the displacement and destruction of every antagonistic element. And we never can pray acceptably for the prevalence of his kingdom without such a desire for its prevalence as will prompt us to exertions for its prevalence. But how can we rationally exert ourselves for its prevalence without some kind of an idea of what is to be done—what is in the way—what hinders its prevalence? How can we rationally pray, "Thy kingdom come," without looking around to see what is in the way and seeking its removal? Jesus says, "Go work to-day iu my vineyard." How can we work without first learning what is to be done? When we find what are the hindering elements, then, and not till then can we rationally pray and labor for their removal.

Now there are five obstacles of the first magnitude in the way of Christianity's ouward march. These are infidelity, intemperance, secretism, polygamy and papacy. Against these five giaut evils should every Christian pray specifically every day. Against these should he labor constantly. The Americen pulpit is slaudering God by its advocacy of secretism. Dowu to 1834 no man in America would risk his reputation on the declaration, "Slavery is right." The sin existed under protest. God was not slandered iu its defense. In 1834 an emiuent D. D. of Virginia invented the gloss, "It is not the iustitution that is sinful, but the abuse of it. The institutiou is divine and supported by the Bible. The abuse of it is sinful." This ran like wildfire from pulpit to press and from press to pulpit, all over the South and much of the North. Now God was slandered, by being represented (misrepresented) as an eudorser of "the sum of all villainies." He would not endure the vile slauder. He thundered from heaven. Rivers of blood washed out the slander.

Another remaius. The Americau pulpit (and its supporters) says, "Secretism is divine." Will God endure the slander. I think not. I tremble for this nation. I quake and fear for my uative laud. God will rend this continent if uecessary to expunge the slander emblazoned on our escutcheon. He set his warning iu the heavens last autumn. You smile with a grimace of science. Can you prove that comets are not a specialty? Be honest and say, No. Can you prove that the same comet has ever shown its face to the dwellers on our planet the second time? Be honest and say, No. Then how are you going to prove that they are not specialties flung out by the Almighty hand of an ever merciful Father to warn the nations of impending scourges? For the present I will risk my reputation on the affirmation that comets are specialties, and our late most beautiful one, was nothing more nor less than a warning of an impending cyclone in the hand of an Almighty lover of truth, whose jealousy for his honor never ceases, and whose power of self-vindication never flags. "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing;" watching, praying definitely and laboring definitely.

TRADES-UNIONS AND SOCIALISM.

Trades-unions are mostly built on the fallacious theory that capital and labor must of necessity be at eternal war, because they draw their reward from the same fund.

Average trades-unions are founded on the mistaken principles of an outgrown school in political economy; that is, on the theory that the relations of capital and labor are a see-saw.

Trades-unions are mischievous so far as they tyrannize over employers and non-unionist workingmen.

Trades-unions are now nearly omnipresent in England and the United States in all the great branches of industry.

Many of the objects of trades-unions are identical with the objects sought by socialistic political parties.

When the members of trades-unions and the members of socialistic political parties have the same political objects, their political alliance is natural.

The notorious evil in trades-unions is the tyranny frequently exercised by their members over non-unionist workingmen. Open the regulations of some of the trades in Great Britain, and you will find them prohibiting the employment of one's own brother or son, unless he is in a trades-union.

If trades-unions wish to bring themselves into universal contempt, let them go on legislating against their fellow workingmen who are non-unionists.

There is no form of tyranny worse than unionists have sometimes exercised over non-unionist workingmen.

Strikes are the most barbaric of all the weapons that labor employs.

The truth is that trades-unions, all over the United States, are seeking political power, and are therefore likely to be frequently under temptation to form alliance with socialistic labor parties.

Once give socialists in the United States a majority of votes, and you will speedily learn the distinction between voluntary and compulsory socialism.

Under universal suffrage, with political primacy once grasped by the hands of workingmen, who are seventy or eighty out of every hundred of voters, there may come a time when socialism, instead of being voluntary, will be compulsory, and nationalization of the lands, the railroads, the canals, the telegraphs, be forced upon you by the suffrage of an ignorant population.

Compulsory socialism is the chief danger in the future of universal suffrage; and from that peril, which means nothing less than spoliation and anarchy, may God and discussion in the church and State save us!—Joseph Cook.

EVILS OF SECTS.

There are, at present, in England and Wales, not fewer than 186 different religious communities. Some of these are of comparatively recent origin, and have sprung out of the modern methods of revivalism. There are the Army of the King's Own, the Hosanna Army, the Redeemed Army, the Salvation Navy, and others, which are but imitations of the movement inaugurated by Mr. Booth, and have mostly originated through differences in the Salvation Army. But, apart from these, the number of sects in this country reaches well up the figures we have given. Some people, by an adroit use of their imagination, regard these sects as regiments of one great army, fighting under one banner and against one common foe. But never Army yet, so far as we are aware, fought under one banner and against one common foe after the fashion of most of the sects. Regiments are not habitually getting into one another's way, after the manner of religious communities in this country; nor does one regiment seek to strngthen itself by drawing off the soldiers from another; neither do the regiments devote rather more hostile attention, every now and again, to each other than to the common foe. Were armies in the field to act as do the sections into which the Christian church is divided, they would at once court defeat. We only wish that the sects would act as do the regiments of one army, for then, with diversity of uniform and position and movement, there would be the substantial and visible unity desirable, and results such as are now occurring would be avoided, —Primitive Methodist.

Troubling Israel.—Not a few of our false religionists are very much disconcerted at having the sacred name of Freemasonry too freely mentioned in churches or lecture rooms. They are like the old negro who depreciated all mention of chicken stealing, since "to 'lude to dat, would break up de pleasantness ob de meetin." In order to preserve the good opinion of a thief, never allude to the fact of catching his hand in your pocket. It is thought by some not dignified to do so, and might trouble the Masonic Israel.

THE SERMON.

SEPARATION.

PREACHED BY REV. W. T. HOGG, IN THE FREE METHODIST CHURCH AT ROCHESTER, N. Y., FEB. 4, 1883.

"Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6: 17, 18.

It is the purpose of God in the work of human redemption to purchase and "purify unto himself a peculiar people." This he has signified from the beginning. It was manifest in the call of the Jewish people and in the laws given for their government. Deut. 7; 1–6, and 14: 1, 2. This purpose of God is expressly re-affirmed in the New Testament. Peter, in writing of believers says, "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, etc.," 1. Peter 2: 9. Paul tells us that Christ "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Titus 2: 14. God wants a people for himself, a people among whom he can delight to dwell and gloriously manifest himself. But in the very nature of things such a people must be wholly disengaged from all that is ungodly and unholy. For "how can two walk together unless they are agreed?" God will not join himself to those who are in any way united to the workers of iniquity. Hence the reasoning of the apostle in connection with the utterances of the text.

The text contains an important command and a gracious promise. Let us consider,

1. THE COMMAND OF THE TEXT, OR THE DUTY ENJOINED.

1. The words of the text have the authority of a Divine command. They are a repetition of Jehovah's command to his ancient people. They were incorporated among the precepts of the New Testament for the observance of the Christian church in every age, and that by Divine authority. The text contains a "thus saith the Lord." This idea of separation did not originate in a council of some particular church and thus become embodied in its creed or discipline. It had its origin in the wisdom of God, and by him has been made obligatory upon all Christians. To all Christians, and to all who desire to be such, God speaks as in the text.

2. The meaning and application of this requirement may be readily determined from its connection with the preceding verses. (See verses 14, 15, etc.) From this it is evident that God requires of his people a complete separation from everything which he does not approve and fellowship himself. We may apply this rule—

(1.) First, to the Christian's relation to the world, the mass of unregenerate men. Here the line of demarkation must be distinctly drawn. As the Master was, so must his followers be, "separate from sinners." Any compromise here is fatal to spiritual life, and costs the forfeiture of fellowship with God. Nor need we be perplexed as to how this separation is to be effected. It is not necessary for us to go out of the world in order to be separate from sinners" any more than it was for the Saviour himself. Nor need we seclude ourselves in caves or cells, or in some island isolated from all other human beings. We may be in the world and not of the world. You may pour oil and water into one dish and shake them as thoroughly as you please, they will not mix. They differ in nature; they have no affinity for each other. So he who is "made partaker of the Divine nature" is of a spirit so unlike the world that in all his contact with sinners in the necessary pursuits of life, he remains separate from them, even as the oil and water remain unmixed in the same vessel.

To be more explicit as to the duty enjoined in the text we should say, that the Christian is morally bound to be separate from the organized associations of worldly men. In all ages worldly men have had their worldly associations for the accomplishment of mere worldly ends. Soon after the deluge the descendants of Noah combined themselves in an association for the purpose of building a tower whose top should reach to heaven. They evidently thought they could escape from future judgments and climb up to heaven on the tower they had erected. But that tower was never completed. It never answered the end for which it was designed. The judgment of God was visited upon those men while engaged in the attempt to execute their scheme, and they were confounded because they could no longer understand each other. But men have been building towers in every age since that. The numerous organizations into which men of the world band themselves for social, protective, benevolent, or religious ends are towers to which the flee for refuge and on which they hope to gain the realms of bliss. The Christian has no right to be in such associations. They are either substitutes for Christ, or they are anti-Christian in their character. Some of them, like Freemasonry, are Christ-rejecting institutions. The command contained in our text has an application here. The whole brood of secret societies is a brood of worldly spirits from which every Christian should come out and be separate. We cannot safely enter the brotherhoods of unregenerate men. Some of these fraternities are liberal enough to include Jews, pagans, Mohammedans, infidels, drunkards and whoremongers. What could a Christian say or do among such a motley throng? The only safety is in entire separation from every institution in which Jesus Christ is not acknowledged first, last, and always.

The Christian should be separate from the world in his companionships. The proverb says: "The companion of fools shall be destroyed." A fool, in the Bible sense is one who "says in his heart, There is no God." One who acts without any reference to God in the ordinary pursuits of life. The companion of such characters shall be destroyed. And why? Because "evil communications corrupt good manners." Intimate association and friendship with unregenerate companions will generally result in the loss of spiritual life on the part of a believer, and in his final overthrow. "Can a man take fire into his bosom and his clothes not be burned?" No more can a Christian be the intimate companion of a worldly or a wicked man and not suffer spiritual loss. Right here is where many young Christians are snared and overthrown by the adversary of souls. They allow themselves to enter into the society and friendship of worldly, thoughtless, trifling, and irreverent people, and by such associations their own seriousness is dissipated and their hearts become engaged with that which spoils their relish for devotion. The church socials and various other entertainments connected with the churches of the present day are generally destructive of the spirituality of the church; and it is on this very principle of bringing the unregenerate and the regenerate into intimate association or companionship with each other that they effect these sad results. All familiarity with unholy men and women is dangerous to the Christian. Moreover it is expressly prohibited in this command to "come out from among them and be separate."

The Christian should be separate from the ways and customs of unholy men. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." If we walk in the ways of sinful men we shall be likely to partake their spirit. If we conform to the customs of a wicked world we shall be taken captive thereby. Fashion has a stronger sway over many professors of religion than the Gospel of Christ has. Whoever attempts to follow the fashions of the world will find it impossible to follow Christ at the same time. The devil rules the fashions of this world and whoever will be fashionable must have the devil for a master. . . . . There ought to be a more marked separation of Christians from the world in this respect. The prohibition is a broad and comprehensive one which requires us to come out from among unholy men and be separate.

(2.) This rule of separation applies to the Christian in his relation to false and hypocritical professors of religion and to apostate churches. These are more dangerous associates than those of an avowed worldly character. The devil is never more devilish than when he assumes to be an angel of light. When he appears "as a roaring lion" his intended victim may take warning from his roar, and escape from danger. But when he comes as an angel of light, his saintly appearance captivates the unsuspecting victim, and frequently he sees the mistake when it is too late to elude the enemy's grasp.

The Christian should be separate from such as "have a form of godliness and deny the power thereof." The express command of scripture is: "From such turn away." If we fail to "turn away" from such in the spirit of true separation, they will turn us away, and cause our separation from the true Vine. And many such characters there are in these days—men an women who observe many or perhaps all of the externals of religion, but who, by conformity to the world, by their love of gain and pleasure, and by a general manner of unholy living, deny the power of religion to renew and satisfy the heart. In regard to all such characters there is but one course for the true Christian, and that is to "come out from among them and be separate."

The practical application of this rule of separation sometimes takes people outside the pale of the Church to which they belong. When a church becomes practically a Christ-rejecting camp, like Judaism of old, it is time for those who would be identified with Christ to "Go forth unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach." Heb. 13: 13. That was what Paul had to do. That is what Luther did. We recognize this as God's order for preserving to himself a seed, a holy people. The apostle speaks of some "who hold the truth in unrighteousness." Rom. 1: 18. They have the truth in theory, but they depart from it in their practice. Whole churches sometimes do this. And whenever the declension of a church becomes so general that the balence of power is on the side of injustice, oppression, worldliness, or sin of any kind, it matters not how orthodox that church may be, those who would be with Christ and not against him, should "come out from among them and be separate." I am aware that some will object to this kind of logic. But every member of any Protestant church who objects to this reasoning, ought, in order to be consistent, to join the Roman Catholic church. For it was on this very principle that Protestantism had its rise. Was it right for Luther to renounce popery? Was it right in the days of American slavery for men who would be true to God to separate themselves from a church whose general influence was given to support that "sum of all villainies?" Then is it not right to-day for men to come out and separate themselves from religious organizations who excommunicate men for no other crime than rebuking sin and preaching holiness? If a church "has a name to live but is dead", as was the church at Sardis, (See Rev. 3d chap.) is it a sin for those "who have not defiled their garments" to separate themselves from the dead body? Does not their spiritual health and growth require such separation? "Wherefore, come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord."

(3.) To what extent, it may be asked, should this requirement of separation be practically observed? We have not time nor space for all that might be said on this point, but will venture a brief reply. (1) There must be a complete separation in spirit from everything that savors of a worldly character. The heart must be totally disengaged from the world, for "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." True faith always effects this separation of the heart from its natural affinity for worldly objects. (2.) there must be a separation from all sinful and from all doubtful practices —an utter abstinence from whatever is not clearly for the Divine glory, however favorably others may look upon it. (3) All intimate and voluntary association with unholy people must be abandoned if we would be separated unto God as his "peculiar people." (4) This separation also involves the withdrawal of fellowship and the renouncing of fellowship in reference to those religious organizations which, as a whole, or so far as the balance of power is concerned, are committed to the upholding of evil or to the opposition of Scriptural holiness. To give our fellowship to a person or an institution that opposes the right and defends the wrong is to be "partaker of other men's sins." Hence the necessity of a separation from all who countenance iniquity.

2. We pass to consider secondly, THE GRACIOUS PROMISE made to all who obey the command of the text. "And I will be a Father unto you," etc.

1. God promises to be a Father unto all those who thus separate themselves unto him. He will exercise all the care of an infinite Parent toward them. He will love them more tenderly than the fondest earthly father or mother.

"Every human tie may perish;
Friend to friend unfaithful prove;
Mothers cease their own to cherish;
Heaven and earth at last remove;
But no changes
Can attend Jehovah's love."

"Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him."—Psalm 103: 13. It may cost much to separate one's self from the world, but the remuneration is infinitely more than the loss. With such a Father the soul need fear no want. He "will give grace and glory; and no good thing will he withhold from them who walk uprightly." To all who are truly separated unto God he will be a Father to guide, protect, support, instruct and comfort them, until they reach the home he has prepared for them in heaven.

2. "And they shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Blessed, endearing relation! Children of the Lord Almighty! What dignity is this! An honor infinitely exceeding all the honors of the world! "And if children then heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ." They may be poor in this world, they may be despised and persecuted, they may be accounted fools and fanatics, but "God is not ashamed to be called their God;" and to call them his "sons and daughters;" and Jesus Christ is "not ashamed to call them brethren." They are children of God—heirs of all things in earth and heaven. Blessed be God!

"I'd rather be the least of them,
Who are the Lord's alone,
Than wear a royal diadem,
And sit upon a throne."

It was for this that Moses renouuced his heirship to the throne of Egypt, "choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproaches of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward." It was for this that Paul renounced all those things that were for his worldly advantage, and cheerfully "counted all things loss." It was for this that the noble army of martyrs suffered, not counting their lives dear unto themselves, so that they might gain an inheritance among the children of God. For this, my brethren, we can afford to make any sacrifice, bear any reproach, endure any suffering, to which a holy life may subject us, assured that

"Heaven's eternal bliss will pay,
For all His children suffer here."

In couclusion: 1. The matter of separation from the world is not of small importance. Our sonship with God is conditional upon it. We are made "the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus," but a faith that does not produce this separation is a spurious or bad faith. We cannot walk with God and the world at the same time. We cannot serve God and mammon. We canuot have fellowship with God while "yoked with unbelievers." We cannot have a title to the heavenly inheritance until we renounce the present evil world. Eternal interests depend upon our separation from the world, therefore, let us renounce it with a steadfast mind.

2. We must not take the multitude, even of professing people, for our guide. The Bible marks out the way to heaven: "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life; and few there be that find it." We must act as individuals, and act always according to the Word of God, though every one else should pursue a different course.

3. Let us walk as children of God, remembering that "the fashion of this world passeth away," and fashioning ourselves after that world which is to be our everlasting home. May all who hear me to-day resolve to forsake all and follow Christ, seeking through him an inheritance in glory. Amen.

A FRIGHTFUL SET OF COUNTENANCES.—Let any one examine the faces of the Phenix Park murderers, as portrayed in our illustrated magazines, and he must be persuaded that such men could easily be led to commit murder. The lodge, with its murderous arts, could play on the passions of such men as easily as the skilled musician plays on the piano. Shakespeare has illustrated this fact by drawing forth from the dregs of society the men who were especially suited to aid Macbeth in ridding himself of honest competitors. Where the lodge has the will to murder, there will always be a way. Where Phenix Park assassinations are plotted, the lodge can always furnish the tools for the purpose.

LETTER FROM SMYRNA, TURKEY.

BRO. ZARAPHONITHES ON HIS NEW WORK AND THE IMPORTANCE OF NATIAE MISSIONS.

SMYRNA REST, SMYRNA, Turkey, Feb. 22, 1883.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG—Smyrna is one of the earliest missionary stations. For a long period there have been missionaries for the Greeks, the Turks, the Armenians and the Jews. These four nationalities represent the principal languages spoken in Smyrna. There are several other languages spoken, but these are the chief ones. These different societies have been at work here for many years; but little or nothing has been accomplished comparatively.

The reasons for the work making no progress are these: These different Boards have evils in them which the early apostolic church never thought of. The apostles used to go to a place and convert a few, make elders and preachers and then leave them and go to another place; and the natives had to go on and do the work for themselves. If one church was poor, another wealthier church would help it.

But the mission Boards take another course: They send a missionary to a place for life and give him the helm, and no matter whether the ship will be stranded or thrown upon the rocks, he takes no counsel from any one. They do not search out men from among the uatives and send them to good European schools to be educated and then send them out as preachers with a comfortable salary; but the young men are given a very artificial education in the schools here and then sent out to preach upon a very insufficient salary. When he comes to face the world and infidelity, he, like Peter, sees the waves too high and cries, "Lord, save me."

I don't say that all the Christians must be philosophers, but I do say that every preacher ought to have a good education, especially in these Eastern countries; for you have the Mohammedan, the Greek, the Jew and the Armenian, descendants of the Ancients, and they put to you questions sometimes which it is the hardest thing to answer. And so a minister in this part of the world must have a good education and much experience of the world.

Speaking once, before I went to America, with a German missionary for the Greeks, he gave reasons for not sending natives to be educated. "Because," he says, "they will come back proud and want too much salary." This missionary was forty years in this city preaching with his son. Now the father is dead and the son has gone to Jerusalem and no traces of their work are left, as though no one had been here in all that time. Give the natives the same privileges and helps as the foreigners, and then the work will be glorious.

And to prove this, I must bring a specimen. Mr. Geo. Constantine, a native Greek, was working in Athens for eighteen years. There were two native Greeks in Athens besides him for so many years. They liked to be in a big city, the capitol, and they thought that they could work nowhere else but there. But infidelity and the Greek church did not give them a chance to do much in that city, and Mr. C. discovered his mistake after he came to Smyrna. I mean by this, that he ought to have gone somewhere else, long ago. Now he has been here about two years and it is a strange thing to see the movement which is among the Greeks to hear the Gospel. He preaches in two places on the Sabbath. In the morniug he preaches in the new church of the American Board, and in the afternoon in a large room on the seashore. Next to this room is a reading-room and coffee house kept by some English ladies for all the nationalities; but it was especially made for the English. This room is most always crowded, mostly with Greeks. There we get into some fiery discussions very often. The other room during preaching is crowded to the utmost. This is a proof that what a foreigner could not do in twenty or thirty years, was done by a native in a short time.

It seems that all the nations are hungry to hear the Gospel; but they like to hear it from a native and not from a foreigner. They do not understand the foreigners. There seems to be some secret thing which a foreigner cannot touch to reach the heart. It seems really that in this city there is a very great work; but the laborers are few.

For two or three months here in Smyrna, I ran around down at the market and in different places of the city to talk with the people in regard to the water of life. It is a glorious aud a joyful work; and also I am indebted to this city because it was here that I was converted. And this makes me feel that I am indebted to do all I can for this city. As I said, it is one of the best ports of Turkey; but one of the most degraded in language and in fashion. As though it is the synagogue of Satan. See Rev. 2: 9.

In regard to our school, we began more than a month and a half ago. We began with two pupils, now we have seventeen. You must know that there is a great prejudice against us, being Protestants. This house was an English school and they have given it the name of "Far Mason" school. These reasons keep back many countrymen of mine from sending their children here. It will take some time to get a full school. If it was otherwise, we might have now a 100 or a 150, for we are in a district which is not near any other schools. And we believe in time, when the people shall understand us better, that we shall have great success, that is, a great opportunity to do good. Some of them see now that their children get a better education, and get better children in our schools; for this reason they send them. In regard to their paying us, we make it so small for the poor, that it is almost nothing. And we have to charge very little or nothing. For all the nationalities here have their free schools, supported by the treasury of the church. If you ask from them a little money, they say, well, I will send to our own school, for we do not pay anything there. We might get in the future some of the children of the rich and get something from them, though that time is yet to come. When I think, I pity the work, to leave it after having begun it. Not only a school would be a success, but there is so much missionary work to be doue in this city. For it seems that the Lord has prepared me for this place, by giving me to know the Turkish, Greek, Albanian and English languages, so I can be useful to all these nations.

Now is the time that I need your prayers and your sympathy. I do not ask from any one anything, but only I say this, that this work to go on needs money, I believe that the Lord will provide; but as human beings, we are sometimes uneasy, and we see difficulties. I could get along in Andros in any condition, because I had my house and my little property, and with what the Lord sent us, we lived quite comfortably. But here I have to pay rent for a house, a school, servants and everything for my living; and for this reason I put a voice in the Cynosure which I never did before. I saw that in Andros the work is not ripe yet, and I thought it wrong for me to tarry until the people be ready. But I will hold both there and here for the present. In the summer school vacation I will always go there for the sake of doing something. I have decided to come here again next August. And if means enough do not come to support myself and my school, I have to give it up and go to Andros.

With Christian love,

A. D. ZARAPHONITHES.

—Rev. J. M. Whipple, a constant reader of the reform papers, in his retirement and suffering maintains a lively interest in our work. A letter just received from him is deserving of publication.

—A letter from J. S. Perham expresses gratitude for the article recently published eutitled "A Question for Women" and offers to contribute towards the expenses of a four-page tract "addressed to the wives, sisters and mothers of Freemasons, showing the un Christ-likeness of the institution."

—The same brother sends a contribution from a neigh bor, concerning which he says: "This is the first ripe fruit I have gathered. I scatter my papers broadcast and loan my books." Such work will not be lost.

"AFTER MANY DAYS."

WORCESTER, Mass., Mar. 17, 1883.

One year ago and more, when the American Missionary Association was in session in this city, we distributed a large number of reform tracts. Last week a gentleman, who then received a tract, came to the city on business and then commenced to search for the place where those tracts came from. He had no name or address to guide him, but could only inquire for "Anti-masonic tracts." At last he got a clue to the place and presented himself at our office. In his town the lodge is reviving and is likely to draw in some of their best young men. He is anxious to "head them off."

Here is surely a good illustration of sowing beside all waters, with the promised return after many days. This gentleman is likely to be an important recruit to our cause. We cannot be too patient or too diligent in our routine work. It is not the most demonstrative work which produces the greatest results. For one I rejoice at the evidence of honest, patient work being done everywhere. Some cannot work without a noise but others are willing to sow the seed, patiently tend, wait for the early and latter rain, and then joyfully reap the harvest.

Monday I am expecting to leave here for Connecticut. Several friends are hoping also to go, in anticipation of a profitable season. Knowing that many will await the news of the convention eagerly I hope to get a partial account into the paper with this.

THE CONNECTICUT CONVENTION.

IN MELODEON HALL, HARTFORD.

Hartford, Conn, Mar. 20, 1883.

On my arrival here Monday afternoon I found brethren Spaulding and O. C. Bailey already here, doing what they could to advertise the convention and awaken an interest in its objects. The city is thoroughly placarded with handbills, which, of themselves, are a testimony against the lodge.

While distributing the programmes of the convention we met with no opposition except at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A., where we were insulted and ordered to remove the documents. The plea was that they did not allow anybody to leave advertisements there. But the real trouble appeared when the janitor said, "Why should we advertise an anti-secret association meeting when some of the best citizens of Hartford belong the them?"

The convention was called to order at about 2:30 P. M. There were then present about thirty persons, nearly all of whom were from out of the city and all of whom appeared to be personally interested in the success of the convention. The devotional meeting was led by Rev. A. M. Ahgren of Hartford, already introduced to reformers as the faithful pastor of the Swedish Independent church at Plainville, maintaining a clear testimony against secret societies.

The president, Mr. J. A. Conant, then called the convention to order for business and committees were appointed on nominations, finance and enrollment. Reports were then called for of the present aspect of the reform in various localities of the State. Bro. A. F. Spaulding gave a brief report of the work done by him; and brethren Gilbert, Perry, Fenton, McKnight, Barlow, Bailey, McCracken, Bacon and others made statements of their work and the results of their observation.

In the evening a straggling audience gathered to hear the addresses. There was ample room for more people, but they did not choose to avail themselves of the opportunity and we proceeded happily with our exercises. Bro. D. J. Ellsworth led the devotional meeting, which was given wholly to prayer and Christian testimony.

Rev. C. L. McCracken gave the opening address on the theme, "Why I oppose Masonry." When the Masons of Thompsonville recently dedicated their new hall the Worshipful Master asked the speaker this question and he considered it an appropriate theme for a public address. The speech was well prepared and well delivered. The points were so well stated and so clearly illustrated that it was the opinion of many that the address ought to be published and being in a condensed form it seems altogether possible that it may be if the speaker consents.

Elder J. L. Barlow followed with some very cogent reasons for opposing Masonry. The people in attendance seemed pleased with the evening's work. We are to open at 8 o'clock to-morrow with a devotional meeting led by O. C. Bailey. Bro. C. T. Collins dropped in for a few minutes in the afternoon but his only son, sick with consumption, is thought to be rapidly nearing his end and he returned to his home. Frequent allusions in prayer to this brother's affliction were a testimony of the convention of their sympathy.

—Here is a word for Vermonters: "I am still praying that God will raise up among us or send us a good, clear, strong, sound man, of energy, ability and judgment, to labor in this State." Let others pray for the same blessing and it will surely come.

—Bro. T. K. Bufkin, the earnest Quaker reformer of Lynnville, Iowa, is spending the season in Los Angeles, Southern California, hoping to regain impaired health.

THE MICHIGAN STATE CONVENTION.

Allegan, March 20, 1883.

The next meeting of the Michigan State Association has been called to meet in Grand Rapids, on the 17th, 18th, and 19 of April next. Luce's Hall has been engaged for the occasion, and every effort will be made by the friends in the city to make the meeting a success, and also to furnish entertainment for those who may come. We expect Bro. Starry, of Iowa, to be present to give the inside view of lodge work by the light of three tallow candles, while Bro. Stoddard and others will turn the electric lights of God's truth upon these systems of error, thus bringing to light the hidden things of darkness.

But there is one thing we must remember, and that is this: These brethren may do their part right grandly, but if we fail to do ours, in the way of attendance and support, the meeting will not be a success. Let us then rally from all parts of the State to this annual gathering. Grand Rapids is a railroad center, easy of access from every quarter, and we can, if we will, make this a meeting of the most intense interest. We believe there are five hundred men and women in Michigan whom God will hold responsible for any failure in this meeting if they are not present. Are you one of them?

As has been requested, let all the subscribers to Alliance stock come if possible, that we may counsel together. Bro. Foote made our heart throb with hope with his subscription for thirty-five shares of stock, why not others do likewise, and prove their faith by their works.

Remember the date, the 17th, 18th and 19th of April, and the place, Luce's Hall, Grand Rapids.

W. H. Ross,
Cor. Sec'y.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Coldwater, Mich., Mar. 19th, 1883.

Rev. H. A. Day, pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist church in this city, received me kindly at his home. I was much refreshed by Christian conference with this devout douschold, and shall ever associate pleasant memories with my first visit to this beautiful city. Bro. Day has been laboring assiduously and successfully in revival efforts and is much worn in body but strong in the Lord. Physicians tell him he must either change climate or give his lungs a rest, if he would continue his usefulness. He is loth to do either, as the mutual attachment between him and his people is very strong. I filled three appointments for him yesterday, thus giving him a day of rest from pulpit labors. Bro. Day is deeply interested in the Michigan American, and its present circulation of over 600 is largely due to his personal efforts. The matter of its continuance will probably come up for consideration at the State meeting in April and there be settled by the united wisdom of the friends assembled. If continued it should be backed by the Association and more liberally supported and correspondingly improved. Bro. Day believes that more has been done to enlighten the people through this medium than any other agency during the same time and involving an equal expense. It goes to many families where the Cynosure, or in fact any other paper from outside the State could not be introduced and he is decidedly of the opinion that its usefulness has only just begun.

BRO. HINMAN'S LETTERS.

THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF THIEVES, DETECTIVES, AND RECEIVERS OF STOLEN PROPERTY.

Washington, March 16.

This noted 1883 order, like its mother the A. F. and A. M. of this district, was instituted and set on foot by our National Congress. Its officers held commissions from the government. They were the appointed guardians of the people.

It is doubtless true that all that has grown out of this secret order was not at first contemplated. Like the A. F. and A. M., the K. K. K. and the Mollie Maguires, it developed. The taking in of the thieves and receivers may have been an after-thought; but it is obvious that an association, here at the heart of the nation, and under the forms of law, could carry on systematic robbery for years, and yet its members appear every day on the streets, mingle with respectable society, and when its exactions could no longer be borne, sham innocence and plead persecution, illustrates certain things we do well to consider:

1. The methods resorted to by a detective police, their intimate association in the haunts of vice, with the vilest of men, the partaking with these men in their accustomed drinks and gaming, and above all, the dissimulation they must constantly practice, is well calculated to break down the moral integrity of the average citizen, and it is not strange that they should be led into crime.

2. That all secret combinations are liable and likely to be abused. The fact that they are not open to public inspection, or responsible to public opinion, makes it highly probable that they will be used for improper ends. Irresponsible power is sure to be perverted, and there is no power so perfectly irresponsible as the power of secrecy.

3. So long as the chief officers of this nation are largely members of oath-bound secret combinations, which deny all responsibility to any tribunal but themselves, and so long as the members of such orders are sworn to conceal each other's secrets, even though they involve crime, it will be found impossible to suppress secret combinations for criminal purposes. If moderate drinking ought to be given up, not only because it is needless and dangerous, but especially to save men from drunkenness and crime, and their households from misery, so surely ought the other secret orders to be put away before we can expect to abolish those that are distinctly criminal.

4. It is a most encouraging fact that the 47th Congress abolished the detective police in this city, and that as a result there has been a diminution of crime. It is greatly to be desired that the next Congress will break up all the other secret rings, and especially that they will repeal the charter of the Masonic Association of this city, and cease to countenance an order that is the fruitful mother of all the noisesome brood that infests every corner of our land.

H. H. Hinman.

FROM MICHIGAN.

IN CAPTIVITY.

Pontiac, Mich.

A Methodist shop-keeper in this city, to whom I had often spoken about the dreadful influence of Masonry in the church, told me lately that he took three degrees in the Pontiac lodge about ten years ago. He was so alarmed and disgusted with what he saw and heard in the lodge that he decided to stay away entirely from the meetings. I went to his house and he showed me Duncan's Ritual, which contains seven degrees. He says the first three degrees are substantially as he took them. He pays his dues out of fear. O dreadful! This is infernal bondage—worse than American slavery! The man is, like many others, in a dreadful condition. May the Lord set him free. I showed him Doesburg's exposition and he said it was all correct, so far as he could see.

HATING THE LIGHT.

A few nights ago a lady delivered a very able temperance lecture in this city. She thought that legislation would have to be relied upon as the means of putting down the liquor traffic. But there was some hidden difficulty in the way. She said also, she hoped the time would come when the communion table would not be a snare to unformed drunkards. At the close of the address I asked her if she would exclude from the communion, fermented wines orly, or all wines. She answered that she would substitute water for wine. After stating her views briefly, she requested me to talk a little while on temperance—hoping a little excitement would improve the meeting. I consented, and in order to show what the "hidden difficulty" referred to was. I said that the leading whiskey men and and many of the leading temperance men were members of secret societies, and the temperance Masons were sworn to give due and timely notice to the whiskey Maton, thot he might ward off approaching danger. In putting down about thirty whisky shops in Michigan, I had frequently known this to be practiced.

The lecturer rose to her feet—the president of the meeting and another person ran up to her and whispered something into her ear, and there was a general buz. When I sat down the lady said that what I had said was all news to her, but her husband was a Mason, and she did not believe that he would favor rum-sellers! I made a short reply and they all went out in a manner that convinced me that I was a speckled bird and that the masses were ruined.

A. H. Springstein.

The story is told of Daniel Webster that when at church, if the sermon proved unsatisfactory, he used sometimes to make a mental sermon on the text, and on one occasion during a dull sermon in Marshfield, he left his pew, walked down the isle in deep thought, and suddenly returned to his seat and gave his attention to the preacher. It was supposed that he had mentally ended his own sermon, and therefore mechanically got up to leave.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HIGHER EDUCATION FOR WOMEN.

"A new knock at an old door" is the significant heading of an article in the March Century on the petition to Columbia College for the admission of women to its privileges. Julia Gilbert Kunkle assigns many cogent reasons for this movement and gives the results of a fair trial in the English universities. A few extracts may not be out of place in so progressive a journal as the Cynosure. Referring to the old time status of women and the advantages of education "denied her, not by any mean desire of man to defraud her, not by any divine limitation of her needs," but the conditions of society, she comes to the present:

"The traditions of the time of man's legitimate supremacy, of course, lived on and still survive in the general if vague notion that something external.....must continually be done for women; whereas the modern spirit .....maintains that little of permanent value can be done for woman which is not done by woman, growth is from within." If man has not been willing to endow her with the whole fair domain "of knowledge neither has she been ready to accept it." "But no machinery does half their work at half the cost.....and the great increase of wealth,... ..fosters a growing class of unemployed and luxurious women, free to use the means of the higher education which their higher needs demand. .....It would seem self-evident that those studies which have taken their place in the higher education of man, because philosophy and experience found in them the surest and readiest means of symmetrical mental development, must be equally valuable to woman.....If it be true the higher the civilization the more nearly is a companionship of the sexes reached, it seems a paradox that they should be united everywhere except in study, the most refining and least self-conscious of employments."

The reports from the English universities are most encouraging, showing the mental and physical ability of women in competition with men and "the moral safety of the new system.....The spirit of justice would rest woman's claim to the highest educational privileges on the human right to unrestricted growth, for soul is above sex. But here, as everywhere, the way of justice is the way of expedience. Enlightenment is not in proportion to the amount of knowledge on deposit, at any one time; it is in proportion to its diffusion. Because of the devotion of the average American to business, the mother and the school-mistress mold the early and sensitive years of the child's life to what shape they must. To the fitness of the average mother and school-mistress for this high task, what wasted powers, what mean ideals, what mistaken views of life bear witness! Raise her schools and the whole standard of woman's existence is raised. For the higher the few can reach, the higher the many rise."

MY FATHER AND I.

When a small boy, influenced by the example of those above me, and wishing to be manly, I began to chew tobacco; for we are more apt to imitate vices than virtues. It was haying time, and my father and I stopped at a spring to drink. He then saw evidently what he had before suspected, that I used tobacco. "My son," said he, with a sorrowful air, "do you chew tobacco?"

I hung my head in shame, as with my lips I half confessed the fact.

"Well, you must give it up," he continued; "I am going to do it."

He did give up the habit, as he said he would; and I believe that the sudden change occasioned him a fit of sickness.

This is a very simple incident, but it will illustrate the remarks which we are going to make about the Emperor William of Prussia. He has ordered his son and heir, it is said, to be present at the coronation of the Emperor of Russia, at a time when his life will be especially endangered by the secret association of Nihilists, who threaten to destroy the present Russian Emperor as they did the last one.

This is a very brave and heroic act on the part of Emperor William, thus to expose the life of his son and the heir of his throne in opposition to an infernal evil that threatens not only the life of kings and the stability of governments, but Christian civilization itself. It is a very consistent act in the long career of this Emperor William, who, we believe, helped to withstand the tide of French infidelity and Jacobinism at Waterloo.

Be this as it may, while we recognize the heroism of the Emperor, we understand that he is a Freemason, and seeks to keep secret societies in check by becoming a head member of them himself.

Now, why would it not be better while thus endangering the life of his son in defense of his son's inheritance against the threats of secret associations, to go one step farther, and do an act at the same time in defense of the kingdom of Christ against Freemasonry by renouncing his membership with the lodge? If the Emperor had joined these two acts together he would have identified the defense of his empire with that of Christian civilization, and would have accomplished more for securing his own personal and family interests than he will by merely braving secret societies without setting the example of renouncing them.

Nihilism is but one of the phases of French Jacobinism of the last century; and both of them are the developments of Freemasonry. There is but one effectual way to oppose them, and that is to renounce them. So long as the Emperor William holds on to Freemasonry, he is contending for Masonic civilization and not for Christian civilization. The chief political forces of Masonic civilization are the same as those which were resorted to by the pagan Brutus and Cassius, viz., conspiracy, intimidation and murder. Christian civilization cannot be maintained by such political forces as these. Masonic civilization renders necessary that same kind of government which its engines of destruction are aimed to destroy.

IDAHO.

Silver City, Idaho Ter.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—The lodge is very strong here, and its members are more bold and open in their evil works than they dare be in the older parts of our country. I find that ignorance among the non-Masons lends to Masonry its greatest support, and I have used my opportunity to enlighten the uninformed and often deceived. There are very few true Christians in this Territory, while the lodge has its supporters among the whisky-drinking, gambling, and infidel portion, who are strong everywhere; and their power to distract the business or defame the character of those who oppose them is very great.

I spent a great part of the past winter in Washington county. Knowing that there was a little band of earnest workers in that section of country, I thought it my duty to give my time and strength that they might not fall into the hands of the Masons, as every previous Christian organization in the Territory has done. To this end I distributed tracts and Cynosures, and preached and lectured at every favorable opportunity. I secured the pledges of persons for the sum $592 toward the building of a house of worship; and, as I bid those faithful people adieu, I felt that my labors had not been in vain, and that in them Christ's name would ever have defenders. To God be all the praise!

My heart aches as I think of the situation of many of the poor emigrants I met, having been unsuccessful at their former homes in the affairs of life, from causes the origin of which they had but the faintest conception, they gathered up their all, and, after a journey attended with hardships and privations, have cast their lot on the frontier, only to see the same grim monster still on their track, and to realize that, as they sleep, the Masons, in their darkened chamber, are planning to still reap the reward of their hard labor. Is there a wonder that, as the poor emigrant lies down to rest after his day's toil, realizing, as did our Puritan fathers, the power of the institution against which he has to contend, he should say involuntarily, We have suffered for freedom's sake and we can die for Christ's sake. Our fathers fled from persecution and founded the institutions which we should enjoy. But now the Masons throughout the world are uniting to bring America and Americans into disgrace.

As my mind wanders back over the past to the time when our fathers, driven by tyranny from their native countries, crossed the Atlantic to seek freedom in America, I see them, in my imagination, the English Puritan in New England; the Hollander in New York; the Swede, the Norwegian, and the Dane in New Jersey, Delaware and Pennsylvania; the English Catholic in Maryland; the German and Scotch-Irish in Pennsylvania and in the valley of Virginia (the English planters and artisans in Virginia also); the French Hugennot in the Carolinas and in Georgia, all united as one man to defend themselves against a common foe—the enemies of Christ and his religion. To this end they ordained and established our form of government, of which free speech and a free press are vital functions, but, shame to America's fair name, the seed of secrecy long ago planted, has grown to giant proportions, and now, in open contempt of our national principles, the lodge attempts to curtail the language of our editors, orators, and freemen everywhere. Were they successful how long would we remain heirs of the country our fathers gave us? How long would America be "the land of the free and the home of the brave?" Not long; our boasted freedom would soon be a thing of the past, and our homes in the hands of the spoiler. We would soon drift into despotism, and the American-hearted brave would be driven from these shores.

Americans, the time has come when you should take your stand. The line of demarcation should be distinctly drawn between the Christian and the anti-Christian, the Mason and the Anti-mason, the American and the anti-American, take your choice for the issue is at hand. Free speech we still enjoy, then use it. A free press we still have, support it. And when the great Presidential election comes, remember that you have a free vote. Our country needs your help.

J. S. Trask.

HE KNEW THE MASONS OF '26.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I find the following in the Rescue, a Good Templar paper published at San Francisco, Cal.: "Mr. Enoch T. Carson, a prominent Knight Templar of Ohio, is reported as saying that Thurlow Weed has always lived and died a liar, and his testimony as to the Morgan mystery was altogether false. That is not an ordinary estimate of Mr. Weed, but he was a crafty politician and an Anti-mason to the verge of insanity, and an intensity of hate carried about and nursed and fed and slept with for years, has made many a man a ready believer and endorser of falsehoods and slanders that bear their own evidences of falsehood to every impartial mind."

I happen to know something about this Morgan mystery, which has ceased to be a mystery, for I was living at Rochester at the time of the Morgan excitement. I recollect reading the paragraph that Mr. Weed speaks of that offended the Masons, and in the next paper there was an apology. I knew the Rev. Mr. Cummings. He was an Episcopalian minister, and, I think, beloved by his people until the Morgan excitement, which became too hot for him and he went to parts unknown to me. He was an Englishman, and probably he went to England to get out of trouble. He was chaplain in the lodge at Rochester. Burrage Smith was Master of the lodge at the time. General Gould I knew. He kept a shoe shop in Rochester. There is not much reason to doubt the identity of the body of Morgan at the mouth of Oak Orchard Creek; but whether or no, there is positive proof that the Freemasons caused Morgan to be imprisoned in Canandaigua jail, and that he was forcibly taken from thence and drowned in the Niagara River. I heard a Mason say in Massachusetts that he believed they had killed Morgan. I boarded awhile with a high Mason at Chippeway, in Upper Canada, near the Falls, and I heard him say that he believed Morgan was killed. I did believe at first that Morgan wrote the book for speculation, but I think now it was pure patriotism, and he is deserving the monument that has been erected to his memory at Batavia. There can be no doubt but that Thurlow Weed was an honest politician, and it is no credit to any man to try to slur his character. It appears that the Weed letter has waked up the devil, and the Morgan monument, probably, will be the means of keeping him awake. The present Anti-masonic excitement, no doubt, has come to stay. The people will not always submit to be governed by a powerful secret organization.

Not long ago I heard a Freemason say that Morgan ought to have been killed; he was glad he was killed; there are others that ought to be killed. Then, consequently, he believes that assassination is all right if committed by Freemasons.

An aged sister, Mrs. Ann Paley, Lanark, Ill., who, with her husband, awaits the call of her Lord, and meanwhile fills up the time with generous activity for the extension of his kingdom, speaks first to-day;

"In response to the invitation of our aged brother minister for the Cynosure family to come together, and impelled by the Holy Spirit, I give in my testimony in favor of a pure gospel, which is the power of God to everyone that believeth. I owe an eternal debt of gratitude to God for my own personal salvation, and also for his continued loving kindness toward my family amid severe afflictions, meanwhile we have felt that round about and underneath us are the everlasting arms. We are also cheered by the weekly visits of the Cynosure, which is full of lessons of encouragement from pens of able contributors. The different articles inspire us with new courage to gird on the armor afresh, and gives additional strength to go on in the name of the Lord, warring against all sin. I rejoice exceedingly in all the aggressive movements against organized secrecy, east and west, north and south, believing it to be directly opposed to the best interests of the church and nation. I feel like sitting at the feet of the noble band of men and women toiling so faithfully for the Master in this unpopular cause. They are alike worthy of all praise, and will, verily, have their reward. I say to each one, God bless and keep you. And also allow me to say to all the Cynosure readers, Come and let us enter into a new and blessed covenant to be the Lord's forever, and then with one accord do the best we can, little or much, to help on the cause we have espoused. Above all, let us pray, always pray and never faint; pray without ceasing; pray, and as sure as Dagon, the Philistine god, fell before the ark and was broken to pieces, so sure will the Omnipotent Power smite and utterly demolish the image set up in preference to Christ, yea, and every other wicked abomination which obstructs the advancing kingdom of our Lord Jesus shall be overthrown, for it is written: "At his name every knee shall bow and every tongue confess."

From Partridge, Alabama, our faithful friend Jesse Ward sends a good contribution for the Washington fund and subscribers, saying that he is willing to do what he can to accomplish the good result desired in the Nation's capitol. Of some occurrences in the South of late he says:

"That was a grand steal of M. T. Polk, treasurer of Tennessee, and then the legislature of the State legalizing the same by giving half that he did steal, and suffered him to dictate the terms that he would agree to pay back the balance that the legislature had not given him. His terms that he proposed were that he would give his note with approved securities for balance due in two years, bearing three per cent interest, provided that all criminal proceedings should be withdrawn and withheld. This is surely winking at crime in high places. The treasurer of my own State embezzled to the amount of two hundred and twelve thousand dollars, as reported by committee of the legislature in Montgomery. The amount stolen, or probably stolen, by the same in Wall Street, New York, has never been reported. The authorities have never been able to find his hiding-place. Doubtless both of these defaulting treasurers are Masons. Don't you imagine that Alabama's treasurer is like Frank James, feeling safe from pursuit and siezure in the parlors of his friends?

The public conscience of Sabetha, Kans., feels the force of the truth set in order before the people during the past few months. E. Avery says of the situation there:

"Thank God the power of the lodge is broken here. The poor Hiramites mourn,—too much Blanchard; too much Feemster. Last, and worst of all, is Dissette, "the perjured villian." The people will listen to him, and say Come back and give us more. We begin to see men as trees walking."

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON II., April 8, 1883.—Philip and the Ethiopian.—Acts 8: 26–40.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And he went on his way rejoicing.—Acts 8: 39.

TIME.—A.D. 37. Early summer. Immediately following the last lesson.

PLACE.—Judea, in the uncultivated region south-west of Jerusalem, toward Gaza, which is near the coast of the Mediterraucau Sea.

NOTES.

"Gaza" (strong). The chief of the five cities of the Philistines, 50 miles south-west of Jerusalem, 3 miles from the Mediterrancan, and 10 miles from Askalon. Gaza is one of the oldest cities in the world; was peopled by the descendants of Ham; the scene of Samson's exploits. In later years it was of great importance as a frontier fortress, and the key to Egypt on the south and to Syria on the north. After many sieges and vicissitudes of fortune, we hear of it frequently during the Crusades. It has now 16,000 population, mostly Moslems. The town is now without walls or gates, but is in the midst of olive orchards.—Schaff's Bible Dict. In the time of Claudius Cæsar, Mela calls it "a vast city, and strongly fortified." The city was given by Augustus to Herod, and finally, after his death, attached to Syria. —Alford.

"Which is desert." It is the way, not the city, which is thus described, and the description is added by the angel to distinguish which road Philip should take. This desert way gave opportunity for the eunuch to read the Scripture, and to Philip to baptize him without attracting observation. Such a retired place is always the most appropriate for private personal religious conversation. So Christ talked with Nicodemus alone at night, and with the woman of Samaria alone at the well. —Abbott.

"A man of Ethiopia." In its largest sense the term Ethiopia was applied to all the African lands south of Egypt; more definitely, it included the modern Nubia, Senaar, Kordofan, and part of Abyssinia. its inhabitants were black in color and large in stature. Their land appears to have been one of wealth, and to have maintained some commercial relations with Palestine. The Hebrew equivalent for Ethiopia is Cush, and by this name it is designated in Genesis.—Abbott. This man was not, as some have suggested, a Jew who lived in Ethiopia, but most probably was a heathen convert to Judaism, and now was returning home from a pilgrimage to the chief shrine of his adopted religion. We know that at this time there were many Jews in Ethiopia. —Schaff.

"Sitting in his chariot read Esaias (Isaiah) the Prophet." After the manner of most Eastern nations, to whom silent reading is almost unknown, the eunuch was reading aloud. Philip heard him, and so gained an opening for conversation. Was the roll of Isaiah a new-found treasure? Had he bought the Ms. in Jerusalem, and was he reading the wonderful utterances for the first time?—Plumptre.

"Philip ran thither." Observe the alacrity of his obedience to the divine monitor.—Abbott. A thousand difficulties might have been started in the mind of Philip if he had reflected a little. The eunuch was a stranger; he had the appearance of a man of rank; he was engaged in reading; he might be indisposed to be interrupted, or to converse, etc. But Philip obeyed without any hesitation the monitions of the Spirit, and ran to him. It is well to follow the first suggestions of the Spirit; to yield to the clear indications of duty, and to perform it at once. We may learn from this case: (1) to do our duty at once without hesitation or debate; (2) we shall often be disappointed in regard to subjects of this kind. We shall find candid, humble, Christian conversation far more acceptable to strangers, to the rich, and to the great, than we commonly suppose. If, as in this case, they are alone; if we approach them kindly; if we do not rudely and harshly address them, we shall find most men willing to talk on the subject of religion. I have conversed with some hundreds of persons on the subject of religion, and do not now recollect but two instances in which I was rudely treated, and in which it was not easy to gain a respectful and kind attention to Christian conversation.—Barnes.

"How can I, except some man should guide me?" Observe the evidence of the eunuch's earnestness: he comes from Ethiopia to Jerusalem to worship,—a long journey; his court duties do not detain him; returning, he studies the Word of God on his journey; though he does not understand, he reads and ponders; when explanation is offered. he is quick to welcome it. Calvin's practical comment is good, that in reading the Scriptures we must accept readily whatever is plain, and whatever things are hid from us, we must pass them over and wait for light. To which I add, God will send light to the diligent and desirous student.—Abbott.

"He was led as a sheep to the slaughter." The essential truth taught here by the figures of the sheep and lamb, is the quiet non-resistance with which Christ submitted to all the indignity put upon him. The prophecy is fulfilled by his refusal to resist or allow resistance of the officers who came to arrest him (Matt. 26: 52, 53) by his patience under the indignity inflicted on him by the servants of the high-priest (Matt. 26: 67, 68) and the soldiers of Pilate (Matt. 27: 27–31), and by hts silence before Pilate (Matt. 27: 12–14) and before Herod (Luke 23: 9). But the context in Isaiah clearly indicates that there is also implied the truth that the Messiah should fiulfil by his own death the type afforded by the slaying of sheep as sacrifices under the Old Testament dispensation. The chapter from which it is taken contains no less than 11 distinct refcrences to the vicarious character of Christ's sufferings.—Abbott.

"Who shall declare his generation?" Cloag, Hackett, Meyer, Robinson, Alford. understand this as equivalent to, Who can describe his contemporaries? Their wickedness is so great, it is beyond works to express. Schaff renders it as follows: "But though so lowly, so mean, so poor, was his semblance on earth, who shall declare his generation? It is ineffable! for he is the eternal Son of God, begotton from everlasting of the Father." His generation cannot be declared, for (his divine nature is incomprehensible. It is eternal. (2) His human nature as conceived by the Holy Ghost is beyond the reach of man to declare. (3) His spiritual generation, the multitude of the faithful, in number as the sands of the sea shore, are known only to God.—W. Denton.

"The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip." These words clearly relate a supernatural disappearance of Philip. We possess instances of a similar miraculous rapture, in the history of Elijah (1 Kings 18: 12; 2 Kings 2: 11). The Greek word, translated "caught away," is the same as that employed by St. Paul, where he speaks of his "rapture" into the third heaven and into Paradise,—"caught up to the third heaven."—Schaff.

"Was found at Azotus," better known as Ashdod (Josh. 11: 22; 1 Sam. 5: 3; Neh. 13: 23; 1 Macc. 4: 15: 10: 77, 84). It was about 60 miles west from Jerusalem, nearly midway between Gaza and Joppa (10 miles north-east of Gaza), not actually on the sea-shore, of great importance by reason of its position on the military route between Syria and Egypt, the capital of one of the five states of the Philistines, and the chief seat of the worship of Dagon.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

OUR POLITICAL METROPOLIS.

The Capital—Its Secret Orders—Churches Outrun and Running Out—The Clergy—The Lodges, History, Nature and Doom.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 14.
No. 215 4½ St., N. W.

"Metropolis" (meter polis, mother city) originally meant a national capital, as London, Paris or Madrid; the name is now applied to chief cities.

Our political metropolis has now a population of over 150,000. It has added one-third of the number since I was here in 1848; but it has trebled its advantages as a place of residence. It used to be sneeringly called, "the city of magnificent distances and mud." Its nice street cars have cut down distance, and its concrete pavements annihilated the mud. Its Potomac water is as salubrious as that of the great clear lakes, and in cool weather as pleasant. Its markets are magnificent. Chicago has no market, but the food of its thousands is dumped on sidewalks; but Chicago people are taxed to help build markets here in Washington, and its magnificent buildings are national, itself national. So I hope and intend to give some accurate sketches of this political heart and force-pump of our great and mighty nation, which is becoming the heart and forcing-pump of the nations of the earth. The United States is not old enough, has too sparse a population, and too few of the desperate classes, to give preponderance to open Communism, Socialism or Nihilism. Let us "wonder boldly" on the secret forces which are in play here.

There are given in Boyd's Washington Directory for 1883, secret local lodges, councils, etc., of all names and sorts, including nine Grand Army posts, numbering 247; churches, including synagogues, 188; excess of secret religious bodies over the open, 59.

THE RELATIVE ATTENDANCE

on the secret and open bodies adds gloom to the picture. I have attended three temperance meetings, all three in buildings owned by Masons and Odd-fellows, and they were all largely attended. The meeting in Odd-fellows Hall on Sabbath evening must have been attended by a thousand to twelve hundred people. I was asked to open the meeting with prayer, and did so. The Temperance Club which meets there secretes its secrecy so effectually that the Anti-masonic friend who took me there, did not know they had a secret interior organization, with obligation, signs and grips, till he learned it from the Directory, and another friend who had been solicited to join. So near did I come to be initiated without knowing it.

I have attended three Presbyterian meetings here. The Odd fellows Hall congregation contained more than double the attendance at the whole three! The pastor of one of them, a fine appearing young man, complained bitterly that, "We cannot get the people out to our churches." Dr. Bartlett's church on New York avenue, is said to be an exception. At the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in reports from different fields of labor, the complaint was made, "The young women can be enlisted in the cause of temperance; the young men cannot." The Woman's Christian Union here is strictly open, and decidedly Christian, ably and well conducted. But they meet on Sabbath afternoons in the Masonic Temple where their husbands, brothers and sons have been stripped, sworn and swindled into the lodge! This explains the difficulty in enlisting the young men!

As a rule the lodges here have drawn the ministers into their nets; and once in, the less they have to do with the lodge, except to act as advertisements on public occasions, the better the lodges like it; and sensible and sincere young men who join the order to get or keep their places (for as a clerk told me yesterday, everything is run by it, from the President down) sensible men, once in, loathe the lodge; despise Masonic religion; and pity Masonic ministers, if they are good men, as some of them are. But if they love Christ, their clergymen never read Masonic books, and have just as little to do with the lodge as they can, and not lose the favor of professing Christian Masons! Their condition is deplorable in the extreme. It is like that of a debauched girl before her seducer, who would give worlds to be out of the sieve of Satan which encloses her, one strand of which she has neither courage or strength to break. O that the look which subdued Peter might reclaim these ministers!

The cunning of these lodges is simply infernal. They have more hands than Briareus, more eyes than Argus, and more shapes than Proteus. As already said, they run the temperance cause here, and these godly and honorable women who hold meetings in their temples, where their tools of incantation are kept snug in closets out of sight, remind one of innocent children playing on the hole of the asp and the den of the cockatrice. Isa. 11: 8. But there is comfort even in this, for it is a predicted sign of Christ's coming. So I have seen a cluster of birds, hovering together in a wood, and their plumage was fair and their notes sweet and plaintive, but a huge black snake was hid under the brush below them!

The churches here seem unable to escape the lodge-sorcery. One of the best of them, the church of the Puritans, whose pastor will not bow in its idolatries, was lately opened to "the Goodwill Commandery of the Order of the Golden Cross!" It has secret grips for temperance, secret degrees for Protestants, and a secret oath and intimidation for a "Grand Army" which is not an army, as if soldiers who fought well for their country need to be scared by mock terrors and sworn by sutlers and camp-followers, to be good to the widows of soldiers and true to the flag. Blinds! Mockerics! They are all lodge-drills to sworn subjection to unknown superiors. And, when good ministers of Christ are seduced, subjugated and sworn, the moment they cease to subserve the purposes of the lodge they are thrown aside;

> "——The broken tools which tyrants cast
> Away, by myriads when they pave their way
> With human hearts."

Now let us see what this secret lodge system, which has already out-run, and is running out the churches of Christ, is in itself: its nature, history and effects. The late President Garfield's minister here, is, as Garfield was, a Mason, and often, in my ministry, I have been invited to public discussions by the "Disciples." Now I know that the lodge, being secret, though constantly appealing to, and living upon the public, declines to defend itself before the public. Yet the following propositions, if they are not true can easily be shown to be false without a formal defense of the lodge, and I respectfully call the attention of Rev. Mr. Powers to these statements:

1. The 247 "Secret Societies" given in Boyd's Washington Directory, though diversified, are one system, and whoever joins one morally supports the whole.

2. They are all "secret" in contempt of Christ's example which we are commanded to follow. John 18: 20.

3. This secret lodge system, though called Masonry, is not Masonry, but a false system of religion professing to save men, originated at Appletree Tavern, Covent Garden, London, in 1717; enlarged into chapters and commanderies, etc., by French priests and atheists.

4. This secret lodge system was introduced into this country in 1733; and has worked steadily for the overthrow of American institutions. Aaron Burr and Benedict Arnold were Freemasons; Washington had virtually quit the lodge in disgust more than thirty years before his death.

5. Garfield and Jackson were Masons, but silent Masons and patriots.

6. Mr. Thurlow Weed's late letter proves that the lodge murdered Morgan by representative Masons, and sustained and shielded them by money and false swearing. The New York Sun said Mr. Weed's affidavit would convict the parties of murder if now alive.

7. The lodge is a pyramid, various at the bottom, but one at the top. It shams religion and temperance, but is hostile to both. Gen. Albert Pike, of this city, is the able head and representative of the system in this country. He is said, by his friends here, to be translating the Vedas, the first books of Brahminism, in Asia, where the people "have no rights which their rulers are bound to respect."

8. Mr. Ingersoll praises the Brahmin religion and makes no attack on the lodge. He evidently considers it as good as godless.

9. In 1828–32, the lodge fell in the North and became a Southern institution. The slavery war was planned in Southern lodge-rooms and organized by Freemasons. All the troubles and disturbances since the war, the Ku-klux, Golden Circle and White Leagues have proceeded from the lodge-rooms; and Northern Masons have cowered and screened the disturbers.

10. But the chief end of Masonry is anti-Christ. It rejects Christ in the lower degrees, and insults him in the higher. The Ohio Grand Lodge once endorsed the Bible. Other Grand Lodges protested and the Ohio lodge receded. (See Chase's Digest of Masonic Law.) The Missouri Grand Lodge has lately declared against popular government, and no other lodge protests.

11. Gov. A. H. Stephens of Georgia, lately deceased, a great and fearless man, said that the war meant the overthrow of popular government and the establishment of empire.

12. In a word, as shown by Prof. Robison and Abbe Barruel, the secret lodge system is in general and special antagonism to all religion and government but itself. As proved by Rev. Mr. Horton's book, it is "the Image of the Beast" (Rev. chapter 13.) The command of God is, "Come out of her my people that ye be not partakers of her sins; and receive not of her plagues." Masonic writers declare the lodge to be a continuation of the Greek mysteries, and they are; and Paul calls them "unfruitful works of darkness," and commands to disfellowship them; that is to disfellowship Freemasons. Eph. 5: 11.

13. These lodges with their altars, chaplains, prayers, burials, baptisms, oaths and rituals, claim none but a human source or "tradition," of which Christ says, they "shall be rooted up." Mat. 15: 13. These lodges, therefore, shall be rooted up, and their overthrow now approaches.

SATAN'S COLUMN'S MOVING.

The following is from the Washington Star of March 7th. I am not sure I understand it. It may be an attempt to outflank the N. C. A. It may be that Pike and Co. are availing themselves of the concern of the lodge at our coming to raise money and concentrate property in their hands; as Jeff Davis seized and cribbed Confederate gold, while the Confederate troops were unpaid and unfed, to enrich himself and provide for coming defeat. Certain it is that the Masons had buildings enough here without this new purchase. I saw the splendid property yesterday, on the street back of us, and but little way from the great building now occupied by the Pike's, with a blazing sign of Masonic "Headquarters." It is significant whatever it means.

THE RIVES HOUSE BOUGHT BY THE SCOTTISH RITE MASONS.—Albert Pike and Wm. M. Ireland, Grand Commander and Secretary General of the Supreme Council of the 33d degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, have purchased from Samuel E. Middleton for the Supreme Council the building erected some twelve years ago by Col. Wright Rives, at the corner of 3d and E streets northwest, for $17,000, and it will hereafter be "The House of the Temple" of the Supreme Council. The Supreme Council will at once erect a library building on that portion of the premises not covered by the main building.

To think of a library building for Masons, when all the books can be put into a small cupboard! A library for the lodge, whose rule is not to defend itself! What do they want with books! ! !

KNIGHTS OF HONOR AND ROYAL ARCANUM.—THE FLOOD RISING.

"And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood, to cause her (Christianity) to be carried away of the flood." Rev. 12: 15.

I last night conversed with a frank young lawyer who is a Mason and a Knight of Honor. He said the Knights of Honor has its headquarters in Louisville, Ky.; started since the war. "is essentially Southern; has no temperance clause; is simply a life insurance; pays the family from one to two thousand dollars, according to degrees taken, when a member dies: "The Royal Arcanum" sprung from the Knights of Honor; that agrees to pay as high as five thousand dollars.

"How often do they meet?" I asked.

"Once a week or fortnight."

"You have an oath?"

"Yes, an iron-clad oath."

"Your meetings must get dull without a ritual."

"Oh, we have a chaplain and a ritual!"

"You of course use the hoodwink?"

He smiled and hesitated, but replied, "Yes, I believe we do." All these societies are fashioned after the Masons.

He then asked me how high I had been in Masonry. I answered that I never was a Mason but was opposed to it. He seemed a little surprised and said, "Why you must have interested yourself in it, and endeavored to join?"

"No," I replied, "I never was black-balled."

He said there were already seventy or eighty thousand Knights of Honor. Thus I learned of this gentlemanly Christian lawyer, of two "orders" of which we know little. He said he believed the leading members were Masons.

J. B.

CHRISTIAN PROHIBITION.

The Lutheran Standard, whose opinions are usually worthy of greatest respect, is singularly at fault on the temperance question. An editorial, March 10, confesses that intemperance is "one of the greatest social evils of the age, dragging thousands every year into temporal and eternal death," yet places the great Lutheran church in practical opposition to the efforts to abate this monster iniquity. Its pastors see in prohibition "a conflict with the freedom of our Christian calling," but preach moral regeneration and growth in grace through the spirit and regard this a sufficient corrective; and so it is if the truth is faithfully applied. The grace of God is the only true remedy for this and every other tin; but the salve must be put on the sore. This practical application of God's truth is wherein many Lutheran pastors fearfully lack, we fear. If their church members were generally known to be opposers of this evil of intemperance it would be sufficient proof that their activity was equal to their knowledge.

The Standard also is mistaken in following the deceptive leadership of the Christian Union in proclaiming prohibition a failure and that the temperance advocates are making a change ef front. Nothing is farther from the truth, for nothing is more true that the only rational mode of dealing with a moral, social and political curse like intemperance is its utter eradication. It is utterly opposed to the work of Divine grace either in the individual or the community. It is in the catelogue with all other sin, mighty engine of the devil. The churches of Jesus Christ have nothing to do with it except to fight against it; to pray and labor that it may be wiped from the earth. They are, by profession at least, the most radical temperance societies. It may never be utrerly abolished, any more than lying, blasphemy or adultery, until the Lord Jesus shall destroy all these evil works by the brightness of his coming, but that does not affect the duty of every follower of Christ, nor does it warrant any Christian paper in helping evil men by joining their cry that "prohibition does not prohibit."

WILLIAM MORGAN'S DAUGHTER.

When siezed by the Masons in September, 1826, Captain Morgan had two children, a girl and boy, the latter being only an infant in the arms of his young and shrinking wife. The inquiry which naturally arose for these remaining members of the family with the revival of the lodge discussion, was hardly answered to the satisfaction of all. It was understood that Mrs. Morgan married again, and that one of the children was living in Oregon. Soon after the Batavia Convention, it was reported that the daughter, Lucinda Morgan Smith, died near Salem in that State.

Through the kindness of Miss Sarah K. Stevens of Batavia, we are permitted to print the following letter written by Capt. Smith, her husband, in reply to a letter of condolence sent him by Charles Betts, Esq., of Freeport. Illinois, a gentleman who was born in Batavia, and whose father, Robert P. Betts, was a participant in the exciting and fearful scenes of 1826, being one of the party who rescued Col. David C. Miller.

Miss Stevens knew the Morgan family well before it was broken up by the demon spirit of the lodge. The daughter she describes as a lively and beautiful child, with light golden hair, which fell curling upon her shoulders. Her eyes were large and full, and her features expressive though regular. Mrs. Morgan died while living with this daughter in Memphis, Tennessee.

Captain Smith's letter is dated from Mehama, Marion county, Oregon, Dec. 10, 1882, and reads thus:

Received yours of Nov. 27, and appreciate your sympathy, for my affliction is very great. Your questions I will answer. Firstly, my dear wife's maiden name was Lucinda Wesley Morgan, born in Batavia, N. Y., Aug. 28, 1824. Thomas Morgan, her brother, also born in Batavia in 1826, was two weeks old when his father, William Morgan, was abducted. He died near St. Louis in 1863. Their mother, Lucinda Morgan Harris, died at Memphis, Tenn., in 1856. Your family name I have heard my wife speak of often, but if you recollect her you must be old as well as myself. I have buried a large family of children, one only left of ten; but yet my greatest affliction is in the loss of my dear wife, a woman beloved by every one that knew her. Believe me, dear sir, your well wisher, D. B. Smith.

—President Blanchard left Washington on Saturday morning for a brief visit at Chambersburg, Pa. He returns to the capital this week.

—Secretary Stoddard spent last week in Indiana on business for the National Association. He has little time to write as he would wish for our readers, except while waiting for trains.

—Bro. Hinman arrived in this city Monday morning from Mansfield, Ohio, where he passed the Sabbath with with Bro. Clark. He visited Corry, Pa., and spoke on Thursday and Friday evenings in the United Brethren church. He left Washington on Tuesday morning. Bro. Hinman has now been absent from home seven months, having left Chicago after the meeting at Lake Bluff near this city on the 25th of August last.

—John F. Burrill, the defrauder of women and lodges, has been condemned by the court at Carlinville, this State, to an imprisonment of five years. This sentence he has probably earned; but it must be observed that, had his offense been against an outside party, there would have been little danger of his conviction.

—The Batavia Convention minutes is one of the finest appearing pamphlets yet issued in our reform work, and the contents are worthy the best work of this kind that could be afforded. The proceedings of the Convention, the addresses, the unveiling of the monument, the roll of delegates, in all 107 pages, make a choice collection, and the illustrations assist greatly in the general attractiveness of the work. These number but three, instead of four as we hoped. Every delegate enrolled should have one of these documents.

—This week a lesson prepared expressly for the Band of Hope in charge of Mrs. E. A. Cook of this city by a gifted lady in Massachusetts is published with the hope that it may be used for other children here and there throughout the country. The little Band whose first year was outlined in the Cynosure of Feb. 15th, has through the kindness of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union been provided with a large, pleasant room to meet in. A Christian friend accompanies the children's songs with instrumental music. A kind gentleman has added 137 volumes to the nineteen which composed the original library, and the average weekly attendance for the month ending March 9th has been over fifty persons. One new teacher and two assistant pupils are added to the corps of instructors. "And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." Mal. 4: 6.

The Colored Orders.—The versatility and genius of the African race seems to be most active in providing names for their numerous brotherhoods and sisterhoods. The following are given as a few samples, all of which are not probably secret societies:

Junior Rising Sons and Daughters of the Vineyard, Resolute Daughters of Joshua, Benevolent Sons of the Young Army Shining, First National Phenix Sisters, Young Ladies' Golden Harp of Amerioa, Daughters of the First Star of Jacob, Rising Sons and Daughters of the East, Loving Daughters of Paradise, Young Rising Sons of Ham, Sisters of the Lord's Delight Society, Heavenly-Called Laborers of the Vineyard, Originating Sons and Daughters of Business, Young Home Search Daughters of Love, Sweet Prospects of Paradise, I Hope to be Righteous Society, United Sons and Daughters of Rising Morning Star, Following Sons of Abraham, Benevolent Daughters of Weeping Mary Society, Female Followers of Mount Zion, Rising Daughters of Job, Peaceable Daughters of Bethlehem, Reformed Daughters of Love, Benevolent Sons of Love, Loving Sons and Daughters of Revelation, Benevolent Daughters of the First District, Daughters of the Golden Chariot, United Daughters of Liberty, United Sons of Abraham, Rising Sons of Elijah, Young National Daughters of Phenix, Young Daughters of the Ark of Shiloh, Sisters of Providence.

THE IRISH WITNESSES.

The Standard of this city having echoed the lodge-inspired objections of the daily press to the characted of the witnesses in the Dublin courts, Rev. E. W. Hicks, pastor of the Baptist church in Shabbona, Ill., replies ably thus in the Standard of the 1st inst.

"Your 'news editor' says, speaking of the Dublin murderers: 'The wretches who turned queen's evidence are as bad as any of the gang, and have added treachery to their other crimes.' As this probably voices the opinion of a great many people, may it not be well to look at it? The last part of the statement is hardly true. The crime of these men was murder; the telling of it was not a crime. Otherwise a government would itself be acting criminally in offering rewards for the detection of crime. It is not a crime to report a crime. But the informers are themselves as guilty as those they inform against. True, but their character does not make their act a crime. The act of aiding justice is right in itself, and not because of the character of those who aid.

"But those men had sworn to conceal the crime. True, but that oath was itself a crime. They did not do right. but did wrong, when they so promised, and wrong does not become right by continuing in it. To outrage justice by the commission of murder is a crime; to cheat justice by aiding to conceal the murder is another crime. Is not this so? Then if it be a crime to conceal an act, it certainly cannot also be a crime to reveal it. What a strange twisting of right and wrong this would involve us in! But did not these men commit perjury? They did not. The oath they took was illegal; not only because it had no legal administrator, but because it was to conceal possible crime, and was therefore morally wrong. And forsaking an illegal oath is not perjury. (See Webster note.) But they did not do it to aid justice, but to save themselves. True, and they thereby have no such claim on the goodwill of mankind as if they had truly repented, and abhorred their sin, but that lack of sincerity on their part does not constitute a crime. It is simply doing a just act with a wrong motive. Oaths and compacts are like other acts, legal or illegal, right or wrong. If illegal, it is legal to break them; if wrong, it is right to break them. The only Bible exception is, when the swearer himself, and no other, is perjured. Ps. 15. The Bible is clear on this. See Lev. 5:4. Also Prov. 6. 'Thou art snared with the words of thy mouth..... Do this now, my son, and deliver thyself.' And God's Word is our ever sure guide."

A FEARFUL RECORD.

Bro. M. A. Gault, of Blanchard, Iowa, has for several months been traveling among the churches of Kansas, Missouri and Iowa, holding conventions in favor of the National Reform Association and the Religious amendment to the National Constitution. He writes to the Ameaican Freeman of experiences that we grieve to reproduce:

"Everywhere as I visit cities and towns and converse with ministers and others on the subject of National Reform, I find them standing pale and trembling in the presence of the lodge.

"I have found ministers who are editing local papers and exchanging with Freeman, and while they loathe the lodge, yet they dare not quote from it, or publish against secretism, for it has such power, that for men dependent on the general public to oppose it would be equivolent to step down and out. A devoted minister in Kansas, who feels that the lodge is the greatest obstacle in his work, when he proposed to send for an anti-secret lecturer, was warned by a friend never to do so, or he never afterward would know an hours peace. Another minister had partially arranged for you to give some lectures in his town, but was obliged to give it up, when his wife besought him with tears not to thus imperil their lives and home.

"A minister in Kansas, who died recently, had taken an active part in an anti-secret convention in his town. His life was threatened on the train, and such serious trouble arose in his congregation on account of the agitation, that friends told me it had much to do in causing his death, as was evident from expressions he used in his unconscious moments before death. I know a minister who had to leave his charge because of the active part he took in this agitation, and now the last thing he wants to do is to announce an anti-secret lecture in his church.

"I have a ministerial brother who is publishing a local paper in a building so near a Masonic lodge that in the warm summer evenings when the wind blows aside the curtain, he and his family can sit at the window and look at the miserable victim in the lodge, kneeling on his bare knees at the altar hoodwinked and cable-towed, and so near naked that it would make a Hottentot blush to tell it, and they hear the worshipful master put him through the horrid oaths of the third degree. But it will be all this editors business is worth to publish this fact.

"Here in Blanchard the lodge controls nearly everything, because the friends of light are unorgnized and most of them turn pale when we speak of an anti-secret lecturer. I fear the time has not come yet for lectures here. God pity our country. And let us pray that God may open the eyes of Christians, and Christian ministers so that they will have courage to boldly confront this fearful despotism."

Easter Sunday is one of the institutions incorporated in the Catholic system from the Jewish. The Catholic system is a commingling of Jewish, Pagan and Christian rites. It is one of the evidences, among many, that following the lead of the Romish church and subordinately that of the Episcopal church, pure Protestant worship is being rapidly corrupted by the introduction of decorations and services supposed to be appropriate to the proper celebration of what is called Easter Sunday, as well as other occasions that have no more authority. The excuse for the special observance of a particular day as Easter Sunday, is that it commemorates the resurrection of the Saviour which took place during the observance of the Passover by the Jews. We have an institution of Divine appointment that properly commemorates the resurruction of Christ—the Christian Sabbath. Many of the rites introduced into the churches in the celebration of Easter Sunday are not only a corruption of Divine worship, but a desecration of the Christian Sabbath. The fact that many Presbyterian churches are falling into the custom of decorating and of special services on Easter Sunday, should open the eyes of every lover of the pure and simple worship of God to the tendency of these times. "Ye observe days and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain."—Christian Instructor.

In Lcesville lodge of Henry county, Mo., one night a few years ago, a Baptist minister who is a member of that lodge got up in a lodge meeting and begau to talk about the inconsistency of Masons professing to reverence the name of God, and at the same time being guilty of gross profanity. He had not proceeded far when the Worshipful Master, who was a regular and public violator of the third commandment, ordered the reverend gentleman down and gaveled the lodge up and abruptly dismissed it. After dismissing the lodge the Master remarked to the brethren that if any of them wanted to stay amd hear a lecture on profanity they were now at liberty to do so. An eye witness says they all of one accord absented themselves from the room. A very natural action, when we remember that profanity was the very thing that made them Masons—for every oath administered in the Masonic lodges is a vain use of the name of the great God who has said, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." It is surely not right for ministers of the gospel to bind themselves by a wicked oath to a power that enables an enemy of Christianity to make them desist from reproving sin. Brethren better get out of the synagogues of Satan and be Christ's free men agaiu.—Banner of Truth.

THE LOST TALENT.

BY MRS. L. R. DEWOLF.

I wrapped my talent with daintiest eare,
In napkin of linen, both costly and rare,
And eovered my treasure with blossomings fair,
To wait for the Master's call.

My brother took his on the very day
It was trusted to him, and traded away
What the dear Lord lent—"It was right," they say,
For it brought a return for all.

I was unwilling thus to see
My treasure go forth and the reeompense be
The Lord's, and not mine, for I greedily
Hoarded away my all.

But when He ealled us aecount to give
For the talents He loaned but did not give
My heart misgave me, I searce eould live
So I told to him all.

"Take from him the talent he would not use,
And give it to him who knew better to ehoose,
For the talent we hide is the one that we lose,"
Said the Master of all.

THE DEACON AND HIS SONS.

The falsity of the current proverb concerning the profligacy of the children of ministers and deacons, has been abundantly shown, by statistics which conclusively demonstrate its utter groundlessness. Of course when a black sheep appears in such flocks, it is at once noticed, and the delinquences of the children of a good man are proclaimed and commented upon, where similar conduct in other parties would be excused or concealed. It must, however, be remembered that children do not go wrong through an excess of sound religious training; and that the fact that a man fills a pulpit or has attained to the dignity of deacon, by no means proves his fitness for either position. One of the leading infidels of the nineteenth century, was the son of a minister, whose ill-governed household, presided over by several wives in succession, proved a fit nursery for a dissolute and drunken blasphemer.

Various causes operate to ruin the families even of good and respected men. The following instance, related by Mr. Moody, gives a slight idea of some of the circumstances which may contribute to such a result:

"I was the guest of a Christian man, whose children were turning out badly. One night, after a meeting, a conversation took place about them; and with tears trickling down his cheeks he said:

"'My four oldest sons have turned out badly, and I am afraid that the others are following their example.'

"I said: 'Let us look into this thing. Tell me about your family. How many nights do you go to church?'

"'On Sunday night.'

"'What about Monday?'

"'Oh, I am a deacon, and I am at the church on Monday night.'

"'What about Tuesday night?'

"'I am connected with the city government, and I have to attend a committee-meeting of the council.'

"'Wednesday night is prayer-meeting, and you go to church?'

"'Yes.'

"'That is how you occupy the four nights. What do you do the other three?'

"'I belong to the Masons. I hold a high office in the lodge and have to be there.'

"'That accounts for five nights. Of course as you hold a high social position, you are often out at dinner-parties and committees. You go out, perhaps, one night each week to dinners and committees.'

"'It will average all that.'

"'Then,' I said, 'there is one more night, that is, Saturday night; what do you then?'

"'Oh, I am superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and I lock myself in my room and prepare the lesson for my Bible class on the following day.'

"'You don't let your children into your room then, do you?'

"'No, certainly not.'

"'Then your children have to get off early in the morning, and they are away from family prayer?'

"'Yes; some get off early, and others rise late, and they are not present at morning worship.'

"'And you have to get away as early as possible to your business.'

"'Yes; as soon as I get through worship I am off.'

"'What time do you take dinner?'

"'At six o'clock.'

"'You see your children at six. But you are not always prompt. I suppose half-past six, is it not?'

"'Yes, that is about the average.'

"'And your meetings begin about half-past seven; so that you have but little time with your children.'

"And at that very time he was trying to be mayor of the city. He dropped his head, and said that he had not thought of it in that light before. There are many just like that. They are giving their time to public affairs, to the utter neglect of their children and of their homes."—The Christian.

A LAMP UNTO OUR FEET.

The word of God is called "a lamp unto our feet," which would imply that it lights up the pathway of obedience for us. It is not said that it is a light unto our head, throwing its beams out into the outlying realms of science and mystery, to illumine them for us. It is told that in Oriental cities pedestrians could often be seen threading the dark streets with a little lamp fastened to their sandals, which kept twinkling as they moved along, like a terrestrial star. If the Psalmist had this idea in mind how beautiful is the imagery! Pilgrims of the night, while our Lord is absent from us for a season, we have the Bible, the sure word of prophecy, which Peter calls a "light shining in a dark place," "until the day dawn, and the day-star arose in our hearts." This is a lampo t our feet. It lights up each step of duty; each advance in obedience indicates for us; but it does not throw its beams forward into the future, or out into all the regions of surrounding mystery, for it is a foot-lamp of obedience, and not a head-light of universal knowledge. Let it shine upon our pathway, and we shall see each successive step in the way of life distinctly revealed—repentance, faith, confession, justification, growth in grace, sanctification and redemption. Take one step, and the next will be plain before us. So many persons halt at the entrance of the way of life, and refuse to advance because they cannot understand the mystery of the Trinity, the mystery of the Incarnation, the mystery of regeneration, and the mystery of eternal life. But such knowledge is utterly impossible. We can only enter into a full understanding of God's mind through successive stages of obedience. "If any man shall do the will of God he shall know of the doctrine." Every duty done opens for us a door to wider knowledge and further service. I can only enter one attainment through the portals of another and previous attainment. The lamp of obedience just shows us each next step in advance and no more. The Christian life is like the locks of a canal; only till you have passed through one door, and had it shut behind you, will another door open to you. Until you have believed on Christ, and confessed' and so closed the gates of irresolution behind you, you cannot know him in any of the deeper relations of his will. We have heard even Christians asking for proof of divine promises before they would believe them. "The prayer of faith shall save the sick," is a plain promise. "Give me an undoubted instance of healing in answer to prayer, and we will believe," says the cautious theologian. Christ's word is, "Said I not unto thee that if thou wouldst believe, thou shouldst see the glory of God?"—A. J. Gordon in the Watchword.

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST.

It is said of the holy Fletcher of Madely, that during his long illness, when laid aside from pastoral work, he took every seasonable opportunity to urge upon his friends the higher blessings which are included in the gift of the Spirit. When he was able to converse, his favorite subject was, the promise of the Father in the gift of the Holy Ghost, including that rich peculiar blessing of union with the Father and the Son mentioned in that prayer of our Lord which is recorded in the seventeenth chapter of St. John. Many were the sparks of living fire which occasionally darted forth on this beloved theme.

"We must not be content," said he, "to be only cleansed from sin; we must be filled with the Spirit!"

One asking him, "What is to be experienced in the full accomplishment of the promise?" "Oh," said he, "what shall I say? All the sweetness of the drawings of the Father, all the love of the Son, all the rich effusions of peace and joy in the Holy Ghost; more than can ever be expressed or comprehended here. To attain it the Spirit maketh intercession in the soul."—Times of Refreshing.

MEN'S RIGHTS.

No man knows the value of money who has never been compelled to earn it by his own hard labor.

No man is loyal to Christ who neglects duty because he thinks he can be saved without doing it.

No man is honest who buys what he has no assurance that he can pay for.

No man is fit to preach who absents himself from church when his salary ceases.

No man is worthy of confidence who is pledged to be partial to others.

No man has a right to be generous with other people's property.

No man sells rum for the good of the community.

No man has a right, by smoking or drinking, to waste or endanger life or property.

No man has a right to change the Word of God to suit his own purposes.

No man has a right to spend his time in idleness, or injure himself or others.—N. Summerbell.

Many persons are sceptical as to the advantages of the Sabbath in a secular aspect. Here is a fact from Belfast, Ireland. The omnibus company resolved to discontinue running their vehicles on the Sabbath. They did this, and the result was that they saved their shareholders 12½ per cent. in the outlay of money for horses during the first twelve months. The Divine law has reference to horses as well as men, and experience shows that the need of one day's rest in seven is necessary for the beast of burden. How much greater therefore is the need for man, whose physical and mental energies render the day of rest doubly necessary; yea, imperative.—Baptist Weekly.

THE HOME KEEPER.

REARING AND TRAINING OF CHILDREN.

Never hamper and torment children with clothes that are "too nice" to be anything but wretched in. They may be taught reasonable care in regard to soiling their clothes, but to see a child in a constant spiritual straight-jacket, for fear the mud-cakes, or the game of marbles, or the jolly romp will soil the knees, or "muss" the apron, or disarrange the hair, is an indicaton of idiotic parentage. There are cheap, light, half-wool fabrics, sold in gray and in brown plaids and stripes, that—piped with bright colors—make up into excellent dresses or blouses for little folks, being just as cool as print and gingham, requiring no starching when washed, and not soiling or rumpling easily.
